blank consent. See BLANK CONSENT.

express consent. (16c) Consent that is clearly and unmistakably stated.

implied consent. (17c) 1. Consent inferred from one's conduct rather than from one's direct expression. — Also termed implied permission. 2. Consent imputed as a result of circumstances that arise, as when a surgeon removing a gall bladder discovers and removes colon cancer.

informed consent. (1938) 1. A person's agreement to allow something to happen, made with full knowledge of the risks involved and the alternatives. • For the legal profession, informed consent is defined in Model Rule of Professional Conduct 1.0(e). 2. A patient's knowing choice about a medical treatment or procedure, made after a physician or other healthcare provider discloses whatever information a reasonably prudent provider in the medical community would give to a patient regarding the risks involved in the proposed treatment or procedure. — Also termed knowing consent. [Cases: Health ⇨906.]

parental consent. Consent given on a minor's behalf by at least one parent, or a legal guardian, or by another person properly authorized to act for the minor, for the minor to engage in or submit to a specified activity.

voluntary consent. Consent that is given freely and that has not been coerced.

2. Parliamentary law. ADOPTION (5). — consent, vb. — consensual, adj.

general consent. 1. Adoption without objection, regardless of whether every voter affirmatively approves. 2. See unanimous consent (1).

unanimous consent. 1. Adoption with every voter's approval. 2. See general consent (1). • The terms "general consent" and "unanimous consent" have distinct but interchangeable meanings. Some parliamentary manuals treat them as synonymous; others distinguish them; and still others distinguish them, but in exactly the opposite way.

"'Unanimous consent' does not necessarily imply that every member is in favor of the proposed action; it may only mean that the opposition, feeling that it is useless to oppose or discuss the matter, simply acquiesces." Henry M. Robert, Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised § 4, at 52 (10th ed. 2001).

consent calendar. 1. Family law. A schedule of informal hearings involving a child, usu. arranged when it appears that the child's best interests will be served if the case is heard informally. • The child and all interested parties must first consent before the case goes on the consent calendar. [Cases: Infants ⇨203.] 2. For the parliamentary sense relating to a deliberative assembly's business, see consent calendar under CALENDAR (4).

consent dividend. See DIVIDEND.

consentient, adj. See CONSENSUAL.

consent judgment. See agreed judgment under JUDGMENT.

consent jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

consent order. See consent decree under DECREE.

consent search. See SEARCH.

consent to be sued. (1872) Agreement in advance to be sued in a particular forum. See COGNOVIT CLAUSE. [Cases: Corporations ⇨662; States ⇨191; United States ⇨125.]

consent to notice. (1996) A provision stating that notice required by a document may be given beforehand or to a designated person.

consequential contempt. See CONTEMPT.

consequential damages. See DAMAGES.

consequential economic loss. See ECONOMIC LOSS.

consequential injury. See consequential loss under LOSS.

consequentialism. Ethics. An ethical theory that judges the rightness or wrongness of actions according to their consequences. • One of the best-known types of consequentialism is utilitarianism. See UTILITARIANISM. Cf. VIRTUE ETHICS.

consequential loss. See LOSS.

conservation. Environmental law. The supervision, management, and maintenance of natural resources; the protection, improvement, and use of natural resources in a way that ensures the highest social as well as economic benefits. [Cases: Environmental Law ⇨31–51.]

conservation restriction. See conservation easement under EASEMENT.

conservator (kən-sər-və-tər or kən-sər-vay-tər), n. (15c) A guardian, protector, or preserver. • Conservator is the modern equivalent of the common-law guardian. Judicial appointment and supervision are still required, but a conservator has far more flexible authority than a guardian, including the same investment powers that a trustee enjoys. The Uniform Probate Code uses the term conservator, and Article 5 is representative of modern conservatorship laws. [Cases: Guardian and Ward ⇨1, 10.] — conservatorship, n.

managing conservator. (1974) 1. A person appointed by a court to manage the estate or affairs of someone who is legally incapable of doing so; GUARDIAN (1). [Cases: Guardian and Ward ⇨10.] 2. In the child-custody laws of some states, the parent who has primary custody of a child, with the right to establish the child's primary domicile. See CUSTODY. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨28.]

conserve, vb. 1. To take care of; to care for. 2. To protect from change, destruction, or depletion. 3. To reduce or minimize the use of.

consideration, n. (16c) 1. Something (such as an act, a forbearance, or a return promise) bargained for and received by a promisor from a promisee; that which motivates a person to do something, esp. to engage in a legal act. • Consideration, or a substitute such as promissory estoppel, is necessary for an agreement to be enforceable. See Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 81 (1979). [Cases: Contracts ⇨49.]

"A 'consideration' has been explained to be 'any act of the plaintiff from which the defendant, or a stranger, derives a benefit or advantage, or any labour, detriment, or inconvenience sustained by the plaintiff, however small the detriment or inconvenience may be, if such act is performed, or inconvenience suffered by the plaintiff with the assent, express or implied, of the defendant, or, in the language of pleading, at the special instance and request of the defendant.'" Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 286 (13th ed. 1924).

"A consideration in its widest sense is the reason, motive, or inducement, by which a man is moved to bind himself by an agreement. It is not for nothing that he consents to impose an obligation upon himself, or to abandon or transfer a right. It is in consideration of such and such a fact that he agrees to bear new burdens or to forgo the benefits which the law already allows him." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 359 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"The word 'consideration' has been around for a long time, so it is tempting to think we have had a theory of consideration for a long time. In fact until the nineteenth century the word never acquired any particular meaning or stood for any theory." Grant Gilmore, The Death of Contract 18 (1974).

"In the late fifteenth and early sixteenth centuries the word 'consideration' was very familiar to lawyers, and although it had not yet acquired a special legal meaning (and indeed was not to do so during the period under discussion) it had already begun to develop legal associations. Most commonly it was used in statutes. . . . In the statutes of Henry VI it became quite common for the draftsman, after he had rehearsed the circumstances to introduce the enacting part with a clause in the following (or similar) form: 'The King, considering the premisses, of the Assent and Request aforesaid, hath ordained and established' In the course of time the matters which were considered, and to which consideration was given, came themselves to be called 'the considerations.' [By the late 15th century] the considerations were the matters considered; they were the factors which Parliament or the King was supposed to have had in mind in legislating, and which moved or motivated the enactment. Loosely the word could be treated as synonymous with 'cause,' and both in statutes and elsewhere causes and considerations were often mentioned in the same breath. But 'cause' does not mean exactly the same thing as 'consideration'; it lacks the suggestion of what was in the mind, what was considered, what motivated." A.W.B. Simpson, Legal Theory and Legal History 332 (1987).

adequate consideration. (17c) Consideration that is fair and reasonable under the circumstances of the agreement. Cf. sufficient consideration. [Cases: Contracts ⇨53, 54.]

"It is helpful to observe precision in use of vocabulary when analyzing consideration issues. Distinguish carefully between 'adequate' consideration and 'sufficient' consideration. 'Adequacy' refers to whether there was a fair bargain involving an exchange of equal values. 'Sufficiency' refers to whether the consideration is legally sufficient to enforce a promise, and this requires only that there be some legal detriment incurred as a bargained exchange for the other party's promise." Claude Rohwer & Gordon D. Schaber, Contracts in a Nutshell 83 (4th ed. 1997).

"Although courts have not lost the habit of speaking of an 'adequate,' a 'sufficient,' or a 'valuable' consideration, the bargain test as epitomized in the Restatement imposes no such additional requirement." E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 2.11, at 69–70 (3d ed. 1999).

and other good and valuable consideration. See other consideration.

concurrent consideration. Consideration arising at the same time as other consideration, or where the promises are simultaneous. [Cases: Contracts ⇨56.]

continuing consideration. An act or performance extending over time.

due consideration. See sufficient consideration.

executed consideration. A consideration that has been wholly given; past consideration as opposed to present or future consideration. [Cases: Contracts ↷78.]

executory consideration (eg-zek-yə-tor-ee). A consideration that is to be given only after formation of the contract; present or future consideration as opposed to past consideration.

express consideration. Consideration that is specifically stated in an instrument.

fair consideration. (18c) 1. Consideration that is roughly equal in value to the thing being exchanged; consideration given for property or for an obligation in either of the following circumstances: (1) when given in good faith as an exchange for the property or obligation, or (2) when the property or obligation is received in good faith to secure a present advance or prior debt in an amount not disproportionately small as compared with the value of the property or obligation obtained. — Also termed fair and valuable consideration. 2. Consideration that is honest, reasonable, and free from suspicion, but not strictly adequate or full.

future consideration. (1979) 1. Consideration to be given in the future; esp., consideration that is due after the other party's performance. 2. Consideration that is a series of performances, some of which will occur after the other party's performance. 3. Consideration the specifics of which have not been agreed on between the parties. Cf. past consideration.

good and valuable consideration. See valuable consideration.

good consideration. (18c) 1. Consideration based on natural love or affection or on moral duty <good consideration, being based purely on affection, does not amount to valuable consideration>. • Such consideration is usu. not valid for the enforcement of a contract. — Also termed meritorious consideration; moral consideration. [Cases: Contracts ↷76, 77.]

"A good consideration is that of blood, or the natural love and affection which a person has to his children, or any of his relatives. . . . A good consideration is not of itself sufficient to support a promise, any more than the moral obligation which arises from a man's passing his word; neither will the two together make a binding contract; thus a promise by a father to make a gift to his child will not be enforced against him. The consideration of natural love and affection is indeed good for so little in law, that it is not easy to see why it should be called a good consideration. . . ." Joshua Williams, Principles of the Law of Personal Property 95-96 (11th ed. 1881).

"Stated simply, good or meritorious consideration is nothing more than motive or moral obligation." 3 Richard A. Lord, Williston on Contracts § 7:16, at 325-26 (4th ed. 1992).

2. Loosely, valuable consideration; consideration that is adequate to support the bargained-for exchange between the parties <his agreement to pay the offering price was good consideration for the sale>. [Cases: Contracts ↷49.]

gratuitous consideration (grə-t[y]oo-i-təs). (1880) Consideration that, not being founded on any detriment to the party who gives it, will not support a contract; a performance for which a party was already obligated.

grossly inadequate consideration. Consideration whose value is so much less than the fair value of the object acquired that it may not support finding that the transaction is a valid exchange. • Depending on the surrounding circumstances, the transaction may actually be fraud, a gift, or something else other than a sale and purchase. [Cases: Contracts ↷53.]

illegal consideration. (18c) Consideration that is contrary to the law or public policy, or prejudicial to the public interest. • Such consideration does not support a contract. [Cases: Contracts ↷103.]

immoral consideration. A consideration that so offends societal norms as to be invalid. • A contract supported by immoral consideration is usu. voidable or unenforceable. — Also termed turpis causa. [Cases: Contracts ↷112.]

implied consideration. (18c) Consideration that is inferred by law from the parties' actions.

impossible consideration. Consideration stemming from a promise or performance that cannot be fulfilled. [Cases: Contracts ↷80.]

inadequate consideration. (18c) Consideration that is not fair or reasonable under the circumstances of the agreement. Cf. adequate consideration. [Cases: Contracts ↷53, 54.]

invented consideration. (1977) Fictional consideration created by a court to prevent the invalidation of a contract that lacks consideration.

legal consideration. See VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

legally sufficient consideration. See sufficient consideration.

meritorious consideration. See good consideration.

nominal consideration. (18c) Consideration that is so insignificant as to bear no relationship to the value of what is being exchanged (e.g., $10 for a piece of real estate). • Such consideration can be valid, since courts do not ordinarily examine the adequacy of consideration (although they do often inquire into such issues as fraud and duress). — Also termed peppercorn. [Cases: Contracts ↷53, 54.]

"Offers made in consideration of one dollar paid or promised are often irrevocable. . . . The irrevocability of an offer may be worth much or little to the offeree, and the courts do not ordinarily inquire into the adequacy of the consideration bargained for. Hence a comparatively small payment may furnish consideration for the irrevocability of an offer proposing a transaction involving much larger sums. But gross disproportion between the payment and the value of the option commonly indicates that the payment was not in fact bargained for but was a mere formality or pretense. In such a case there is no consideration. . . . Nevertheless, such a nominal consideration is regularly held sufficient to support a short-time option proposing an exchange on fair terms. The fact that the option is an appropriate preliminary step in the conclusion of a socially useful transaction provides a sufficient substantive basis for enforcement, and a signed writing taking a form appropriate to a bargain satisfies the desiderata of form. In the absence of statute, however, the bargaining form is essential: a payment of one dollar by each party to the other is so obviously not a bargaining transaction that it does not provide even the form of an exchange." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 87 cmt. b (1979).

other consideration. (18c) Additional things of value to be provided under the terms of a contract, usu. unspecified in the contract, deed, or bill of sale, because they are too numerous to conveniently list, or to avoid public knowledge of the total amount of consideration. — Also termed other good and valuable consideration.

past consideration. (18c) An act done or a promise given by a promisee before making a promise sought to be enforced. • Past consideration is not consideration for the new promise because it has not been given in exchange for this promise (although exceptions exist for new promises to pay debts barred by limitations or debts discharged in bankruptcy). See PREEXISTING-DUTY RULE. Cf. future consideration. [Cases: Contracts ⇨79.]

"A past consideration is, in effect, no consideration at all; that is to say, it confers no benefit on the promisor, and involves no detriment to the promisee in respect of his promise. It is some act or forbearance in time past by which a man has benefited without thereby incurring any legal liability." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 149 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"'Past Consideration.' The quotation marks suggest that there is something wrong with this phrase. Past consideration, or something given, done, or suffered in the past which purportedly supports a subsequent promise, is no consideration. If a benefit has been conferred upon the promisor or if the promisee has suffered a detriment in the past and there is a subsequent promise to pay therefor, there is no bargain for such past value. Therefore, it cannot constitute consideration." John Edward Murray Jr., Cases and Materials on Contracts 427 (2d ed. 1976).

sufficient consideration. (17c) Enough consideration as a matter of law to support a contract. — Also termed due consideration; legally sufficient consideration. Cf. adequate consideration. [Cases: Contracts ⇨54.]

valuable consideration. (17c) Consideration that is valid under the law; consideration that either confers a pecuniarily measurable benefit on one party or imposes a pecuniarily measurable detriment on the other. — Also termed good and valuable consideration; legal consideration. [Cases: Contracts ⇨49.]

"By a valuable consideration is meant something of value given or promised by one party in exchange for the promise of the other. . . . The thing thus given by way of consideration must be of some value. That is to say, it must be material to the interests of one or the other or both of the parties. It must either involve some gain or benefit to the promisor by way of recompense for the burden of his promise, or it must involve some loss or disadvantage to the promisee for which the benefit of the promise is a recompense." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 360 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

2. Parliamentary law. The process by which a deliberative assembly disposes of a motion; DELIBERATION. • Consideration begins with a member making a motion and the chair stating the question on the motion; it ends with the chair putting the question on the motion (or on a subsidiary motion that disposes of the first motion). It also includes debate and may also include (among other things) amendment and referral to a committee.

consideration seriatim. Consideration serially, whereby a deliberative assembly considers a long or complex motion in a series of readily divisible parts before voting on the entire motion. — Also termed consideration by paragraph (in which case a "paragraph" means not a literary paragraph but any readily divisible part of a motion, which may include more than one literary paragraph); serial consideration.

"When a proposition, motion or resolution has many parts (paragraphs, sections, or clauses), or many articles (as a set of bylaws which is up for revision or amendment), it is best and most prudent that no vote be taken on each separate part. Instead, a single vote covering all its parts should be taken after each of them has been duly considered, amended, and perfected. Seriatim (Lat.) literally means 'serially,' and when applied to several or more parts of a parliamentary proposal or question it means consideration paragraph by paragraph or part by part.

"Hence, under the doctrine of consideration by paragraph, or seriatim, each part is discussed and may be amended and perfected to suit; then, without putting it to a vote for final adoption, the next part or paragraph is similarly open to discussion and amendment, but is not voted on for final adoption yet; and, in like manner, each additional part is perfected in turn until all the parts of a proposal have been considered." George Demeter, Demeter's Manual of Parliamentary Law and Procedure 146 (1969).

informal consideration. Consideration without limit on how often a member may speak to the same question. • Informal consideration is substantially equivalent to consideration in committee of the whole or quasi committee of the whole, without the fiction of the assembly resolving itself into a committee. See committee of the whole under COMMITTEE.

serial consideration. See consideration seriatim.

3. Hist. A court's judgment. — Also termed (in Roman law) consideratio.

consideration, failure of. See FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

consideration, want of. See WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

consideratum est per curiam (kən-sid-ə-ray-təm est pər kyoor-ee-əm). [Latin] Hist. It is considered by the court. • This was the formal language preceding the judgment of a common-law court. — Sometimes shortened to consideratum est. Cf. IDEO CONSIDERATUM EST.

"A judgment is the decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice, as the result of proceedings instituted therein for the redress of an injury. The language of the judgment is not, therefore, that 'it is decreed,' or 'resolved,' by the court, but that 'it is considered by the court,' consideratum est per curiam, that the plaintiff recover his debt, etc. In the early writers, considerare, consideratio always means the judgment of a court." 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier's Law Dictionary 619 (8th ed. 1914).

consign (kən-sɪn), vb. (16c) 1. To transfer to another's custody or charge. 2. To give (goods) to a carrier for delivery to a designated recipient. 3. To give (merchandise or the like) to another to sell, usu. with the understanding that the seller will pay the owner for the goods from the proceeds. [Cases: Factors ↷5.]

consignation (kən-sɪg-nay-shən), n. 1. A debtor's delivery of money to an authorized third party after the creditor refuses to accept the payment. • Unlike a tender, a valid consignation discharges the debtor. Cf. TENDER (1). 2. CONSIGNMENT (1).

consignor (kən-sɪg-nə-tor), n. A person authorized to accept delivery of money from a debtor if a creditor refuses to accept it. See CONSIGNATION.

consignee (kən-sɪ-nee or kən-). (18c) One to whom goods are consigned. Cf. CONSIGNOR.

consignment (kən-sɪn-mənt). (17c) 1. The act of consigning goods for custody or sale. — Also termed (archaically) consignation. [Cases: Factors ↷5.] 2. A quantity of goods delivered by this act, esp. in a single shipment. 3. Under the UCC, a transaction in which a person delivers goods to a merchant for the purpose of sale, and (1) the merchant deals in goods of that kind under a name other than the name of the person making delivery, is not an auctioneer, and is not generally known by its creditor to be substantially engaged in selling others' goods, (2) with respect to each delivery, the aggregate value of the goods is $1,000 or more at the time of delivery, (3) the goods are not consumer goods immediately before delivery, and (4) the transaction does not create a security interest that secures an obligation. UCC § 9-102(a)(20). 4. See bailment for sale under BAILMENT.

consignor (kən-sɪ-nər or kən-sɪ-nor). (18c) One who dispatches goods to another on consignment. Cf. CONSIGNEE.

consiliarius (kən-sil-ee-air-ee-əs), n. [fr. Latin consilium "advice"] 1. Roman law. A person who advises a magistrate; one who sits with the judge and assists in deciding cases. See CONCILIUM (1). 2. Hist. A counselor learned in law. See APOCRISARIUS.

consimili casu. See CASU CONSIMILI.

consistorial court. See CONSISTORY COURT.

consistorium (kən-sis-tor-ee-əm), n. [Latin] Roman law. In the later Empire, the emperor's privy council that functioned both as a general council of state and as a supreme court of law.

consistory court (kən-sis-tər-ee). Eccles. law. In England, a diocesan court exercising jurisdiction over the clergy and church property, such as a cemetery, and other ecclesiastical matters. • Consistory courts are presided over by the bishop's chancellor or the chancellor's commissary. — Also termed consistorial court. Cf. BISHOP'S COURT.

consobrini (kən-sə-brɪ-nɪ), n. pl. [Latin] Roman law. First cousins; children of brothers and sisters, or, more precisely, of two sisters.

consol (kən-sol or kən-sol). See annuity bond under BOND (3).

Consolato del Mare (kawn-soh-lah-toh del mah-ray). [Italian "consulate of the sea"] Hist. Maritime law. An influential collection of European maritime customs, referred to by commercial judges (consuls) in ports of the kingdom of Aragon and other Mediterranean maritime towns. • The Consolato del Mare was compiled in the 14th century and soon became one of the leading maritime codes of Europe. It is widely believed to be a Spanish work, but some historians suggest its origin is actually Italian. — Also written Consolat de Mar.

consolidate, vb. 1. To combine or unify into one mass or body. 2. Civil procedure. To combine, through court order, two or more actions involving the same parties or issues into a single action ending in a single judgment or, sometimes, in separate judgments. [Cases: Action ↷54-59; Federal Civil Procedure ↷8.] 3. Corporations. To unite (two or more corporations or other organizations) to create one new corporation or other organization. Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985. A federal statute requiring employers that offer group health coverage to their employees to continue to do so for a prescribed period (usu. 18 to 36 months) after employment has terminated so that the former employee can continue to benefit from group-health rates until becoming a member of another health-insurance plan. • The statute temporarily continues group-health coverage for a person no longer entitled to receive it, such as a terminated employee or an overage dependent. "Qualifying events" justifying the continuation of group-health-insurance benefits include divorce, legal separation, or the death of a spouse. So COBRA often provides critical transitional coverage until a separated, divorced, or surviving spouse and children can arrange for new health insurance. The period of transitional coverage is up to 36 months, and an applicant spouse of the employee must make written application to the employer within 60 days of the separation or divorce. — Abbr. COBRA. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷401.]

"In the absence of any type of statutory vesting provision (which would render benefits nonforfeitable), terminated employees were generally left without health care coverage while they were looking for another job. While some state insurance laws provide for limited continuation coverage or individual conversion options, these alternatives were not available in all states Thus, COBRA was designed to fill this void, by providing a statutorily mandated mechanism for enabling terminated employees (and their eligible family members) to continue to have access to group health coverage at group rates until they can get another job or otherwise arrange for replacement coverage." consolidation, n. (15c) 1. The act or process of uniting; the state of being united. 2. Legislation. The combination into a single statutory measure of various legislative provisions that have previously been scattered in different statutes. 3. Civil procedure. The court-ordered unification of two or more actions, involving the same parties and issues, into a single action resulting in a single judgment or, sometimes, in separate judgments. Fed. R. Civ. P. 42(a). — Also termed consolidation of actions. Cf. JOINDER; SEVERANCE (2). [Cases: Action ↷54-59; Federal Civil Procedure ↷8.]

substantive consolidation. Bankruptcy. The merger of two or more bankruptcy cases, usu. pending against the same debtor or related debtors, into one estate for purposes of distributing the assets, usu. resulting in the two estates sharing assets and liabilities, and in the extinguishment of duplicate claims and claims between the debtors. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↷2084.]

consolidation of corporations. See CONSOLIDATION (4).

consolidation of mortgages. Hist. The equitable right of a mortgagee who holds multiple mortgages on real property owned by the same person to refuse to release one mortgage unless all the mortgages are redeemed. [Cases: Mortgages ↷309(1).]

consonant statement. See STATEMENT.

consortium (kən-sor-shee-əm). (1836) 1. The benefits that one person, esp. a spouse, is entitled to receive from another, including companionship, cooperation, affection, aid, financial support, and (between spouses) sexual relations . See LOSS OF CONSORTIUM; CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

filial consortium (fil-ee-əl). A child's society, affection, and companionship given to a parent. [Cases: Parent and Child ↷7.]

parental consortium. A parent's society, affection, and companionship given to a child. [Cases: Parent and Child ↷7.5.]

spousal consortium. A spouse's society, affection, and companionship given to the other spouse. [Cases: Husband and Wife ↷209(3, 4).]

consortium vitae (kən-sor-shee-əm vī-tee). [Law Latin] Hist. Cohabitation; the agreement between two parties to live together.

consortship (kən-sort-ship). Maritime law. An agreement by which salvors agree to work together to salvage wrecks, the recovery being apportioned among the salvors. • Consortships reduce interference among competing salvors and help prevent collisions at sea between operators attempting to salvage the same wreck.

conspicuous, adj. (1534) (Of a term or clause) clearly visible or obvious. • Whether a printed clause is conspicuous as a matter of law usu. depends on the size and style of the typeface. Under the UCC, a term or clause is conspicuous if it is written in a way that a reasonable person against whom it is to operate ought to notice it. UCC § 1-201(10). See FINE PRINT. [Cases: Sales ↷267.]

conspicuous place. (18c) For purposes of posting notices, a location that is reasonably likely to be seen.

conspiracy, n. (14c) An agreement by two or more persons to commit an unlawful act, coupled with an intent to achieve the agreement's objective, and (in most states) action or conduct that furthers the agreement; a combination for an unlawful purpose. 18 USCA § 371. • Conspiracy is a separate offense from the crime that is the object of the conspiracy. A conspiracy ends when the unlawful act has been committed or (in some states) when the agreement has been abandoned. A conspiracy does not automatically end if the conspiracy's object is defeated. See Model Penal Code § 5.03(7); United States v. Jiminez Recio, 537 U.S. 270, 123 S.Ct. 819 (2003). — Also termed criminal conspiracy. Cf. ATTEMPT (2); SOLICITATION (2). [Cases: Conspiracy ⇨ 1.1, 23.1.] — conspiratorial, adj.

"Conspiracie (conspiratio) though both in Latine and French it be used for an agreement of men, to doe any thing either good or bad: yet in our lawyers bookes, it is alway taken in the evill part." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

"[Conspiracy is an] elastic, sprawling and pervasive offense, . . . so vague that it almost defies definition. Despite certain elementary and essential elements, it also, chameleon-like, takes on a special coloration from each of the many independent offenses on which it may be overlaid. It is always 'predominantly mental in composition' because it consists primarily of a meeting of minds and an intent." Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U.S. 440, 445–48, 69 S.Ct. 716, 719–20 (1949) (Jackson, J., concurring).

"When two or more persons combine for the purpose of inflicting upon another person an injury which is unlawful in itself, or which is rendered unlawful by the mode in which it is inflicted, and in either case the other person suffers damage, they commit the tort of conspiracy." P.H. Winfield, A Textbook of the Law of Tort § 128, at 434 (5th ed. 1950).

chain conspiracy. (1959) A single conspiracy in which each person is responsible for a distinct act within the overall plan, such as an agreement to produce, import, and distribute narcotics in which each person performs only one function. • All participants are interested in the overall scheme and liable for all other participants' acts in furtherance of that scheme. [Cases: Conspiracy ⇨ 24(3).]

"In a 'chain' conspiracy, the court looks to whether the parties serve as links in a chain. In Blumenthal v. United States (1947), the Supreme Court found that the parties had agreed to sell liquor at prices exceeding the ceiling set by regulations of the Office of Price Administration. The Court found that the agreements were steps in the formulation of one larger general conspiracy. By reason of all having knowledge of the plan's general scope and common end, the disposing of whiskey, they could be drawn together in a single conspiracy." Ellen S. Podgor & Jerold H. Israel, White Collar Crime in a Nutshell 52 (2d ed. 1997).

civil conspiracy. (1901) An agreement between two or more persons to commit an unlawful act that causes damage to a person or property. [Cases: Conspiracy ⇨ 1.1.]

conspiracy in restraint of trade. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

conspiracy to infringe. Intellectual property. An agreement by two or more persons to commit an act that would interfere with the exclusive rights of a patent, copyright, or trademark owner. • This action is commonly recognized in trademark law. 18 USCA § 371; 17 USCA § 506(a)(1). The Copyright Act does not provide a basis for alleging a conspiracy to infringe, but an action is recognized by some states. The Patent Act provides no basis for an action asserting conspiracy to infringe because patent law covers only acts, not threats of acts. [Cases: Conspiracy ⇨ 8.]

conspiracy to monopolize. Antitrust. A conspiracy to take exclusive control of a commercial market. • Under § 2 of the Sherman Act, a conspiracy to monopolize exists if there is a conspiracy or concerted action directed at a substantial part of interstate commerce with the intent to acquire monopoly power. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨ 625.]

hub-and-spoke conspiracy. See wheel conspiracy.

intracorporate conspiracy. A conspiracy existing between a corporation and its own officers, agents, or employees. • To be prosecutable under federal law, the conspiracy must involve at least two persons (i.e., not just the corporation and one person). 18 USCA § 371. A corporation cannot conspire with its employees, and its employees, acting in the scope of their employment, conspire among themselves. McAndrew v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 206 F.3d 1031, 1035 (11th Cir. 2000). [Cases: Conspiracy ⇨ 2, 40; Corporations ⇨ 496.]

intra-enterprise conspiracy. Antitrust. A conspiracy existing between two subsidiaries, divisions, or other parts of the same firm. — Also termed bathtub conspiracy.

sedition conspiracy. (1893) A criminal conspiracy to forcibly (1) overthrow or destroy the U.S. government, (2) oppose its authority, (3) prevent the execution of its laws, or (4) seize or possess its property. 18 USCA § 2384. [Cases: Conspiracy ⇨ 28(3).]

wheel conspiracy. (1959) A conspiracy in which a single member or group (the "hub") separately agrees with two or more other members or groups (the "spokes"). • The person or group at the hub is the only party liable for all the conspiracies. — Also termed circle conspiracy; hub-and-spoke conspiracy. [Cases: Conspiracy ⇨ 24(3).]

conspirator, n. (15c) A person who takes part in a conspiracy.

unindicted conspirator. See unindicted coconspirator under COCONSPIRATOR.

conspire, vb. To engage in conspiracy; to join in a conspiracy.

constable (kon-stə-bəl), n. (13c) 1. A peace officer responsible for minor judicial duties, such as serving writs and warrants, but with less authority and smaller jurisdiction than a sheriff. 2. In the United Kingdom, a police officer; also, the title of a police officer. [Cases: Sheriffs and Constables ⇨ 8.] — constabulary (kən-stab-yə-ler-ee), adj. — constabulary (police station or force), n.

constabewick (kon-stə-bəl-wik). Hist. In the United Kingdom, the territorial jurisdiction of a constable. Cf. BAILIWICK.

constant dollars. The value of current money expressed as a percentage of its buying power in a previous year as determined by the consumer price index. • This value is used as a measure of inflation.

constat (kon-stat), n. [Latin "it is settled"] Hist. A certificate made by the Clerk of the Pipe and the auditors of the Exchequer at the request of a person intending to plead in the Court of Exchequer for the discharge of some item. • The constat certified what appeared on record.

constat de persona (kon-stat dee pār-soh-nə). [Law Latin] Hist. It is evident what person was meant. • A writing that misidentified a person was enforceable if the true identity of the person was evident from the remainder of the document. See DUMMODO CONSTET DE PERSONA.

constat de subjecto (kon-stat dee sǎb-jek-toh). [Law Latin] Hist. It is clear as to the subject matter (of a transaction).

constate (kǎn-stayt), vb. To establish, constitute, or ordain. • Constate usu. appears in relation to corporate documents; for example, a corporation is constated by its charter, organic law, or grant of powers to it.

constituency. 1. The body of citizens dwelling in a defined area and entitled to elect a representative. 2. The residents of an electoral district.

constituency-based quorum. See interest-based quorum under QUORUM.

constituent, adj. 1. (Of a component) that helps make up or complete a unit or a whole . 2. (Of an assembly) able to frame or amend a constitution .

constituent, n. (17c) 1. A person who gives another the authority to act as a representative; a principal who appoints an agent. 2. Someone who is represented by a legislator or other elected official. 3. One part of something that makes up a whole; an element. — constituency, n.

constituent element. An essential component of a crime or cause of action.

constituere (kon-sti-tyoo-ə-ree), vb. [Latin "to appoint"] Hist. To appoint (someone). • Constituere was used principally in powers of attorney: attornavi et in loco meo constitui ("I have attorned and put in my place").

constituted authority. See AUTHORITY (3).

constitutio (kon-sti-t[y]oo-shee-oh), n. [Latin "a decree"] 1. Roman law. An imperial decree; a law issued by the emperor; later, in the plural form constitutiones, a collection of laws. • The constitutiones took various forms, including orationes (laws submitted to the Senate), edicta (laws — usu. of a general character — put forth by the emperor), mandata (administrative directives to imperial officials), decreta (decisions by the emperor in legal cases), and rescripta (the emperor's responses to questions posed by litigants or imperial officials). Over time, the rapidly increasing number of constitutiones prompted their arrangement into collections such as the Theodosian Code and the Code of Justinian. They were the sole form of legislation after the third century A.D. Pl. constitutiones (kon-sti-t[y]oo-shee-oh-neeZ). — Also termed (collectively) constitutiones principum. See CODEX THEODOSIANUS; JUSTINIAN CODE.

"The name constitutiones, applied to the law-making utterances of the Roman emperors, had a very different meaning from our word 'constitution,' used to denote the fundamental, organic law of the state. Every official public document issuing from the emperor, and creating, declaring, or modifying law, was a constitutio. . . [A]nd it is hardly necessary to say that, although professing to come from the person of the emperor, they were actually composed by jurists, and usually by those who stood first in their profession." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 6-7 (1881).

2. Civil law. A settlement achieved without a trial; the sum paid according to the settlement. 3. Hist. In England, a statute; a provision of a statute. Pl. constitutiones (kon-sti-t[y]oo-shee-oh-neeZ).

constitution. (18c) 1. The fundamental and organic law of a nation or state that establishes the institutions and apparatus of government, defines the scope of governmental sovereign powers, and guarantees individual civil rights and civil liberties. [Cases: Constitutional Law ◊500.] 2. The written instrument embodying this fundamental law, together with any formal amendments.

flexible constitution. A constitution that has few or no special amending procedures. • The British Constitution is an example. Parliament can alter constitutional principles and define new baselines for government action through ordinary legislative processes. The Canadian Constitution also grants its legislature some limited ability to amend the Constitution by legislation.

rigid constitution. A constitution whose terms cannot be altered by ordinary forms of legislation, only by special amending procedures. • The U.S. Constitution is an example. It cannot be changed without the consent of three-fourths of the state legislatures or through a constitutional convention. U.S. Const. art. V.

unwritten constitution. 1. The customs and values, some of which are expressed in statutes, that provide the organic and fundamental law of a state or country that does not have a single written document functioning as a constitution. • In British constitutional law, the constitution is a collection of historical documents, statutes, decrees, conventions, traditions, and royal prerogatives. Documents and statutes include Magna Carta (1215), the Bill of Rights (1689), and the European Communities Act (1972). 2. The implied parts of a written constitution, encompassing the rights, freedoms, and processes considered to be essential, but not explicitly defined in the written document. • Many aspects of an unwritten constitution are based on custom and precedent. The U.S. Constitution does not, for example, give the Supreme Court the power to declare laws unconstitutional but the Court does so without question. Nor does the Constitution expressly guarantee a right of privacy,

constitutional, adj. (18c) 1. Of or relating to a constitution <constitutional rights>. 2. Proper and valid under a constitution <constitutional actions>.

constitutional-fact doctrine. 1. The rule that federal courts are not bound by an administrative agency's findings of fact when the facts involve whether the agency has exceeded constitutional limitations on its power, esp. regarding personal rights. • The courts reviewed the facts de novo to afford protection of constitutional rights. Although it has not been overruled or wholly discredited, this rule has fallen out of favor. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨783, 784.1.] 2. The rule that a federal appellate court is not bound by a trial court's findings of fact when constitutional rights are implicated, specifically in citizenship-determination and First Amendment cases. See, e.g., Bose Corp. v. Consumers Union, 466 U.S. 485, 104 S.Ct. 1949 (1984). Cf. JURISDICTIONAL-FACT DOCTRINE. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨870.1.] constitutional freedom. (1822) A basic liberty guaranteed by the Constitution or Bill of Rights, such as the freedom of speech. — Also termed constitutional protection; constitutional liberty.

constitutional guarantee. A promise contained in the United States Constitution that supports or establishes an inalienable right, such as the right to due process. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨1050.]

constitutional homestead. See HOMESTEAD.

constitutional immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

constitutionality, n. The quality or state of being constitutional <the constitutionality of the senator's bill is questionable>.

constitutionalize, vb. (1831) 1. To provide with a constitution <constitutionalize the new government>. 2. To make constitutional; to bring in line with a constitution <the court plans to constitutionalize the segregated school district>. 3. To make a constitutional question out of (a question of law); to subject (issue, etc.) to the burden of passing constitutional muster <the dissenter accused the majority of unnecessarily constitutionalizing its the issue>.

constitutional law. (18c) 1. The body of law deriving from the U.S. Constitution and dealing primarily with governmental powers, civil rights, and civil liberties. 2. The body of legal rules that determine the constitution of a state or country with an unwritten constitution. Cf. STATUTORY LAW; COMMON LAW. 3. The field of law dealing with aspects of constitutional provisions, such as restrictions on government powers and guarantees of rights.

constitutional limitation. (18c) A constitutional provision that restricts the powers of a governmental branch, department, agency, or officer.

constitutional majority. See majority of all the members under MAJORITY.

constitutional malice. See actual malice (2) under MALICE.

constitutional monarchy. See limited monarchy under MONARCHY.

constitutional office. A public position that is created by a constitution, rather than by a statute.

constitutional officer. See OFFICER (1).

constitutional question. (18c) A legal issue resolvable by the interpretation of a constitution, rather than a statute.

constitutional right. (18c) A right guaranteed by a constitution; esp., one guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution or by a state constitution.

constitutiones principum (kon-sti-t[y]oo-shee-oh-nee-z prin-sip-ə). [Latin] See CONSTITUTIO.

Constitutions of Clarendon. Hist. A 12th-century statement of customary law, produced during the reign of Henry II, intended to limit the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts and narrow the clergy's exemption from secular justice.

"During the first half of the twelfth century the claims of the church were growing, and the duty of asserting them passed into the hands of men who were not mere theologians but expert lawyers. Then, as all know, came the quarrel between Henry and Becket. In the Constitutions of Clarendon (1164) the king offered to the prelates a written treaty, a treaty which, so he said, embodied the 'customs' of his ancestors, more especially of his grandfather. Becket, after some hesitation, rejected the constitutions. The dispute waxed hot; certain of the customs were condemned by the pope. The murder followed . . . [F]rom [Henry's] time onwards the lay courts, rather than the spiritual, are the aggressors and the victors in almost every contest." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law 124-25 (2d ed. 1898).

constitutor (kon-stə-t[y]oo-tər), n. [Latin "an orderer, arranger"] Roman law. A person who, by agreement, becomes responsible for the payment of another's debt.

constitutum (kon-sti-t[y]oo-təm), n. [Latin "agreed arrangement"] Roman law. 1. An agreement to pay an existing debt, either one's own or another's, on a fixed day. • A constitutum was not a novation; the creditor could still sue the original debtor. It differed from a stipulation because it had to be for an existing debt. If the promise was to pay one's own debt, it was called constitutum debiti proprii. If it was to pay another's debt, then it was constitutum debiti alieni. 2. The fixing of a day for the repayment of money owed.

constitutum debiti alieni (kon-sti-t[y]oo-təm deb-ə-ti ay-lee-ə-ni). [Latin "debt agreement"] Roman law. See CONSTITUTUM (1).

constitutum possessorium (kon-sti-t[y]oo-təm pah-sessor-ee-əm). [Latin "possessory agreement"] Roman law. 1. A type of constructive delivery in which mediate possession is transferred while the immediate control or custody remains in the transferor. 2. The agreement by which this transfer is brought about. • In the context of a security interest, the pledged property may remain in the possession of the debtor, but as bailee of the creditor. For the other two types of constructive delivery, see ATTORNMENT; BREVI MANU. — Also termed traditio longa manu (trə-dish-ee-oh long-gə man-yoo).

construction, n. (14c) 1. The act of building by combining or arranging parts or elements; the thing so built. 2. The act or process of interpreting or explaining the sense or intention of a writing (usu. a constitution, statute, or instrument); the ascertainment of a document's meaning in accordance with judicial standards. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 143; Statutes ⇨ 174.] — con-struc-t (for sense 1), vb. — con-strue (for sense 2), vb.

"Construction, as applied to written law, is the art or process of discovering and expounding the meaning and intention of the authors of the law with respect to its application to a given case, where that intention is rendered doubtful either by reason of apparently conflicting provisions or directions, or by reason of the fact that the given case is not explicitly provided for in the law." Henry Campbell Black, Handbook on the Construction and Interpretation of the Laws 1 (1896).

"Some authors have attempted to introduce a distinction between 'interpretation' and 'construction.' Etymologically there is, perhaps, such a distinction; but it has not been accepted by the profession. For practical purposes any such distinction may be ignored, in view of the real object of both interpretation and construction, which is merely to ascertain the meaning and will of the lawmaking body, in order that it may be enforced." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 337 (3d ed. 1914).

"There is no explanation of the distinction between interpretation and construction [in Blackstone], nor can it be inferred from the matters dealt with under each head. The distinction is drawn in some modern works, but it is not taken in this book because it lacks an agreed basis. Some writers treat interpretation as something which is only called for when there is a dispute about the meaning of statutory words, while speaking of construction as a process to which all statutes, like all other writings, are necessarily subject when read by anyone. Others treat interpretation as something which is mainly concerned with the meaning of statutory words, while regarding construction as a process which mainly relates to the ascertainment of the intention of the legislature." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 18 (1976).

construction ut res magis valeat quam pereat (kən-strək-shən ət rays [or reez or rez] may-jis vay-lee-ət kwam peer-ee-ət). [Latin "a construction that gives effect to the matter rather than having it fail"] A construction arrived at when alternative readings are possible, one of which (usu. the broader reading) would achieve the manifest purpose of the document and one of which (usu. the narrower reading) would reduce it to futility or absurdity, whereby the interpreter chooses the one that gives effect to the document's purpose. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 153; Patents ⇨ 157(2); Statutes ⇨ 181(2).] contemporaneous construction. An interpretation given at or near the time when a writing was prepared, usu. by one or more persons involved in its preparation. — Also termed practical construction; practical interpretation; contemporaneous and practical interpretation. See CONTEMPORANEOUS-CONSTRUCTION DOCTRINE. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 170; Statutes ⇨ 218, 219(1).]

liberal construction. (17c) An interpretation that applies to a writing in light of the situation presented and that tends to effectuate the spirit and purpose of the writing. — Also termed equitable construction; loose construction; broad interpretation. Cf. strict construction. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 143.]

literal construction. See strict construction.

loose construction. See liberal construction.

practical construction. See contemporaneous construction.

purposive construction (pər-pə-siv). An interpretation that looks to the "evil" that the statute is trying to correct (i.e., the statute's purpose). — Also termed teleological interpretation. See liberal construction.

statutory construction. See STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.

strict construction. (16c) 1. An interpretation that considers only the literal words of a writing. — Also termed literal construction; literal interpretation. See STRICT CONSTRUCTIONISM. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 143.] 2. A construction that considers words narrowly, usu. in their historical context. • This type of construction treats statutory and contractual words with highly restrictive readings. — Also termed strict interpretation. 3. The philosophy underlying strict interpretation of statutes. See strict constructionism under CONSTRUCTIONISM. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 189, 235.]

"Strict construction of a statute is that which refuses to expand the law by implications or equitable considerations, but confines its operation to cases which are clearly within the letter of the statute, as well as within its spirit or reason, not so as to defeat the manifest purpose of the Legislature, but so as to resolve all reasonable doubts against the applicability of the statute to the particular case." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 343 (3d ed. 1914).

"Strict interpretation is an equivocal expression, for it means either literal or narrow. When a provision is ambiguous, one of its meanings may be wider than the other, and the strict (i.e., narrow) sense is not necessarily the strict (i.e., literal) sense." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 171 n.(t) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

construction financing. See interim financing under FINANCING.

constructionism. A judicial approach to interpreting the text of statutes, regulations, constitutions, and the like.

liberal constructionism. Broad interpretation of a text's language, including the use of related writings to clarify the meanings of the words, and possibly also a consideration of meaning in both contemporary and current lights. — Also termed broad constructionism; loose constructionism.

strict constructionism, n. (1892) The doctrinal view of judicial construction holding that judges should interpret a document or statute (esp. one involving penal sanctions) according to its literal terms, without looking to other sources to ascertain the meaning. — Also termed strict construction; literal canon; literal rule; textualism. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 143(1); Statutes ⇨ 235, 241(1).] — strict constructionist, n.

constructionist. One who interprets a controlling text, such as a statute, constitution, or the like.

broad constructionist. See liberal constructionist.

liberal constructionist. A decision-maker who derives the meaning of a text's language not only from the words but from reasonable inferences drawn from the words and from other sources, such as a statute's legislative history. • A liberal constructionist may also consider the reasonableness of an interpretation under modern social mores. — Also termed broad constructionist, loose constructionist. See liberal constructionism under CONSTRUCTIONISM. Cf. strict constructionist.

loose constructionist. See liberal constructionist.

strict constructionist. A decision-maker who derives a text's meaning narrowly, using tools such as originalism or textualism, and applies the text according to that meaning. See ORIGINALISM; strict constructionism under CONSTRUCTIONISM. Cf. liberal constructionist.

"Under the stimulus of political agitation in the early days of the republic over the powers conferred by the constitution two rival schools of interpretations sprang up. The ones terming themselves strict constructionists held that the language of the constitution should be construed literally and conservatively, while the other party held with equal fervor that the instrument should be construed liberally and according to the spirit rather than the letter, so that they were denominated loose constructionists." construe (kən-stroo), vb. (14c) To analyze and explain the meaning of (a sentence or passage) <the court construed the language of the statute>.

constuprate (kon-st[y]ə-prayt), vb. Archaic. To rape or violate (a person).

consuetudinarius (kon-swə-t[y]oo-di-nair-ee-əs). [fr. Latin consuetudo "custom"] Hist. Eccles. law. A book containing the rites and forms of divine offices or customs of abbeys and monasteries.

consuetudinary law. See LAW.

Consuetudines Feudorum (kon-swə-t[y]oo-di-neez fyoo-dor-əm). [Law Latin "the customs of fiefs"] Hist. See FEUDORUM LIBRI.

consuetudinibus et serviciis (kon-swə-t[y]oo-din-ə-bəs et sər-vish-ee-is). [Law Latin "customs and services"] Hist. A writ of right that lay against a tenant who withheld rent or services from the lord.

consuetudo (kon-swə-t[y]oo-doh), n. [Latin "custom"] 1. Roman law. Custom; long-established usage or practice. 2. Hist. Customary law. • Consuetudo generally bears this sense, referring to law that has been long approved by the will of the people. It is a broad term that includes both the common law and the statutory law of England. 3. Hist. A duty or tax.

consuetudo anglicana (kon-swə-t[y]oo-doh ang-gli-kay-nə). [Law Latin "the custom of England"] Hist. The English common law, as distinguished from Roman or civil law.

consuetudo curiae (kon-swə-t[y]oo-doh kyoor-ee-ee). [Latin] Hist. The custom or practice of a court.

consul (kon-səl), n. 1. A governmental representative living in a foreign country to oversee commercial and other matters involving the representative's home country and its citizens in that foreign country. • Consuls are not diplomatic agents, so unless a treaty provides otherwise, they do not enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities. But consuls are entitled to consular immunities, which protect them from local law and jurisdiction in the exercise of their consular functions. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls ↻ 1-8.] — consular (kon-səl-ər), adj. — consulship (kon-səl-ship), n.

"The commercial agents of a government, residing in foreign parts, and charged with the duty of promoting the commercial interests of the state, and especially of its individual citizens or subjects, are called consuls. These, under the regulations of some countries, are of different grades, being either consuls-general, consuls, or vice-consuls, from whom consular agents differ little." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 99, at 159 (5th ed. 1878).

"Consuls are commercial, not diplomatic agents. They reside abroad for the purpose of protecting the individual interests of traders, travellers, and mariners belonging to the State which employs them. . . . They exercise jurisdiction over their countrymen, their persons are inviolable, their residences may be used as asylums in the case of war or tumult, and in fact they possess more than the ordinary diplomatic immunities." T.J. Lawrence, A Handbook of Public International Law 86–87 (10th ed. 1925).

"The usual criterion used for the distinction between diplomats and consuls is the representative character of the former of which the latter are devoid. However, this distinction is not altogether correct. Undoubtedly diplomatic agents have a general representative character since in all matters and relations they represent their country in the state to which they are accredited. Consuls, on the other hand, as state organs, also represent their country in another state, but only in matters within their competence. Thus, the representative character of consuls is, like their competence, specific, and secondary to that of diplomatic agents." Constantin Economidès, "Consuls," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 770 (1992).

consul general. A high-ranking consul appointed to a strategically important region and often having supervisory powers over other regions or other consuls.

2. Roman law. One of two chief magistrates elected annually during the Republic to exercise supreme authority. • Under the Empire, the consulship was reduced to a sinecure, held by appointees of the emperor or the emperor himself.

"The principal inheritors of the royal authority and dignity were the two consuls elected by the comitia centuriata. They enjoyed equal powers. In the calendar the year was distinguished by their names. They convoked and initiated legislation in either comitia. In special emergencies, particularly in times of grave crisis, either consul might appoint a dictator who exercised supreme authority, but not beyond six months, unless re-appointed. . . . It was abolished by Justinian in A.D. 541, though later emperors continued to assume the title." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 14 (4th ed. 1956).

consular invoice. See INVOICE.

consular jurisdiction. The exercise of a judicial function by a consul in a foreign territory, as by performing a wedding ceremony between nationals of the country represented by the consul. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls ↷5.]

consular law. The law relating to consuls, developed through custom and multitudes of bilateral consular agreements.

consular marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

consular relations. Int'l law. The aggregate of relations established between two countries through the exercise of consuls' functions on behalf of a sending state within the territory of a receiving state. See sending state and receiving state under STATE.

consulate (kon-sə-lit). 1. The office or jurisdiction of a consul <the senator advised the businessman to notify the U.S. consulate in Kuwait before visiting the country>. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls ↷5.] 2. The location of a consul's office or residence <the family was staying on the second floor, just above the Turkish consulate>.

foreign consulate. The consulate of a foreign country in the receiving state.

3. Government by consuls <after the French Revolution, the Directory was overthrown and the Consulate was created>. • This sense of consulate is based on the original Roman meaning ("chief magistrate") — not on the modern sense of an overseas representative of a country.

consul general. See CONSUL.

consultation, n. (15c) 1. The act of asking the advice or opinion of someone (such as a lawyer). 2. A meeting in which parties consult or confer. 3. Int'l law. The interactive methods by which states seek to prevent or resolve disputes. — consult, vb. — consulting, consultative, adj.

consultative exam. As a foundation for an expert opinion, a check-up performed by a qualified medical professional to determine whether a person has a mental or physical disability, and, if so, the extent of the disability and expectations for improvement.

consulting expert. See EXPERT.

consumable, n. (1802) A thing (such as food) that cannot be used without changing or extinguishing its substance. Cf. NONCONSUMABLE. — consumable, adj.

consumer. (15c) A person who buys goods or services for personal, family, or household use, with no intention of resale; a natural person who uses products for personal rather than business purposes. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷141.]

consumer boycott. See BOYCOTT.

consumer confusion. Trademarks. The incorrect perception formed by a purchaser or user about a product's or service's manufacturer or origin. • The mistake usually occurs when a product or service is marketed in a way that makes it appear to be affiliated with a well-known product, service, or provider. — Also termed actual consumer confusion; user confusion; actual user confusion. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↷30.]

consumer-contemplation test. (1979) A method of imposing product liability on a manufacturer if the evidence shows that a product's danger is greater than that which a reasonable consumer would expect. — Also termed consumer-user-contemplation test; con- sumer-expectation test. Cf. RISK-UTILITY TEST. [Cases: Products Liability ↷119, 130.]

consumer credit. See CREDIT (4).

Consumer Credit Code. See UNIFORM CONSUMER CREDIT CODE.

Consumer Credit Protection Act. A federal statute that safeguards consumers in the use of credit by (1) requiring full disclosure of the terms of loan agreements, including finance charges, (2) restricting the garnishment of wages, and (3) regulating the use of credit cards. 15 USCA §§ 1601–1693. • Many states have also adopted consumer-credit-protection acts. — Abbr. CCPA. — Also termed Truth in Lending Act (abbr. TILA). See UNIFORM CONSUMER CREDIT CODE. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↷30.]

consumer-credit sale. See SALE.

consumer-credit transaction. (1954) A transaction by which a person receives a loan to buy consumer goods or services. • Consumer-credit transactions are usually subject to regulations enacted for the consumer's protection. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↷1, 3.]

consumer debt. See DEBT.

consumer-expectation test. See CONSUMER-CONTEMPLATION TEST.

consumer finance company. See FINANCE COMPANY.

consumer goods. See GOODS.

consumer-goods transaction. Secured transactions. A transaction in which (1) an individual incurs an obligation primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose, and (2) a security interest in consumer goods secures the obligation. UCC § 9-102(a)(24). [Cases: Secured Transactions ↷15.]

consumer law. (1966) The area of law dealing with consumer transactions — that is, a person's obtaining credit, goods, real property, or services for personal, family, or household purposes. — Also termed consumer-transactions law.

consumer lease. See LEASE.

consumer loan. See LOAN.

consumer price index. An index that tracks the price of goods and services purchased by the average consumer and that is published monthly by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. • The consumer price index is used to monitor periodic changes in the rate of inflation. — Abbr. CPI. — Also termed cost-of-living index. Cf. PRODUCER PRICE INDEX.

consumer product. (1949) An item of personal property that is distributed in commerce and is normally used for personal, family, or household purposes. 15 USCA § 2301(1).

Consumer Product Safety Commission. An independent federal regulatory commission that develops safety standards for consumer products and promotes research into the causes and prevention of product-related deaths, illnesses, and injuries. • It was established in 1972. 15 USCA §§ 2051 et seq. — Abbr. CPSC. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷232.]

consumer-protection law. (1954) A state or federal statute designed to protect consumers against unfair trade and credit practices involving consumer goods, as well as to protect consumers against faulty and dangerous goods. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷128; Consumer Credit ↷1.]

consumer transaction. A bargain or deal in which a party acquires property or services primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose.

consumer-transactions law. See CONSUMER LAW.

consumer-user-contemplation test. See CONSUMER-CONTEMPLATION TEST.

consummate (kən-səm-it or kahn-sə-mit), adj. Completed; fully accomplished. • Consummate was often used at common law to describe the status of a contract or an estate, such as the transformation of a husband's interest in his wife's inheritance from that of a tenant by the curtesy initiate to a tenant by curtesy consummate upon the wife's death (assuming that a child had been born during the marriage). See curtesy consummate under CURTESY. — consummation, n.

consummate (kən-sə-mayt), vb. (16c) 1. To bring to completion; esp., to make (a marriage) complete by sexual intercourse. 2. To achieve; to fulfill. 3. To perfect; to carry to the highest degree.

consummate dowry. See DOWRY.

consummation of marriage. Family law. The first post-marital act of sexual intercourse between a husband and wife. • Under canon law, a refusal to consummate the marriage may be grounds for an annulment or for divorce. But this is not so at common law or under modern state law. [Cases: Marriage ↷33.]

consumption. (14c) The act of destroying a thing by using it; the use of a thing in a way that exhausts it.

contagion. Int'l law. A discredited doctrine holding that revolution or abhorrent practices in a neighboring state justify its invasion and the overthrow of its government on the grounds of national security. • The doctrine was employed by the Holy Alliance (1815–1848) in Europe to invade countries where revolutions were brewing. — Also termed doctrine of contagion.

containing by estimate. Archaic. More or less. • This phrase usu. appears in deeds in which measurements are made by metes and bounds. It is redundant when the phrase "more or less" is used.

containment. Int'l law. A policy of restricting the ideological or territorial expansion of one's enemy. • This was the basic policy of the United States during the Cold War.

contango (kən-tang-goh), n. Securities. 1. A market in which long-term futures or options contracts sell at a premium over short-term contracts. — Also termed normal market. 2. The premium so paid. • The premium paid for securities with longer maturities reflects the cost of holding the commodity for future delivery.

contemn (kən-tem), vb. To treat (as laws or court orders) with contemptuous disregard. See CONTEMPT.

contemnor (kən-tem-ər or -nər or -nɔr). (16c) A person who is guilty of contempt before a governmental body, such as a court or legislature. — Also spelled contemner.

contemplation of bankruptcy. The thought of declaring bankruptcy because of the inability to continue current financial operations, often coupled with action designed to thwart the distribution of assets in a bankruptcy proceeding. — Also termed contemplation of insolvency.

contemplation of death. (18c) The thought of dying, not necessarily from imminent danger, but as the compelling reason to transfer property to another. See gift causa mortis under GIFT. [Cases: Gifts ↷59; Internal Revenue ↷4159(2).]

contemplation of insolvency. See CONTEMPLATION OF BANKRUPTCY.

contemporanea expositio (kən-tem-pə-ray-nee-ə eks-pə-zish-ee-oh). [Latin “contemporaneous exposition”] The doctrine that the best meaning of a statute or document is the one given by those who enacted it or signed it, and that the meaning publicly given by contemporary or long professional usage is presumed to be the correct one, even if the language may have a popular or an etymological meaning that is very different.

contemporaneous and practical interpretation. See contemporaneous construction under CONSTRUCTION.

contemporaneous-construction doctrine. (1956) The rule that the initial interpretation of an ambiguous statute by an administrative agency or lower court is entitled to great deference if the interpretation has been used over a long period. [Cases: Statutes ↷218, 219.]

contemporary community standards. (1957) The gauge by which a fact-finder decides whether material is obscene, judging by its patent offensiveness and its prurience in the locale at a given time. See OBSCENITY (1). [Cases: Obscenity ↷1.4.]

“Both prurience and patent offensiveness are determined by ‘contemporary community standards.’ But what is the relevant community? In Miller [v. California], the Court rejected the contention that only a national community standard, free of local biases, would provide adequate

First Amendment protection and allowed lower courts to use local standards in defining what is obscene. Subsequent cases have made it clear that the state may choose to omit reference to any particular geographic community, state or local, although it may do so. If a geographic reference is omitted, each jury is free to ascertain the contemporary community standard.” Jerome A. Barron & C. Thomas Dienes, Constitutional Law in a Nutshell 396 (3d ed. 1995).

contempt, n. (14c) 1. The act or state of despising; the condition of being despised. 2. Conduct that defies the authority or dignity of a court or legislature. • Because such conduct interferes with the administration of justice, it is punishable, usu. by fine or imprisonment. Fed. R. Civ. P. 45(e); Fed. R. Crim. P. 42; 18 USCA § 401. See CONTUMACY. — Also termed contempt of court; judicial contempt. [Cases: Contempt ↷1-26; States ↷40.] — contemptuous, adj.

consequential contempt. 1. Contempt that, although not amounting to gross insolence or direct opposition, tends to create a universal disregard of the power and authority of courts and judges. 2. See indirect contempt.

constructive contempt. See indirect contempt.

contempt of Congress. Deliberate interference with the duties and powers of Congress, such as a witness’s refusal to answer a question from a congressional committee. • Contempt of Congress is a criminal offense. 2 USCA § 192. [Cases: United States ↷23(9).]

contempt of sovereignty. Int’l law. The minor diplomatic offense of interference in domestic affairs by a foreign representative, esp. by making a public statement about an issue currently being debated in the legislature.

criminal contempt. (1841) An act that obstructs justice or attacks the integrity of the court. • A criminal-contempt proceeding is punitive in nature. The purpose of criminal-contempt proceedings is to punish repeated or aggravated failure to comply with a court order. All the protections of criminal law and procedure apply, and the commitment must be for a definite period. — Also termed common-law contempt. [Cases: Contempt ↷3, 40.]

“Criminal contempt is a crime in the ordinary sense; it is a violation of the law, a public wrong which is punishable by fine or imprisonment or both.” Bloom v. Illinois, 391 U.S. 194, 201, 88 S.Ct. 1477, 1481 (1968).

direct contempt. (1863) A contempt (such as an assault of a testifying witness) committed in the immediate vicinity of a court; esp., a contempt committed in a judge’s presence. ● A direct contempt is usu. immediately punishable when the transgression occurs. [Cases: Contempt ↷2.]

indirect contempt. (1896) Contempt that is committed outside of court, as when a party disobeys a court order. ● Indirect contempt is punishable only after proper notice to the contemnor and a hearing. — Also termed constructive contempt; consequential contempt. [Cases: Contempt ↷2.]

contempt power. (1885) The power of a governmental body (such as Congress or a court) to punish someone who shows contempt for the process, orders, or proceedings of that body.

contempt proceeding. See PROCEEDING.

contenement (kən-ten-ə-mənt). Hist. 1. Freehold land held by a feudal tenant, esp. land used to support the tenant. ● Magna Carta (1215) exempted this property from seizure.

“Contenement, (contenementum) seemeth to be the free hold land, which lyeth to a mans tenement or dwelling house, that is in his owne occupation. For magna carta. ca. 14. you have these words: A free man shall not be amerced for a small fault, but after the quantity of the fault: and for a great fault, after the maner thereof, saving to him his contenement or free hold. And a merchant likewise shal be amerced saving to him his merchandies: and any other villaine then owens, shal be amerced saving his wainage. . . .” John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

2. A person’s reputation or standing in the community. ● Though contenement as used in this sense is also rooted in the ownership of land, it may stem from the Law French contenance (“countenance”) rather than the Law Latin contenementum (“with tenement”), as used in sense (1).

“Contenement signifies his Countenance, Credit, or Reputation, which he hath, together with, and by reason of his Freehold; and in this sense does the Statute of 1 Edw. 3 and Old Nat. Br. use it, where Countenance is used for Contenement: The Armor of a Soldier is his Countenance; the Books of a Schollar, his Countenance; and the like.” Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

content, n. Maritime law. A written declaration of a departing vessel’s destination, the kind and quantity of cargo it is carrying, and other particulars, submitted to a customs inspector for approval and permission for the vessel to leave port. Cf. MANIFEST.

content-based discrimination. See DISCRIMINATION.

content-based restriction. (1973) Constitutional law. A restraint on the substance of a particular type of speech.

● This type of restriction is presumptively invalid but can survive a constitutional challenge if it is based on a compelling state interest and its measures are narrowly drawn to accomplish that end. Boos v. Barry, 485 U.S. 312, 108 S.Ct. 1157 (1998). See SPEECH (1). [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷1516.]

contentious jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

contentious possession. See hostile possession under POSSESSION.

content-neutral. See NEUTRAL.

contents unknown. A statement placed on a bill of lading to show that the carrier does not know what is inside shipped containers. ● Carriers use this phrase in an attempt to limit their liability for damage to the goods shipped. Shipper’s load and count is also used. [Cases: Carriers ↷50; Shipping ↷106(3).]

content-valid test. A job-applicant examination that bears a close relationship to the skills required by the job. ● Content-validation studies are often performed in employment-discrimination cases that contest the validity of an examination. [Cases: Civil Rights ↷1142, 1546.]

“The simplest form of test validation is where the test replicates major portions of the job, as for example, where a test measuring typing or computer literacy is used to select a secretarial support person A content valid test must measure or replicate a ‘representative sample’ of the job’s duties. It is not valid if it measures only a small portion of those duties. For example, fire fighters may need to write reports, but a grammar test is too narrow to be content valid.” Mack A. Player, Federal Law of Employment Discrimination in a Nutshell 101 (3d ed. 1992).

conterminous, adj. 1. Sharing a common boundary <the surveyor set a new line between the conterminous counties>. — Also termed coterminous. 2. Enclosed within a common boundary <all 48 conterminous states of this country>. 3. See COTERMINOUS.

contest (kən-test), vb. (17c) 1. To strive to win or hold; contend <he chose to contest for the prize>. 2. To litigate or call into question; challenge <they want to contest the will>. 3. To deny an adverse claim or assert a defense to it in a court proceeding <she contests that charge>. — contest (kən-test), n.

contestability clause (kən-tes-tə-bil-ə-tee). Insurance. A policy provision setting forth when and under what conditions the insurer may contest a claim or void the policy based on a representation or omission made when the policy was issued. ● Contestability clauses usu. lapse after two years. — Also termed contestable clause. Cf. INCONTESTABILITY CLAUSE. [Cases: Insurance ↷2950, 3121.]

contestant. (17c) 1. One who contests the validity of a will, trust, or other legal instrument. — Also termed objectant; caveator. 2. Trademarks. One who challenges the placement of a trademark on the Principal Register. ● The term refers to a challenger in (1) an interference proceeding, (2) an opposition proceeding before a mark is placed on the Principal Register, or (3) a cancellation proceeding after the mark is placed on the Principal Register. [Cases: Trademarks ↻ 12891294, 1301.] 3. Patents. A party to an interference proceeding in the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. — Also termed (in sense 3) interferant. [Cases: Patents ↻ 106(1).]

contestatio litis (kon-tes-tay-shee-oh li-tis). [Latin “contestation of suit”] See LITIS CONTESTATIO.

contestation of suit (kon-tes-tay-shən). Eccles. law. The point in an action when the defendant answers the plaintiff’s libel (i.e., complaint); the plea and joinder of an issue. — Also termed litis contestatio.

contested divorce. See DIVORCE.

context, n. (16c) 1. The surrounding text of a word or passage, used to determine the meaning of that word or passage <his remarks were taken out of context>. 2. Setting or environment <in the context of foreign relations>. — contextual, adj.

context rule. Contracts. The principle that a court may look to extrinsic evidence to determine the intended meaning of a contract, even though the language itself is clear and unambiguous. • The court may consider (1) the subject matter and purpose of the contract, (2) the circumstances surrounding the making of the contract, (3) the subsequent conduct of the parties to the contract, (4) the reasonableness of the parties’ respective interpretations, (5) statements made by the parties in preliminary negotiations, (6) usages of trade, and (7) the course of dealing between the parties. This rule does not make extrinsic evidence admissible for other purposes, such as adding to, modifying, or contradicting the contract’s terms, unless a party can show that the actual language resulted from fraud, accident, or mistake. Restatement (Second) of Contracts §§ 212, 214(c) (1981). [Cases: Contracts ↻ 143, 169, 170; Evidence ↻ 448.]

contiguity (kon-ti-gyoo-ə-tee), n. The state or condition of being contiguous <contiguity existed between the two adjoining tracts of land>.

contiguous (kən-tig-yoo-əs), adj. (17c) 1. Touching at a point or along a boundary; ADJOINING <Texas and Oklahoma are contiguous>. 2. Near in time or sequence; successive <contiguous thunder and lightning>.

contiguous zone. Int’l law. An area abutting and extending beyond the territorial sea, in which countries have limited powers to enforce customs as well as fiscal, sanitary, and immigration laws. [Cases: International Law ↻ 7.]

Continental Congress. The first national governmental assembly in the United States, formed in 1774 to protest British treatment of the colonies. • The Second Continental Congress, commencing in 1775, adopted the Declaration of Independence and served as the national government until the Articles of Confederation were ratified in 1781.

contingency (kən-tin-jən-see). (16c) 1. An event that may or may not occur; a possibility. 2. The condition of being dependent on chance; uncertainty. 3. CONTINGENT FEE.

contingency beneficiary. See contingent beneficiary (1) under BENEFICIARY.

contingency reserve. See contingent fund under FUND (1).

contingency with a double aspect. A contingent remainder existing along with a second remainder, the latter remainder taking effect only if the first fails. • In the following example, this type of remainder would arise if A never has children: “to A for life, and if A has children, then to the children and their heirs forever; and if A dies without children, then to B and B’s heirs forever.” See contingent remainder under REMAINDER. [Cases: Remainders ↻ 1.]

contingent (kən-tin-jənt), adj. 1. Possible; uncertain; unpredictable <the trust was contingent, and the contingency never occurred>. 2. Dependent on something else; conditional <her acceptance of the position was contingent upon the firm’s agreeing to guarantee her husband a position as well>.

contingent annuity. See ANNUITY.

contingent beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.

contingent claim. See CLAIM (4).

contingent debt. See DEBT.

contingent demand. See DEMAND (1).

contingent estate. See ESTATE (1).

contingent fee. (17c) A fee charged for a lawyer’s services only if the lawsuit is successful or is favorably settled out of court. • Contingent fees are usu. calculated as a percentage of the client’s net recovery (such as 25% of the recovery if the case is settled, and 33% if the case is won at trial). — Also termed contingency fee; contingency; conditional fee. [Cases: Attorney and Client ↻ 146.]

reverse contingent fee. A fee in which a defense lawyer’s compensation depends in whole or in part on how much money the lawyer saves the client, given the client’s potential liability — so that the lower the settlement or judgment, the higher the lawyer’s fee. • For example, if a client might be liable for up to $2 million, and agrees to pay the lawyer 40% of the difference between $1 million and the amount of the settlement or judgment, then a settlement of $800,000 would result in a fee of $80,000 (40% of the $200,000 under the threshold amount of $1 million). — Also termed negative contingent fee; defense contingent fee; reverse bonus. [Cases: Attorney and Client ↻ 146.] contingent trust. See TRUST.

contingent use. See USE (4).

contingent will. See WILL.

continual claim. Hist. A formal claim to a tract of land made by an out-of-possession owner who is deterred from taking possession by a menace of some type.

- The claim — called continual because it had to be renewed annually — preserved the claimant's right to the land. The owner had to make the claim as near to the land as could be done safely. This procedure gave the disseised person the same benefits (such as the right to devise the land) as a legal entry. The continual claim was abolished early in the 19th century.

continuance, n. (14c) 1. The act of keeping up, maintaining, or prolonging <continuance of the formal tradition>. 2. Duration; time of continuing <the senator's continuance in office>. 3. Procedure. The adjournment or postponement of a trial or other proceeding to a future date <motion for continuance>. Cf. RECESS (1). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1851; Pretrial Procedure ⇨711.] — continue, vb.

continuando (kən-tin-yoo-an-doh). [Law Latin "by continuing"] Hist. An allegation charging that the trespass or other wrongful act complained of constitutes a continuing tort against the plaintiff's property.

"In trespasses of a permanent nature, where the injury is continually renewed, (as by spoiling or consuming the herbage with the defendant's cattle) the declaration may allege the injury to have been committed by continuando from one given day to another, (which is called laying the action with a continuando) and the plaintiff shall not be compelled to bring separate actions for every day's separate offence." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 212 (1768).

continuation. Patents. A patent application that is based on the same disclosure and claiming the same invention as a rejected parent application but containing some change in the scope of the claims. • A continuation application maintains the original filing date for prior-art and interference purposes, as long as it is filed while the parent application is still pending, has at least one inventor in common with the parent application, and refers to the parent application. — Also termed continuation application; continuation-in-whole application; continuing application; file-wrapper continuing application. Cf. CONTINUATION-IN-PART; continued-

continuation agreement. (1942) Partnership. An agreement among the partners that, in the event of dissolution, the business of the partnership can be continued without the necessity of liquidation. Cf. BUY-SELL AGREEMENT (1). [Cases: Partnership ⇨277.]

"Normally, a continuation agreement would have some type of provision for purchasing the interest of a deceased or expelled partner. However, such a provision is not necessary. Courts have enforced agreements that give the estate of the deceased partner nothing." Harold Gill Reuschlein & William A. Gregory, The Law of Agency and Partnership § 269, at 461 (2d ed. 1990).

continuation application. 1. See CONTINUATION. 2. See CONTINUATION-IN-PART.

continuation-application laches doctrine. Patents. An equitable defense to patent infringement, based on an assertion that the patentee deliberately delayed the issuance of the patent-in-suit by filing multiple continuing applications that added new patent claims to cover products marketed or processes used after the original application was filed. — Also termed prosecution laches doctrine. See SUBMARINE PATENT. [Cases: Patents ⇨289(2).]

continuation-in-part. Patents. A patent application filed by the same applicant during the pendency of an earlier application, repeating a substantial part of the earlier application but adding to or subtracting from the claims. 35 USCA § 120. • This type of application contains new technical descriptions from the inventor or reflects improvements made since the parent application was filed. A claim in a continuation-in-part application is entitled to the benefit of the parent application's filing date if the claimed subject matter is the same, but the new matter takes the filing date of the continuation-in-part application. Continuation-in-part applications are usu. filed to describe and claim later-discovered improvements to an invention, or to distinguish the invention from some prior-art reference. — Abbr. CIP. — Also termed continuation-in-part application; continuation application; continuing application; file-wrapper continuation application. Cf. CONTINUATION. [Cases: Patents ⇨110.] continuation-in-part application. See CONTINUATION-IN-PART.

continuing, adj. (14c) 1. Uninterrupted; persisting . 2. Not requiring renewal; enduring <continuing stockholders> <continuing jurisdiction>.

continuing annuity. See survivorship annuity under ANNUITY.

continuing application. See PATENT APPLICATION.

continuing breach. See BREACH OF CONTRACT.

continuing consideration. See CONSIDERATION (1).

continuing contract. See CONTRACT.

continuing covenant. See COVENANT (1).

continuing damages. See DAMAGES.

continuing guaranty. See GUARANTY.

continuing harm. See continuing injury under INJURY.

continuing injury. See INJURY.

continuing judicial education. (1964) Continuing legal education for judges, usu. organized and sponsored by a governmentally subsidized body and often involving topics such as judicial writing, efficient decision-making, caseload management, and the like. — Abbr. CJE.

continuing jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

continuing-jurisdiction doctrine. (1966) 1. The rule that a court retains power to enter and enforce a judgment over a party even though that party is no longer subject to a new action. [Cases: Courts ⇨30.] 2. Family law. The rule that once a court has acquired jurisdiction over a child-custody or support case, that court continues to have jurisdiction to modify orders, even if the child or a parent moves to another state. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨745; Child Support ⇨507.]

continuing legal education. (1948) 1. The process or system through which lawyers extend their learning beyond their law-school studies, usu. by attending seminars designed to sharpen lawyering skills or to provide updates on legal developments within particular practice areas. • In many jurisdictions, lawyers have annual or biennial requirements to devote a given number of hours (usu. 12–15) to continuing legal education. [Cases: Attorney and Client ⇨9.] 2. The enhanced skills or knowledge derived from this process. 3. The business field in which educational providers supply the demand for legal seminars, books, audiotapes, and videotapes designed to further the education of lawyers. — Abbr. CLE.

continuing nuisance. See NUISANCE.

continuing objection. See OBJECTION.

continuing offense. See OFFENSE (1).

continuing part-time judge. See JUDGE.

continuing threat of harm. A condition or situation that presents a high risk of injury at intervals or over an extended period, whether or not an injury has actually occurred. • The condition or situation can be a behavior that is subject to repetition, as with unfair-competition practices or stalking, or an enduring state, such as environmental contamination. — Also termed threat of continuing harm; continuing threat of injury; threat of continuing injury. Cf. continuing injury under INJURY.

continuing trespass. See TRESPASS.

continuing-violation doctrine. Employment law. The judge-made rule that if an employer's discriminatory acts are of an ongoing nature, the statute of limitations will be extended to allow the plaintiff to recover even when a claim based on those acts would otherwise be time-barred. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ⇨58(1).] continuing warranty. See promissory warranty under WARRANTY (3).

continuing wrong. See WRONG.

continuity (kon-ti-n[y]oo-ə-tee). 1. Int'l law. The principle that upheavals and revolutions within a country — as well as changes in governmental forms, the extent of a country's territory, and measures taken during a military occupation — do not affect the existence of the country and therefore cannot lead to its extinction. 2. Patents. The rule that a continuation or divisional patent application carries the effective filing date of its parent application if (1) the parent application fully discloses the same invention, (2) there is at least one common inventor, and (3) the parent application was still pending when the latter application was filed. • A continuation-in-part application carries the effective filing date for everything disclosed in the parent application, but not for new material. 35 USCA § 120. — Also termed doctrine of continuity. Cf. HIATUS. [Cases: Patents ⇨110.] continuity of business enterprise. (1980) Tax. A doctrine covering acquisitive reorganizations whereby the acquiring corporation must continue the target corporation's historical business or must use a significant portion of the target's business assets in a new business to qualify the acquisition as a tax-deferred transaction. [Cases: Corporations ⇨445.1.] continuity-of-enterprise doctrine. See SUBSTANTIAL-CONTINUITY DOCTRINE.

continuity-of-entity doctrine. See MERE-CONTINUATION DOCTRINE.

continuity of existence. See CONTINUITY-OF-LIFE DOCTRINE.

continuity of interest. (1974) 1. Tax. A doctrine covering acquisitive reorganizations whereby a target corporation's shareholders must retain a share in the acquiring corporation to qualify the acquisition as a tax-deferred transaction. 2. A judicial requirement for divisive reorganizations whereby a target corporation's shareholders must retain an interest in both the distributing and the controlled corporations to qualify the exchange as a tax-deferred transaction. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3677.]

continuity-of-life doctrine. The principle that the withdrawal, incapacity, bankruptcy, or death of the owner of an entity (esp. a corporation) does not end the entity's existence. — Also termed continuity of existence. [Cases: Corporations ⇨36.]

continuous-adverse-use principle. The rule that the uninterrupted use of land — along with the other elements of adverse possession — will result in a successful claim for adverse possession. — Also termed uninterrupted-adverse-use principle. See ADVERSE POSSESSION. [Cases: Adverse Possession ↷44.]

continuous crime. See CRIME.

continuous easement. See EASEMENT.

continuous injury. See continual injury under INJURY.

continuous-operations clause. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease giving the lessee the right to continue any drilling well that was begun before the lease expired and to begin drilling more wells. See OPERATIONS CLAUSE. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷78.1(9).]

continuous policy. See INSURANCE POLICY.

continuous-representation doctrine. The principle that the limitations period for bringing a legal-malpractice action is tolled as long as the lawyer against whom the action is brought continues the representation that is related to the negligent act or omission. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↷55(3).] continuous servitude. See continuous easement under EASEMENT.

continuous-treatment doctrine. (1962) The principle that the limitations period for bringing a medical-malpractice action is tolled while the patient continues treatment that is related to the negligent act or omission. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↷55(3).] continuous trigger. See TRIPLE TRIGGER.

contio (kon-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A public meeting to which participants have been summoned by a magistrate. 2. A speech delivered at a public meeting. — Also spelled concio. Pl. contiones (kon-shee-oh-nee-z).

contor. See COUNTER.

contort (kon-tort), n. 1. (usu. pl.) The overlapping domain of contract law and tort law.

"I have occasionally suggested to my students that a desirable reform in legal education would be to merge the first-year courses in Contracts and Torts into a single course which we could call Contorts." Grant Gilmore, The Death of Contract 90 (1974).

2. A specific wrong that falls within that domain. 3. Informal. A constitutional tort. See constitutional tort under TORT.

contra (kon-trə), prep. (15c) Against or contrary to. • As a citation signal, contra denotes that the cited authority supports a contrary view. In old law reports, contra often identifies the defendant's attorney (pro querente refers to the plaintiff's).

"Observe in the note citing cases in support of a proposition mentioned in the text whether any of the cases follow the word contra, which means that a contrary rule has been laid down in them." Frank Hall Childs, Where and How to Find the Law 78–79 (1922).

contra account. See ACCOUNT.

contraband (kon-trə-band), n. (16c) 1. Illegal or prohibited trade; smuggling. 2. Goods that are unlawful to import, export, produce, or possess. — contraband, adj.

absolute contraband. Goods used primarily for war, such as arms and ammunition, as well as clothing and equipment of a military character.

conditional contraband. Goods susceptible of being used for warlike and peaceful purposes, such as coal and food. — Also termed ancipitis usus (an-sip-i-təs yoo-səs).

contraband per se. Property whose possession is unlawful regardless of how it is used. Cf. derivative contraband.

derivative contraband. Property whose possession becomes unlawful when it is used in committing an illegal act. Cf. contraband per se.

contra bonos mores (kon-trə boh-nohs mor-eez). [Latin "against good morals"] Offensive to the conscience and to a sense of justice. • Contracts contra bonos mores are voidable. — Also termed contra bonos mores et decorum; adversus bonos mores.

"Whatever is contra bonos mores et decorum, the principles of our law prohibit, and the King's court, as the general censor and guardian of the public manners, is bound to restrain and punish." Jones v. Randall, 98 E.R. 706, 707 (1774) (per Mansfield, C.J.). contracausator (kon-trə-kaw-zay-tər). Hist. A criminal; a person prosecuted for a crime.

contraceptivism. Hist. The criminal offense of distributing or prescribing contraceptives.

contract, n. (14c) 1. An agreement between two or more parties creating obligations that are enforceable or otherwise recognizable at law . [Cases: Contracts ↷1.] 2. The writing that sets forth such an agreement .

"The term contract has been used indifferently to refer to three different things: (1) the series of operative acts by the parties resulting in new legal relations; (2) the physical document executed by the parties as the lasting evidence of their having performed the necessary operative acts and also as an operative fact in itself; (3) the legal relations resulting from the operative acts, consisting of a right or rights in personam and their corresponding duties, accompanied by certain powers, privileges, and immunities. The sum of these legal relations is often called 'obligation.' The present editor prefers to define contract in sense (3) . . ." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 13 n.2 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"A contract is a promise, or a set of promises, for breach of which the law gives a remedy, or the performance of which the law in some way recognizes as a duty. This definition may not be entirely satisfactory since it requires a subsequent definition of the circumstances under which the law does in fact attach legal obligation to promises. But if a definition were attempted which should cover these operative facts, it would require compressing the entire law relating to the formation of contracts into a single sentence." Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 1, at 1–2 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957) (footnote omitted).

"The term 'contract' is also used by lay persons and lawyers alike to refer to a document in which the terms of a contract are written. Use of the word in this sense is by no means improper so long as it is clearly understood that rules of law utilizing the concept 'contract' rarely refer to the writing itself. Usually, the reference is to the agreement; the writing being merely a memorial of the agreement." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 1.1, at 3 (4th ed. 1998).

"The promissory element present in every contract is stressed in a widely quoted definition: 'A contract is a promise, or set of promises, for breach of which the law gives a remedy, or the performance of which the law in some way recognizes as a duty.' [1 Samuel Williston, Contracts § 1.1 (4th ed. 1990).] This, like similar definitions, is somewhat misleading. While it is true that a promise, express or implied, is a necessary element in every contract, frequently the promise is coupled with other elements such as physical acts, recitals of fact, and the immediate transfer of property interests. In ordinary usage the contract is not the promise alone, but the entire complex of these elements." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 1.1, at 1-2 (4th ed. 1998).

4. Broadly, any legal duty or set of duties not imposed by the law of tort; esp., a duty created by a decree or declaration of a court <an obligation of record, as a judgment, recognizance, or the like, is included within the term "contract">. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 1.] 5. The body of law dealing with agreements and exchange <the general theory of contract>. 6. The terms of an agreement, or any particular term <there was no express contract about when the money was payable>. 7. Loosely, a sale or conveyance.

"Sometimes the word 'contract' is used to designate a transaction involving the exchange of goods or land for money. When money is exchanged for goods, this constitutes a sale. When money is exchanged for land, this constitutes a conveyance. Sales and conveyances may be the result of a previous contract but they are not the contracts in themselves. There is no undertaking or commitment to do or refrain from doing anything in the future. This indispensable element of contract is missing." John Edward Murray Jr., Murray on Contracts § 2, at 5 (2d ed. 1974).

8. Loosely, an enforceable agreement between two or more parties to do or not to do a thing or set of things; a compact <when they finally agreed, they had a contract>. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 1.] — contract, vb. — contractual, adj.

absolute simulated contract. Civil law. A simulated contract that the parties intend to be wholly ineffective. La. Civ. Code art. 2026. See simulated contract. [Cases: Fraudulent Conveyances ⇨ 1, 24(1).]

accessory contract. A contract entered into primarily for the purpose of carrying out a principal contract. • The principal types are suretyship, indemnity, pledge, warranty, and ratification. Cf. principal contract.

adhesion contract. (1949) A standard-form contract prepared by one party, to be signed by another party in a weaker position, usu. a consumer, who adheres to the contract with little choice about the terms. — Also termed contract of adhesion; adhesive contract; adhesory contract; adhesionary contract; take-it-or-leave-it contract; leonine contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 1.]

"Some sets of trade and professional forms are extremely one-sided, grossly favoring one interest group against others, and are commonly referred to as contracts of adhesion. From weakness in bargaining position, ignorance, or indifference, unfavored parties are willing to enter transactions controlled by these lopsided legal documents." Quintin Johnstone & Dan Hopson Jr., Lawyers and Their Work 329-30 (1967).

"Dangers are inherent in standardization . . . for it affords a means by which one party may impose terms on another unwitting or even unwilling party. Several circumstances facilitate this imposition. First, the party that proffers the form has had the advantage of time and expert advice in preparing it, almost inevitably producing a form slanted in its favor. Second, the other party is usually completely or at least relatively unfamiliar with the form and has scant opportunity to read it — an opportunity often diminished by the use of fine print and convoluted clauses. Third, bargaining over terms of the form may not be between equals or, as is more often the case, there may be no possibility of bargaining at all. The form may be used by an enterprise with such disproportionately strong economic power that it simply dictates the terms. Or the form may be a take-it-or-leave-it proposition, often called a contract of adhesion, under which the only alternative to complete adherence is outright rejection." E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 4.26, at 296-97 (3d ed. 1999).

aleatory contract (ay-lee-ə-tor-ee). [fr. Latin aleator "gambler," fr. alea "the throwing of dice"] (1891) A contract in which at least one party's performance depends on some uncertain event that is beyond the control of the parties involved. • Most insurance contracts and life annuities are of this type. — Also termed hazardous contract; wagering contract. Cf. certain contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 218; Insurance ⇨ 1713.]

"A contract is aleatory when, because of the nature or according to the parties' intent, the performance of either party's obligation, or the extent of the performance, depends on an uncertain event." La. Civ. Code art. 1912.

alternative contract. (1871) A contract in which the performing party may elect to perform one of two or more specified acts to satisfy the obligation; a contract that provides more than one way for a party to complete performance, usu. permitting that party to choose the manner of performance. — Also termed alternative-methods-of-performance contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 172.]

assessment contract. A contract in which the payment of a benefit is dependent on the collection of an assessment levied on persons holding similar contracts. See assessment insurance under INSURANCE. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2080.]

best-efforts contract. A contract in which a party undertakes to use best efforts to fulfill the promises made rather than to achieve a specific result; a contract in which the adequacy of a party's performance is measured by the party's ability to fulfill the specified obligations. • Although the obligor must use best efforts, the risk of failure lies with the obligee. To be enforceable, a best-efforts term must generally set some kind of goal or guideline against which the efforts may be measured. See BEST EFFORTS. [Cases: Contracts ↻189.]

bilateral contract. (1866) A contract in which each party promises a performance, so that each party is an obligor on that party's own promise and an obligee on the other's promise; a contract in which the parties obligate themselves reciprocally, so that the obligation of one party is correlative to the obligation of the other. — Also termed mutual contract; reciprocal contract; (in civil law) synallagmatic contract. See COUNTERPROMISE. [Cases: Contracts ↻1, 10(1).]

"In a bilateral contract a promise, or set of promises on one side, is exchanged for a promise or a set of promises on the other side. In a unilateral contract, on the other hand, a promise on one side is exchanged for an act (or a forbearance) on the other side. Typical examples of bilateral contracts are contracts of sale, the buyer promising to pay the price and the seller promising to deliver the goods. A typical example of a unilateral contract is a promise of a reward for the finding of lost property followed by the actual finding of the property." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 32 (3d ed. 1981).

blanket contract. A contract covering a group of products, goods, or services for a fixed period.

bona fide contract (boh-nə fīd or fī-dee). A contract in which equity may intervene to correct inequalities and to adjust matters according to the parties' intentions.

build-to-print contract. A contract requiring the contractor to build a product according to exact technical specifications provided by the customer. • The design specifications are explicit and are often coupled with performance specifications, so the contractor has little discretion in how to perform. Much governmental contracting is build-to-print. — Also termed design-specification contract. Cf. performance contract (1).

certain contract. (17c) A contract that will be performed in a stipulated manner. Cf. aleatory contract.

collateral contract. (1809) A side agreement that relates to a contract, which, if unintegrated, can be supplemented by evidence of the side agreement; an agreement made before or at the same time as, but separately from, another contract. See COLLATERAL-CONTRACT DOCTRINE. [Cases: Evidence ↻440.]

"The term 'collateral contract' has no very precise meaning in the law. It is generally used as a label for a contract which is collateral, or by the side of, another contract. A great many examples of implied or constructive contracts created by the Courts are collateral in a broad sense. . . . [A]lthough the normal presumption is that the parties intend a written contract to be exclusive evidence of their intentions, it is always open to a party to show that in fact the writing did not exclusively represent their intentions, because of a 'collateral' contract made during the negotiations but not incorporated in the written instrument." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 80-81, 161 (3d ed. 1981).

commutative contract (kə-myoo-tə-tiv or kəm-yə-tay-tiv). 1. Civil law. A contract in which, at the time it is formed, the parties' obligations and advantages are certain and determinate. • This definition applied in Louisiana law before the civil code was revised in 1984. 2. Louisiana law. A contract in which one party's performance is correlative to the performance of the other, so that nonperformance by either affords a defense to the other. La. Civ. Code art. 1911. Cf. independent contract; synallagmatic contract.

conditional contract. An agreement that is enforceable only if another agreement is performed or if another particular prerequisite or condition is satisfied. — Also termed hypothetical contract. [Cases: Contracts ↻218.]

consensual contract. Hist. A contract arising from the mere consensus of the parties, without any formal or symbolic acts performed to fix the obligation. • Although the consensual contract was known to the common law, it originated in Roman law, where it embraced four types of contracts in which informal consent alone was sufficient: (1) an agency agreement (mandatum), (2) a partnership agreement (societas), (3) a sale (emptio venditio), or (4) a letting or hiring (locatio conductio). Cf. real contract.

"[T]he peculiarity of these Consensual Contracts is that no formalities are required to create them out of the Pact. Much that is indefensible, and much more that is obscure, has been written about the Consensual Contracts, and it has even been asserted that in them the consent of the Parties is more emphatically given than in any other species of agreement. But the Consensual merely indicates that the Obligation is here annexed at once to the Consensus. The Consensus, or mutual assent of the parties, is the final and crowning ingredient in the Convention, and it is the special characteristic of agreements falling under one of the four heads of Sale, Partnership, Agency, and Hiring, that, as soon as the assent of the parties has supplied this ingredient, there is at once a Contract. The Consensus draws with it the Obligation, performing, in transactions of the sort specified, the exact functions which are discharged, in the other contracts, by the Res or Thing . . ." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 322-23 (10th ed. 1884).

construction contract. A contract setting forth the specifications for a building project's construction. • This type of contract is usu. secured by performance and payment bonds to protect both the owner and the subcontractors. [Cases: Contracts ↻198.] constructive contract. See implied-in-law contract.

continuing contract. A contract calling for periodic performances. [Cases: Contracts ↻216.]

contract for deed. (1825) A conditional sales contract for the sale of real property. — Also termed installment land contract; land sales contract; land contract. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ↻54.]

contract for sale. (1808) 1. A contract for the present transfer of property for a price. — Also termed contract of sale. [Cases: Sales ↻1(1).] 2. A contract to sell goods at a future time. — Also termed (in sense 2) contract to sell.

contract implied in fact. See implied-in-fact contract.

contract implied in law. See implied-in-law contract.

contract of adhesion. See adhesion contract.

contract of beneficence. See gratuitous contract.

contract of indemnity. See indemnity contract.

contract of marriage. See marriage contract.

contract of record. A contract that is declared by a court and entered into the court's record. • Contracts of record include judgments, recognizances, and (in England) statutes staple.

"Contracts of record are not really contracts at all, but are transactions which, being entered on the records of certain courts called 'courts of record,' are conclusive proof of the facts thereby appearing, and could formerly be enforced by action of law as if they had been put in the shape of a contract." 1 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 282 (1883).

"A contract of record is in point of fact no contract at all, and has nothing whatever to do with the law of contracts. These so-called contracts are the obligations incurred by a judgment or recognizance of a Court of Record. They came to be called contracts only because they were enforceable by the same type of action as was used for genuinely contractual cases in the old common-law system of procedure." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 31 (3d ed. 1981).

contract to pledge. 1. An agreement purporting to create a present pledge without a bailment. [Cases: Pledges ⇨ 11.] 2. An agreement to make a future bailment for the purpose of security. See PLEDGE (3).

contract to satisfaction. See satisfaction contract.

contract uberrimae fidei (yoo-ber-ə-mee fi-dee-1). A contract in which the parties owe each other duties with the utmost good faith. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 1867, 2996.]

"In a certain restricted group of contracts good faith is peculiarly necessary owing to the relationship between the parties, and in these cases — known as contracts uberrimae fidei — there is a full duty to disclose all material facts. The typical instance of such contracts is the contract of insurance. Here the duty to disclose all material facts to the insurer arises from the fact that many of the relevant circumstances are within the exclusive knowledge of one party, and it would be impossible for the insurer to obtain the facts necessary for him to make a proper calculation of the risk he is asked to assume without this knowledge." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 221–22 (3d ed. 1981).

contract under seal. A formal contract that requires no consideration and has the seal of the signer attached.

"The only formal contract of English law is the contract under seal, sometimes also called a deed and sometimes a specialty. It is the only formal contract, because it derives its validity neither from the fact of agreement, nor from the consideration which may exist for the promise of either party, but from the form in which it is expressed." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 82 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"Contracts under seal also bear little resemblance to ordinary contracts, although here at least the liability is based on a promise. A contract under seal, that is to say a deed, . . . is a written promise or set of promises which derives its validity from the form, and the form alone, of the executing instrument. In point of fact the 'form' of the deed is nowadays surprisingly elastic. The only necessities are that the deed should be intended as such, and should be signed, sealed, and delivered. The sealing, however, has now become largely a fiction, an adhesive wafer simply being attached to the document in place of a genuine seal. Similarly, 'delivery' is not literally necessary, provided that there is a clear intention that the deed should be operative." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 31 (3d ed. 1981).

cost-plus contract. (1920) A contract in which payment is based on a fixed fee or a percentage added to the actual cost incurred. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 229(2).]

de facto contract of sale. A contract that purports to pass property but is defective in some element.

dependent contract. A contract conditioned or dependent on another contract.

deposit contract. An agreement between a financial institution and its customer governing the treatment of deposited funds and the payment of checks and other demands against the customer's account. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⇨ 133, 137–155.]

design-specification contract. See build-to-print contract.

destination contract. (1958) A contract in which a seller bears the risk of loss until the goods arrive at the destination. UCC § 2-509. Cf. shipment contract. [Cases: Sales ⇨ 201(4).] discharged contract. See void contract (2).

divisible contract. See severable contract.

entity (such as a lender) as to the terms of the parties' actual agreement.

employment contract. (1927) A contract between an employer and employee in which the terms and conditions of employment are stated. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷31.]

engineering, procurement, and construction contract. A fixed-price, schedule-intensive construction contract — typical in the construction of single-purpose projects, such as energy plants — in which the contractor agrees to a wide variety of responsibilities, including the duties to provide for the design, engineering, procurement, and construction of the facility; to prepare start-up procedures; to conduct performance tests; to create operating manuals; and to train people to operate the facility. — Abbr. EPC contract. — Also termed turnkey contract. See SINGLE-PURPOSE PROJECT.

entire-output contract. See output contract.

escrow contract. The contract among buyer, seller, and escrow holder, setting forth the rights and responsibilities of each. See ESCROW. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows ↷13, 15.]

evergreen contract. A contract that renews itself from one term to the next in the absence of contrary notice by one of the parties.

exclusive contract. See EXCLUSIVE-DEALING ARRANGEMENT.

executed contract. (18c) 1. A contract that has been fully performed by both parties. 2. A signed contract. [Cases: Contracts ↷6; Sales ↷197; Vendor and Purchaser ↷53.]

executory contract (eg-zek-yə-tor-ee). (18c) 1. A contract that remains wholly unperformed or for which there remains something still to be done on both sides, often as a component of a larger transaction and sometimes memorialized by an informal letter agreement, by a memorandum, or by oral agreement. [Cases: Contracts ↷6; Sales ↷197; Vendor and Purchaser ↷53.]

"If a contract is wholly executory, and the legal duties of the parties are as yet unfulfilled, it can be discharged by mutual consent, the acquittance of each from the other's claims being the consideration for the promise of each to waive his own." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 138 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

2. Bankruptcy. A contract under which debtor and nondebtor each have unperformed obligations and the debtor, if it ceased further performance, would have no right to the other party's continued performance. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↷3106.]

express contract. (17c) A contract whose terms the parties have explicitly set out. — Also termed special contract. Cf. implied contract. [Cases: Contracts ↷3.]

financial contract. Securities. An arrangement that (1) takes the form of an individually negotiated contract, agreement, or option to buy, sell, lend, swap, or repurchase, or other similar individually negotiated transaction commonly entered into by participants in the financial markets; (2) involves securities, commodities, currencies, interest or other rates, other measures of value, or any other financial or economic interest similar in purpose or function; and (3) is entered into in response to a request from a counterparty for a quotation, or is otherwise entered into and structured to accommodate the objectives of the counterparty to such an arrangement.

fixed-price contract. A contract in which the buyer agrees to pay the seller a definite and predetermined price regardless of increases in the seller's cost or the buyer's ability to acquire the same goods in the market at a lower price. [Cases: Sales ↷77.]

formal contract. A contract made through the observance of certain prescribed formalities. • Among the formal contracts are the contract under seal, the recognizance, the negotiable instrument, and the letter of credit. Cf. informal contract; formal agreement under AGREEMENT. [Cases: Contracts ↷30.]

forward contract. An agreement to buy or sell a particular nonstandardized asset (usu. currencies) at a fixed price on a future date. • Unlike a futures contract, a forward contract is not traded on a formal exchange. — Also termed forward agreement. Cf. FUTURES CONTRACT. [Cases: Commodity Futures Trading Regulation ↷10.]

gambling contract. An agreement to engage in a gamble; a contract in which two parties wager something, esp. money, for a chance to win a prize. • Where gambling is legal, contracts related to legal gambling activities are enforceable. — Also termed gaming contract. See wagering contract. [Cases: Gaming ↷10, 25.]

"Generally, under or apart from statutes so providing, or prohibiting such contracts or transactions, gambling contracts and transactions are illegal and void and cannot be enforced; and such contracts are void ab initio. . . . A gambling contract is invalid, no matter what outward form it may assume, and no ingenuity can make it legal." 38 C.J.S. Gaming § 26, at 138-39 (1996).

government contract. A contract to which a government or government agency is a party, esp. for the purchase of goods and services. See procurement contract.

gratuitous contract (grə-t[y]oo-i-təs). 1. A contract made for the benefit of a promisee who does not give consideration to the promisor. — Also termed contract of beneficence; contract of benevolence. Cf. onerous contract. 2. Civil law. A contract in which one party promises to give a benefit to the other party without expecting or gaining any benefit in return. — Also termed voluntary contract.

grubstake contract. A contract between two parties in which one party provides the grubstake — money and supplies — and the other party prospectors for and locates minerals on public land. • Each party acquires an interest in the minerals as agreed to in the contract. Grubstake contracts are used chiefly in the western United States. In some states, such as Alaska, a request for grubstake money is considered the offer of a security and must be registered. — Also termed grubstaking contract. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨ 101.]

guaranteed-sale contract. A contract between a real-estate agency and a property owner in which the agency agrees to buy the property at a guaranteed price after a specified length of time if it has not been sold under the listing agreement. • The guaranteed price is usu. a substantial discount from the listed price. — Also termed guaranteed-purchase contract.

guaranty contract. See GUARANTY (1).

hazardous contract. See aleatory contract.

illegal contract. (18c) A promise that is prohibited because the performance, formation, or object of the agreement is against the law. • Technically speaking, an illegal contract is not a contract at all because it cannot be enforced, so the phrase is a misnomer. Cf. unenforceable contract; void contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 103.]

"An illegal contract is exceptionally difficult to define. It does not merely mean a contract contrary to the criminal law, although such a contract would indubitably be illegal. But a contract can well be illegal without contravening the criminal law, because there are certain activities which the law does not actually prohibit, but at the same time regards as contrary to the public interest and definitely to be discouraged, for instance, prostitution. While a void contract is not necessarily illegal, an illegal contract is often void. However, the consequences of an illegal contract differ somewhat from those usually produced by a simply void contract, so illegal contracts are usually accorded separate treatment." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 38 (3d ed. 1981).

illusory contract. (18c) An agreement in which one party gives as consideration a promise that is so insubstantial as to impose no obligation. • The insubstantial promise renders the agreement unenforceable. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 10.]

immoral contract. An agreement that so flagrantly violates societal norms as to be unenforceable. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 112.]

implied contract. (17c) 1. An implied-in-law contract. [Cases: Implied and Constructive Contracts ⇨ 1.] 2. An implied-in-fact contract. Cf. express contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 27.]

implied-in-fact contract. A contract that the parties presumably intended as their tacit understanding, as inferred from their conduct and other circumstances. — Also termed contract implied in fact. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 27.]

implied-in-law contract. An obligation created by law for the sake of justice; specif., an obligation imposed by law because of some special relationship between the parties or because one of them would otherwise be unjustly enriched. • An implied-in-law contract is not actually a contract, but instead is a remedy that allows the plaintiff to recover a benefit conferred on the defendant. — Also termed contract implied in law; quasi-contract; constructive contract. See UNJUST ENRICHMENT. [Cases: Implied and Constructive Contracts ⇨ 1.]

"[A]dventurous courts have turned to the idea of a 'contract implied in law,' a 'quasi-contract' — not really a contract, a legal fiction necessary to promote the ends of justice and, in particular, to prevent 'unjust enrichment.'" Grant Gilmore, The Death of Contract 73-74 (1974).

impossible contract. An agreement that the law will not enforce because there is no feasible way for one of the parties to perform. See IMPOSSIBILITY (3). [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 309.]

indemnity contract. A contract by which the promisor agrees to reimburse a promisee for some loss irrespective of a third person's liability. — Also termed contract of indemnity. [Cases: Indemnity ⇨ 25.]

independent contract. A contract in which the mutual acts or promises of the parties have no relation to each other, either as equivalents or as considerations. Cf. commutative contract.

informal contract. 1. A contract other than one under seal, a recognizance, or a negotiable instrument; specif., that derives its force not from the observance of formalities but because of the presence in the transaction of certain elements that are usu. present when people make promises with binding intent — namely mutual assent and consideration (or a device other than consideration). • An informal contract may be made with or without a writing. Most modern contracts are informal. — Also termed bargain; simple contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 1.] 2. See parol contract.

innominate contract (i-nom-ə-nit). Roman & civil law. A contract not classifiable under any particular name; a contract for which the law supplies nothing in addition to the express agreement of the parties. La. Civ. Code art. 1914. • This type of contract was developed late in classical Roman law. Although the agreements were reciprocal, they did not become operational without at least part performance. — Also termed innominate real contract. Cf. nominate contract.

installment contract. (1896) A contract requiring or authorizing the delivery of goods in separate lots, or payments in separate increments, to be separately accepted. • Under the UCC, this type of agreement will be considered one contract even if it has a clause stating that each delivery is a separate contract. UCC § 2-612. [Cases: Sales ⇨ 163, 192.]

invalid contract. An agreement that is either void or voidable. — Also termed invalid agreement. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 98.]

investment contract. See INVESTMENT CONTRACT.

joint contract. A contract in which two or more promisors are together bound to fulfill its obligations, or one in which two or more promisees are together entitled to performance. Cf. severable contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 181.]

land sales contract. See contract for deed.

letter contract. In federal contract law, a written contract with sufficient provisions to permit the contractor to begin performance. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 26.]

literal contract. 1. Roman law. A type of written contract originally created by — and later evidenced by — an entry of the sum due on the debit side of a ledger, binding a signatory even though the signatory receives no consideration. • Literal contracts were often used for novations. See LITTERIS OBLIGATIO.

"Though an obligation could be created by a literal contract in the time of Gaius, the so-called literal contract of Justinian was not, in itself, a means of creating an obligation, but was the evidence of an obligation created in some other way The true literal contract, as described by Gaius, may be defined as a means of creating an obligation to pay money by a fictitious entry . . . in the creditor's account book . . . with the consent of the intended debtor. A, with B's consent, enters the fact that B is indebted to him . . . and thereupon B is under an obligation to pay, though no money has passed between them." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 316-17 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

2. Civil law. A contract fully evidenced by a writing and binding on the signatory.

marine contract. See maritime contract.

maritime contract. A contract that is recognized in admiralty jurisdiction. • In general, a maritime contract relates to a vessel in its use as such, to navigation on navigable waters, to transportation by sea, or to maritime employment. — Also termed marine contract.

marketing contract. 1. A business's agreement with an agency or other association for the promotion of sales of the business's goods or services. 2. An agreement between a cooperative and its members, by which the members agree to sell through the cooperative, and the cooperative agrees to obtain an agreed price.

marriage contract. A form of mutual consent required for a matrimonial relationship to exist according to the law of the place where the consent takes place. — Also termed contract of marriage. [Cases: Marriage ⇨ 1, 18-20(2).]

mixed contract. 1. Civil law. A contract in which the respective benefits conferred are unequal. 2. A contract for both the sale of goods and services. • The UCC may apply to a mixed contract if the predominant purpose is for the sale of goods. [Cases: Sales ⇨ 3.1.]

nominate contract (nom-ə-nit). Civil law. A contract distinguished by a particular name, such as sale, insurance, or lease, the very use of which determines some of the rules governing the contract and the contractual rights of the parties, without the need for special stipulations. • The contracts are generally divided into four types: (1) real (arising from something done), (2) oral (arising from something said), (3) literal (arising from something written), and (4) consensual (arising from something agreed to). La. Civ. Code art. 1914. Cf. innominate contract.

onerous contract. Civil law. A contract in which each party is obligated to perform in exchange for each party's promise of performance. La. Civ. Code art. 1909. Cf. gratuitous contract.

output contract. (1904) A contract in which a seller promises to supply and a buyer to buy all the goods or services that a seller produces during a specified period and at a set price. • The quantity term is measured by the seller's output. An output contract assures the seller of a market or outlet for the period of the contract. — Also termed entire-output contract. Cf. requirements contract. [Cases: Sales ⇨ 71(4).]

parol contract (pə-rohl or par-əl). (18c) 1. A contract or modification of a contract that is not in writing or is only partially in writing. — Also termed oral contract; parol agreement; (loosely) verbal contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 31, 238(2).] 2. At common law, a contract not under seal, although it could be in writing. — Also termed informal contract; simple contract. See PAROL-EVIDENCE RULE.

pay-or-play contract. A contract in which one party agrees to perform and the other agrees to pay for the promised performance even if performance is never performance contract. 1. A contract that requires a party to act personally and does not allow substitution. • People who provide unique personal services often make performance contracts. 2. A contract that allows the contractor to choose the means to achieve the end result. • The product's specifications may be loose and allow the contractor latitude in deciding how to perform. Cf. build-to-print contract.

personal contract. 1. A contract that binds a person but not that person's heirs or assignees because the contract requires a personal performance for which there is no adequate substitute. [Cases: Assignments ⇨ 19.] 2. A contract that binds a representative as an individual rather than binding the person or entity represented. • For instance, contracts made by a decedent's personal representative traditionally bind the representative, not the estate, unless expressly agreed otherwise. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ⇨ 95.] 3. A real-property-related contract that is treated as personal property, not as a substitute for the real property. • Examples include oil-and-gas royalty contracts and property-insurance policies.

pignorative contract (pig-nə-ray-tiv). Civil law. A contract in which the seller of real property, instead of relinquishing possession of the property that is theoretically sold, gives the buyer a lien; a contract of pledge, hypothecation, or mortgage of realty. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨ 31.]

precontract. (15c) A contract that precludes a party from entering into a comparable agreement with someone else. • Historically, a precontract was usu. a promise to marry. It formed an impediment to marriage with any person other than the promisee. The legal impediment was extinguished and revived several times until it was finally abolished in 1752 by 26 Geo. 2, ch. 33, § 13. Cf. LETTER OF INTENT. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 25.]

principal contract. A contract giving rise to an accessory contract, as an agreement from which a secured obligation originates. Cf. accessory contract.

private contract. An agreement between private parties affecting only private rights.

procurement contract. A contract in which a government receives goods or services. • A procurement contract, including the bidding process, is usu. subject to government regulation. — Also termed government contract. See FEDERAL ACQUISITION REGULATION. [Cases: Public Contracts ⇨ 5.]

public contract. A contract that, although it involves public funds, may be performed by private persons and may benefit them. [Cases: Public Contracts ⇨ 1.] quasi-contract. See implied-in-law contract.

real contract. Hist. A contract in which money or other property passes from one party to another; a contract requiring something more than mere consent, such as the lending of money or handing over of a thing. • This term, derived from Roman law, referred to contracts concerning both personal and real property. Real contracts included transactions in the form of commodatum, depositum, mutuum, and pignus. Cf. consensual contract.

"The essence of . . . the real contracts, was that, at the time the agreement was made, one party, by delivering something belonging to him to the other party to the contract, imposed on that other an obligation to return the thing itself or, in the case of things intended to be consumed, an equivalent in kind. As the Roman lawyers expressed it, the contractual obligation was created by something being handed over . . ." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 292 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

"The term 'real contract' is in common use in the Civil law, and though not commonly used by judges or writers in the common law, nevertheless describes certain obligations enforced in England from very early times. A real contract is an obligation arising from the possession or transfer of a res." Samuel Williston, A Treatise on the Law of Contracts § 8, at 19 (Walter H.E. Jaeger ed., 3d ed. 1957).

relative simulated contract. Civil law. A simulated contract that the parties intend to have some effects, but not necessarily those recited in the contract. La. Civ. Code art. 2027. See simulated contract. [Cases: Fraudulent Conveyances ⇨ 1, 24(1).]

requirements contract. (1932) A contract in which a buyer promises to buy and a seller to supply all the goods or services that a buyer needs during a specified period. • The quantity term is measured by the buyer's requirements. A requirements contract assures the buyer of a source for the period of the contract. Cf. output contract. [Cases: Sales ⇨ 71(4).]

retail installment contract. A contract for the sale of goods under which the buyer makes periodic payments and the seller retains title to or a security interest in the goods. — Also termed retail installment contract and security agreement; conditional sales contract. Cf. chattel mortgage under MORTGAGE. [Cases: Consumer Credit ⇨ 4.]

satisfaction contract. A contract by which one party agrees to perform to the satisfaction of the other. — Also termed contract to satisfaction. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 282.]

sealed contract. See contract under seal.

self-determination contract. Under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, an agreement under which the federal government provides funds to an Indian tribe and allows the tribe to plan and administer a program that would otherwise be administered by the federal government. 25 USCA § 450b(j). [Cases: Indians ⇨ 139.]

service contract. A contract to perform a service; esp., a written agreement to provide maintenance or repairs

severable contract. (1854) A contract that includes two or more promises each of which can be enforced separately, so that failure to perform one of the promises does not necessarily put the promisor in breach of the entire contract. — Also termed divisible contract; several contract. See SEVERABILITY CLAUSE. Cf. joint contract. [Cases: Contracts ↻137, 171.]

"A severable contract . . . is one the consideration of which is, by its terms, susceptible of apportionment on either side, so as to correspond to the unascertained consideration on the other side, as a contract to pay a person the worth of his services so long as he will do certain work; or to give a certain price for every bushel of so much corn as corresponds to a sample." Ivan Horniman, Wharton's Law Lexicon 215 (13th ed. 1925).

shipment contract. (1893) A contract in which a seller bears the risk of damage to the items sold only until they are brought to the place of shipment. • If a contract for the sale of goods does not address the terms of delivery, it is presumed to be a shipment contract. UCC §§ 2-319, 2-504, 2-509. Cf. destination contract. [Cases: Sales ↻201(4).]

"In the jargon of commercial lawyers, a contract that requires or authorizes the seller to send the goods to the buyer but does not require that he deliver them at any particular destination is called a 'shipment contract.' Generally, in shipment contracts, risk of loss passes to the buyer at the point of shipment, which is also the point of 'delivery,' while in 'destination contracts' (seller must deliver at a particular destination) risk passes upon seller's tender at destination." 1 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 3-5, at 128-29 (4th ed. 1995).

simulated contract. Civil law. A contract that, by mutual agreement, does not express the true intent of the parties. La. Civ. Code art. 2025. • A simulated contract is absolute when the parties intend that the contract will impose no obligations; no obligations are enforceable on the parties by such a contract. A simulated contract is relative if the parties intend it to impose obligations different from those recited in the contract; the intended obligations are enforceable if all relevant conditions are met. A simulated contract may affect the rights of third parties. See action en déclaration de simulation under ACTION (4). — Also termed simulation. [Cases: Fraudulent Conveyances ↻1, 24(1).] special contract. 1. See contract under seal. 2. A contract with peculiar provisions that are not ordinarily found in contracts relating to the same subject matter. 3. See express contract.

specialty contract. See contract under seal.

standard-form contract. (1923) A usu. preprinted contract containing set clauses, used repeatedly by a business or within a particular industry with only slight additions or modifications to meet the specific situation. • Because standard-form contracts usu.

favor the drafting party, they can amount to adhesion contracts. Courts offset the drafting party's advantage by construing the contract in the light least favorable to the drafting party. — Also termed standardized contract. See adhesion contract. [Cases: Contracts ↻1.]

"[U]niformity of terms in contracts typically recurring in a business enterprise is an important factor in the exact calculation of risks. Risks that are difficult to calculate can be excluded altogether. Unforeseeable contingencies affecting performance, such as strikes, fire, and transportation difficulties can be taken care of. . . . Standardized contracts have thus become an important means of excluding or controlling the ['irrational factors' that could persuade a court or jury to decide against a powerful defendant]." Friedrich Kessler, Contracts of Adhesion — Some Thoughts About Freedom of Contract, 43 Colum. L. Rev. 629, 631-32 (1943).

statutory contract. A contract for which a statute prescribes certain terms. • Statutes often govern the contracts made by public entities, but also some by private persons. For example, a statute may define and set minimum standards for terms in home-improvement contracts.

stock-option contract. A negotiable instrument that gives the holder the right to buy or sell — for a specified price within a fixed time limit — a certain number of shares of the corporation's stock. See STOCK OPTION. [Cases: Corporations ↻116.]

subcontract. (18c) A secondary contract made by a party to the primary contract for carrying out the primary contract, or a part of it.

subscription contract. See SUBSCRIPTION (3).

substituted contract. A contract made between parties to an earlier contract so that the new one takes the place of and discharges the earlier one. • A substituted contract differs from a novation (as "novation" is traditionally defined) in that the latter requires the substitution for the original obligor of a third person not a party to the original agreement; when the obligee accepts the third party, the agreement is immediately discharged. In contrast to both substituted contract and novation, an executory accord does not immediately discharge an obligation; rather, the obligation is discharged on performance, often by a third person, rather than the original obligor. Cf. NOVIATION; ACCORD (2). [Cases: Accord and Satisfaction ↻1; Novation ↻1, 4.]

"[A] substituted contract immediately discharges the prior claim which is merged into the new agreement. Consequently, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, the original claim can no longer be enforced. In the event of a breach, any action would have to be brought on the substituted agreement. . . . The concept of 'substituted contract' was created largely to circumvent the unsatisfactory rules that until recently governed executory accords. Now that these rules have been modernized, the next step should be the reabsorption of the substituted contract into the executory accord. . . . [T]he untidy distinction between executory accords and substituted contracts should not be allowed to complicate litigation about routine claim settlements." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 21.6, at 803 (4th ed. 1998).

synallagmatic contract (sin-ə-lag-mat-ik). [fr. Greek synallagma "mutual agreement"] Civil law. A contract in which the parties obligate themselves reciprocally, so that the obligation of each party is correlative to the obligation of the other. La. Civ. Code arts. 1908, 1911.

• A synallagmatic contract is characterized by correlative obligations, whereas a commutative contract is characterized by correlative performances. The term synallagmatic contract is essentially the civil-law equivalent of the common law's bilateral contract. Cf. commutative contract.

tacit contract. A contract in which conduct takes the place of written or spoken words in the offer or acceptance (or both). [Cases: Contracts ⇨27.]

take-it-or-leave-it contract. See adhesion contract.

take-or-pay contract. A contract requiring the buyer to either purchase and receive a minimum amount of a product ("take") or pay for this minimum without taking immediate delivery ("pay"). • These contracts are often used in the energy and oil-and-gas businesses. [Cases: Electricity ⇨11(3); Gas ⇨13(1).]

third-party-beneficiary contract. A contract that directly benefits a third party and that gives the third party a right to sue any of the original contracting parties for breach. [Cases: Contracts ⇨187.]

turnkey contract. See engineering, procurement, and construction contract.

unconscionable contract. See unconscionable agreement under AGREEMENT.

unenforceable contract. A valid contract that, because of some technical defect, cannot be fully enforced; a contract that has some legal consequences but that may not be enforced in an action for damages or specific performance in the face of certain defenses, such as the statute of frauds. — Also termed agreement of imperfect obligation. Cf. illegal contract; void contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨1, 138(1).]

"The difference between what is voidable and what is unenforceable is mainly a difference between substance and procedure. A contract may be good, but incapable of proof owing to lapse of time, want of written form, or failure to affix a revenue stamp. Writing in the first cases, a stamp in the last, may satisfy the requirements of law and render the contract enforceable, but it is never at any time in the power of either party to avoid the transaction. The contract is unimpeachable, only it cannot be proved in court." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 19-20 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"Courts are . . . fond of condemning the unenforceable agreement as 'illegal.' This is misleading insofar as it suggests that some penalty is necessarily imposed on one of the parties, apart from the court's refusal to enforce the agreement. In some cases, the conduct that renders the agreement unenforceable is also a crime, but this is not necessarily or even usually so. It is therefore preferable to attribute unenforceability to grounds of public policy rather than to 'illegality.'" E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 5.1, at 323 (3d ed. 1999).

unilateral contract. (1855) A contract in which only one party makes a promise or undertakes a performance; a contract in which no promisor receives a promise as consideration for the promise given. [Cases: Contracts ⇨1.]

"[M]any unilateral contracts are in reality gratuitous promises enforced for good reason with no element of bargain." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 126 (3d ed. 1981).

"If A says to B, 'if you walk across the Brooklyn Bridge I will pay you $100,' A has made a promise but has not asked B for a return promise. A has asked B to perform, not a commitment to perform. A has thus made an offer looking to a unilateral contract. B cannot accept this offer by promising to walk the bridge. B must accept, if at all, by performing the act. Because no return promise is requested, at no point is B bound to perform. If B does perform, a contract involving two parties is created, but the contract is classified as unilateral because only one party is ever under an obligation." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 2-10(a), at 64-65 (4th ed. 1998).

valid contract. A contract that is fully operative in accordance with the parties' intent. — Also termed valid agreement. [Cases: Contracts ⇨1.]

variable annuity contract. Securities. An annuity whose payments vary according to how well the fund (usu. made up of common stocks) that backs it is performing. SEC Rule 0-1(e)(1) (17 CFR § 270.0-1(e)(1)). See variable annuity under ANNUITY. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇨5.30.]

verbal contract. See parol contract (1).

voidable contract. (18c) A contract that can be affirmed or rejected at the option of one of the parties; a contract that is void as to the wrongdoer but not void as to the party wronged, unless that party elects to treat it as void. [Cases: Contracts ⇨98, 136.]

"A voidable contract is a contract which, in its inception, is valid and capable of producing the results of a valid contract, but which may be 'avoided', i.e. rendered void at the option of one (or even, though rarely, of both) of the parties." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 37-38 (3d ed. 1981).

void contract. (17c) 1. A contract that is of no legal effect, so that there is really no contract in existence at all. • A contract may be void because it is technically defective, contrary to public policy, or illegal. Cf. illegal contract; unenforceable contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨98, 136.]

"Strictly speaking, a 'void contract' is a contradiction in terms; for the words describe a state of things in which, despite the intention of the parties, no contract has been made. Yet the expression, however faulty, is a compendious way of putting a case in which there has been the outward semblance without the reality of contract." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 18 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"A valid contract is, of course, simply a contract of full force and effect, not vitiated in any way. A so-called void contract, on the other hand, is really a contradiction in terms inasmuch as a contract has already been defined in terms applicable only to a valid contract. However, the term is convenient and is universally used. For purposes of exposition, it is convenient to treat void contracts as falling, broadly speaking, into main categories. On the one hand, are cases where one of the normal requirements for the creation of a contract is absent, while, on the other hand, are cases where all the normal requirements are satisfied, but the contract is void because the law disapproves of its purpose or the terms by which it seeks to achieve that purpose. Typical examples of contracts which are void because one of the normal requirements is absent are contracts in which the acceptance of an offer has not been communicated or in which a promise is given gratuitously. Typical examples of contracts which are void because of their terms or objects are wagering contracts, and contracts prejudicial to family relations." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 36-37 (3d ed. 1981).

2. A contract that has been fully performed. — Also termed discharged contract.

"Not only is the term 'void contract' in itself technically inaccurate, but a contract is sometimes said to be void, not because it was destitute of legal effect from its commencement, but because it has been fully performed, and so has ceased to have legal operation. It would be more proper to describe such a contract as 'discharged.'" William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 20 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

3. Loosely, a voidable contract.

voluntary contract. See gratuitous contract (2).

wagering contract. 1. A contract the performance of which depends on the happening of an uncertain event, made entirely for sport. See gambling contract. Cf. aleatory contract. [Cases: Gaming ⇨ 1, 5, 10.]

E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 5.2 n.4, at 326-27 (3d ed. 1999).

2. A contract in which an uncertain event affects or results from a business transaction. • With this type of wagering contract, a business person is protected from a trade risk.

written contract. A contract whose terms have been reduced to writing.

"Written contracts are also commonly signed, but a written contract may consist of an exchange of correspondence, of a letter written by the promisee and assented to by the promisor without signature, or even of a memorandum or printed document not signed by either party. Statutes relating to written contracts are often expressly limited to contracts signed by one or both parties. Whether such a limitation is to be implied when not explicit depends on the purpose and context." Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 95 cmt. c (1979) (citations omitted).

contract not to sue. See covenant not to sue under COVENANT (1).

contract of affreightment (ə-fraɪt-mənt). Maritime law. An agreement for the carriage of goods by water. • A contract of affreightment may employ a bill of lading, a charterparty, or both to ship the goods. — Abbr. COA. — Also termed contract of carriage. See CHARTERPARTY. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 104.]

contractor. (16c) 1. A party to a contract. 2. More specif., one who contracts to do work or provide supplies for another.

competent contractor. A contractor who has the knowledge, skill, experience, and available equipment to do the work that he or she is employed to do without creating an unreasonable risk of injury to others and who has the personal characteristics necessary to carry out the work. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 3132.]

general contractor. One who contracts for the completion of an entire project, including purchasing all materials, hiring and paying subcontractors, and coordinating all the work. — Also termed original contractor; prime contractor. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 197.]

independent contractor. See INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

subcontractor. See SUBCONTRACTOR.

Contracts Clause. (1875) The clause of the U.S. Constitution prohibiting states from passing any law that would impair private contractual obligations. • The Supreme Court has generally interpreted this clause so that states can regulate private contractual obligations if the regulation is reasonable and necessary to serve an important public purpose. U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 1. — Also termed Contract Clause; Obligation of Contracts Clause. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷ 2660–2775.]

contract-specification defense. An affirmative defense that immunizes a contractor from liability for a defect in a product when the contractor has manufactured or performed according to detailed contractual orders. • The defense applies to specialized, single-use components and protects a component supplier from claims of negligent design if the component conforms to the contractual specifications — unless the specifications are obviously dangerous. Under modern notions of strict liability, courts have increasingly rejected this defense. Cf. GOVERNMENT-CONTRACTOR DEFENSE; GOVERNMENT-AGENCY DEFENSE. [Cases: Products Liability ↷ 175, 177.]

contract under seal. See CONTRACT.

contractus (kən-trək-təs). [Latin] Roman law. A contract; an agreement between two or more parties, usu. to create an actionable bond between them. See CONTRAHERE.

"The texts of the Roman Law do not supply a definition of contract. The words contractus — contrahere — like 'contract' in English, are used in various senses, sometimes wider, sometimes narrower. Labeo gives contractus the meaning of a reciprocal obligation, such as purchase and sale, hire, partnership. But when the Romans speak of obligation arising from contract, they mean obligations arising from convention or agreement. In Roman law it was far from being the case that all agreements which might be expected to produce a legal obligation did so." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 285 (4th ed. 1956).

contractus bonae fidei, vel stricti juris (kən-trək-təs boh-nee fi-dee-1, vel strik-ti joor-1). [Latin] Roman law. Contracts of good faith or of strict law; a contract requiring that the parties perform their duties in good faith. • In an action brought on a contractus bonae fidei, the plaintiff had to assert that he had not acted in bad faith. All consensual contracts were considered contractus bonae fidei. The phrase was typically used when a remedy was being sought for a breach. Judges enforced contracts of good faith (e.g., contracts of sale) according to the requirements of good faith and contracts of strict law (e.g., stipulations) according to their strict terms. — Sometimes shortened to contractus bonae fidei.

contract zoning. See ZONING.

contradictio in adjecto. [Latin] A contradiction in terms; an oxymoron.

contradictory judgment. See JUDGMENT.

contradictory motion. See MOTION (1).

contra executionem (kon-trə ek-si-kyoo-shee-oh-nəm). [Law Latin] Hist. Against execution. • The phrase referred to the presumption in favor of a defendant's objections to the manner of execution against the defendant's property.

contrafactio (kon-trə-fak-shee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. The act of counterfeiting. • The word appeared frequently in the phrase contrafactio sigilli regis ("counterfeiting the king's seal").

contra fidem tabularum nuptialium (kon-trə fi-dəm tab-yə-lair-əm nəp-shee-ay-lee-əm). [Law Latin] Scots law. Against the provisions of the marriage contract. • The phrase usu. referred to antenuptial contracts.

contra formam collationis (kon-trə for-məm kə-lay-shee-oh-nis). [Latin "against the form of a collation"] Hist. A writ to regain lands given to a religious society in exchange for perpetual alms. • The writ was usu. sought by an heir of the person who had given the land away.

contra formam feoffmenti (kon-trə for-məm feef-men-ti). [Latin "contrary to the form of the feoffment"] Hist. A writ that commanded a landowner to stop demanding from a tenant more services than those included in the tenant's deed to the land. — Also spelled contra formam feoffamenti.

"Contra formam feoffamenti is a writ that lies where a man before the statute of quia emptores terrarum, made 18 Ed. 1, infeoffed another by deed to do certain service; if the feoffor or his heirs distrain him to do other service than is comprised in the deed, then the tenant shall have this writ, commanding him not to distrain him to do other service than is comprised in the deed." Termes de la Ley 116 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

contra formam statuti (kon-trə for-məm stə-tyoo-ti). [Law Latin] Contrary to the form of the statute. See AGAINST THE FORM OF THE STATUTE.

contrahere (kən-tray-hə-ree), vb. [Latin "draw together"] Roman law. 1. To establish or enter into a formal relationship, as between husband and wife, creditor and debtor, by mutual agreement. 2. To commit a crime. 3. To accept an inheritance. 4. Generally, to perform any act of legal significance. See CONTRACTUS.

contra hereditatem jacentem (kon-trə hə-red-i-tay-təm jə-sen-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. Against a succession that the heir has not taken up; against a fallen inheritance. • The phrase appeared in reference to a creditor's right to pursue a debtor's estate for recovery of a debt even though the heir did not take up the succession.

contra jus belli (kon-trə jəs bel-ı). [Latin] Against the law of war.

contra jus commune (kon-trə jəs kə-myoo-nee). [Latin] Against common right or law; contrary to the rule of the common law.

contra legem (kon-trə lee-jəm ter-ee). [Latin] 1. Contrary to law; against the law. 2. EQUITY CONTRA LEGEM.

contra legem terrae (kon-trə lee-jəm ter-ee). [Latin] Against the law of the land.

contra libertatem matrimonii (kon-trə lib-ər-tay-təm ma-tri-moh-nee-ı). [Latin] Hist. Against freedom of marriage. • The phrase appeared in reference to marriage restraints, some of which were illegal.

contra non producta (kon-trə non prə-dək-tə). [Law Latin “against things not produced”] Scots law. In a reduction action, a decree declaring that a challenged deed is void.

contra non valentem. See DOCTRINE OF CONTRA NON VALENTM.

contra omnes gentes (kon-trə om-neež jen-teez). [Latin] Hist. Against all people. • These were the traditional words of warranty in a deed.

contra omnes mortales (kon-trə əhm-neež mor-tay-leez). [Law Latin] Hist. Against all mortals. • This language was contained in an absolute warranty.

contra pacem (kon-trə pay-səm). [Latin] Hist. Against the peace. • This term was used in indictments to signify that the alleged offense was against the public peace.

contra pietatem (kon-trə pi-ə-tay-təm). [Latin] Hist. Contrary to natural duty.

contraplacitum (kon-trə-plas-ə-təm). [Latin] Hist. A counterplea.

contra proferentem (kon-trə prof-ə-ren-təm). [Latin “against the offeror”] The doctrine that, in interpreting documents, ambiguities are to be construed unfavorably to the drafter. — Also spelled contra proferentes. — Also termed ambiguity doctrine. [Cases: Contracts ◊ 155.]

contrarotulator (kon-trə-roch-yə-lay-tər or kon-trə-roh-tə-lay-tər). [Latin “controller”] Hist. A person responsible for collecting and managing funds on behalf of the Crown or other government office. • A variety of controllers existed in England, including the contrarotulator customarum (controller of the customs), contrarotulator hospitii domini regis (controller of the king’s household), and contrarotulator pipae (controller of the pipe — i.e., an officer who collected debts due to the Exchequer).

contrary to law. (16c) Illegal; unlawful; conflicting with established law.

contrary to the evidence. (16c) (Of an argument, finding, etc.) conflicting with the weight of the evidence presented at a contested hearing.

contra spoliū (kon-trə spho-lee-əm). [Law Latin “against the spoil”] Scots law. A real action for the recovery of stolen movable property.

contra tabulas. See BONORUM POSSESSIO CONTRA TABULAS.

contravene (kon-trə-veen), vb. 1. To violate or infringe; to defy <the soldier contravened the officer’s order, and then went AWOL>. 2. To come into conflict with; to be contrary to <the court held that the regulation contravenes public policy>.

contravention (kon-trə-ven-shən). 1. An act violating a legal condition or obligation; esp., an entail heir’s act that conflicts with the entail provision. 2. French law. A criminal breach of a law, treaty, or agreement; a minor violation of the law. • A contravention is traditionally punishable by peines de police, usu. a fine not exceeding 15 francs and imprisonment not exceeding three days. See public-welfare offense under OFFENSE (1).

3. Scots law. The action brought for breach of a peace bond. See LAWBURROWS. 4. Hist. Scots law. An act committed in violation of a legal condition or obligation, esp. one done contrary to a deed by an heir to an entailment.

contractatae (kon-trek-tay-tee). [Latin “things meddled with”] Scots law. Things that a person (such as a thief) either improperly used or tampered with.

contractatio (kon-trek-tay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin contractare “to touch or handle”] Hist. The act of laying hands on another’s property with the intent of taking, misappropriating, or misusing it. • This term implied a greater culpability than simply taking property without the owner’s permission and, under Roman law, was an element of theft (furtum). Pl. contractationes (kon-trek-tay-shee-oh-neež).

contributing to the delinquency of a minor. (1913) The offense of an adult’s engaging in conduct involving a minor — or in the presence of a minor — likely to result in delinquent conduct. • Examples include encouraging a minor to shoplift, enabling underage drinking, and soliciting sex for money. — Often shortened to contributing to delinquency. See JUVENILE DELINQUENCY. Cf. IMPAIRING THE MORALS OF A MINOR. [Cases: Infants ◊ 13.]

contributio lucri et damni (kon-tri-byoo-shee-oh loo-kri et dam-nı). [Latin] Scots law. Distribution of or sharing in profit and loss. • The phrase referred to one test for determining whether a partnership existed.

contribution. (14c) 1. The right that gives one of several persons who are liable on a common debt the ability to recover proportionately from each of the others when that one person discharges the debt for the benefit of all; the right to demand that another who is jointly responsible for a third party's injury supply part of what is required to compensate the third party. — Also termed right of contribution. [Cases: Contribution ↷ 1–6.]

2. One tortfeasor's right to collect from joint tortfeasors when — and to the extent that — the tortfeasor has paid more than his or her proportionate share to the injured party, the shares being determined as percentages of causal fault. [Cases: Contribution ↷ 5–7.] 3. The actual payment by a joint tortfeasor of a proportionate share of what is due. Cf. INDEMNITY. 4. Maritime law. A share of the loss resulting from a ship's sacrifice of cargo, payable by each party whose property was spared to the party whose property was sacrificed. 5. WAR CONTRIBUTION.

contribution agreement. See SUPPORT AGREEMENT.

contribution bar. Preclusion of a defendant having contribution rights against other defendants, who have settled their dispute with the plaintiff, from seeking contribution from them. • The bar is usu. allowed in exchange for a credit against any judgment the plaintiff obtains against the nonsettling defendant. [Cases: Contribution ↷ 8.]

contribution clause. See COINSURANCE CLAUSE.

contributio*ne* facienda (kon-tri-byoo-shee-oh-nee fay-shee-en-də). [Latin "writ for making contribution"] Hist. A writ to compel a tenant in common to contribute to a fellow tenant who has paid more than the tenant's share of a sum for which all the tenants are liable.

"*Contributio*ne* facienda* is a writ that lieth in case where more are bound to one thing, & one is put to the whole burden. . . . If tenents in comon or joynt, hold a mill (pro indiviso) & equally take the profits therof, the mill falling to decay, & one or more of them refusing to contribute toward the reparation therof, the rest shall have this writ. . . ." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

contribution margin. The difference between a product's selling price and its variable production costs. • The contribution margin measures the amount of funds available for profit and payment of fixed costs.

contributory (kən-trib-yə-tor-ee), adj. (15c) 1. Tending to bring about a result. 2. (Of a pension fund) receiving contributions from both the employer and the employees. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷ 500.]

contributory, n. (15c) 1. One who contributes or who has a duty to contribute. 2. A contributing factor. 3. Hist. A person who, as a result of being or representing a past or present member of a corporation, is liable to contribute to the corporation's debts upon its winding up.

contributory infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

contributory-negligence doctrine. (1911) Torts. The principle that completely bars a plaintiff's recovery if the damage suffered is partly the plaintiff's own fault.

• Most states have abolished this doctrine and have adopted instead a comparative-negligence analysis. See FAULT; NEGLIGENCE. Cf. COMPARATIVE-NEGLECTANCE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Negligence ↷ 547.]

control, n. (16c) The direct or indirect power to govern the management and policies of a person or entity, whether through ownership of voting securities, by contract, or otherwise; the power or authority to manage, direct, or oversee <the principal exercised control over the agent>.

superintending control. The general supervisory control that a higher court in a jurisdiction has over the administrative affairs of a lower court within that jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts ↷ 204.]

working control. The effective control of a corporation by a person or group who owns less than 50% of the stock. [Cases: Corporations ↷ 174.]

control, vb. (15c) 1. To exercise power or influence over <the judge controlled the proceedings>. 2. To regulate or govern <by law, the budget office controls expenditures>. 3. To have a controlling interest in <the five shareholders controlled the company>.

control group. (1937) The persons with authority to make decisions on a corporation's behalf.

control-group test. (1969) A method of determining whether the attorney-client privilege protects communications made by corporate employees, by providing that those communications are protected only if made by an employee who is a member of the group with authority to direct the corporation's actions as a result of that communication. • The U.S. Supreme Court rejected the control-group test in Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383, 101 S.Ct. 677 (1981). Cf. SUBJECT-MATTER TEST. [Cases: Privileged Communications and Confidentiality ↷ 123.]

controlled corporate groups. See CONTROLLED GROUP.

controlled corporation. See CORPORATION.

controlled debate. See DEBATE.

controlled foreign corporation. See CORPORATION.

controlled group. Tax. Two or more corporations whose stock is substantially held by five or fewer persons. • The Internal Revenue Code subjects these entities (such as parent-subsidiary or brother-sister groups) to special rules for computing tax liability. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 851(c)(3), 1563(a). — Also termed controlled corporate groups. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷ 3633, 3870–3880.]

controlled-securities-offering distribution. See securities-offering distribution (1) under DISTRIBUTION.

controlled substance. (1970) Any type of drug whose possession and use is regulated by law, including a narcotic, a stimulant, or a hallucinogen. See DRUG. [Cases: Controlled Substances ↷9.]

controlled-substance act. (1970) A federal or state statute that is designed to control the distribution, classification, sale, and use of certain drugs. • Most states have enacted these laws, which are usu. modeled on the Uniform Controlled Substances Act. [Cases: Controlled Substances ↷4.] controlled time. See controlled debate under DEBATE.

controller. See COMPTROLLER.

controlling interest. See INTEREST (2).

controlling person. See CONTROL PERSON.

controlling shareholder. See SHAREHOLDER.

control person. Securities. A person who has actual control or significant influence over the issuer of securities, as by directing corporate policy. • The control person is subject to many of the same requirements applicable to the sale of securities by the issuer. — Also termed controlling person. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↷35.15, 60.40.]

"[T]he question of who is a control person is highly factual and is not dependent upon ownership of any specific percentage. For example, it has been held that someone owning eight percent of a company's stock was not a control person . . ." 1 Thomas Lee Hazen, The Law of Securities Regulation § 4.24, at 279 (3d ed. 1995).

control stock. Stock belonging to a control person at the time of a given transaction. — Also termed control shares.

control test. See IRRESISTIBLE-IMPULSE TEST.

control theory. (1949) The theory that people will engage in criminal behavior unless certain personally held social controls (such as a strong investment in conventional, legitimate activities or a belief that criminal behavior is morally wrong) are in place to prevent them from doing so. Cf. ROUTINE-ACTIVITIES THEORY; RATIONAL-CHOICE THEORY; STRAIN THEORY.

control-your-kid law. See PARENTAL-RESPONSIBILITY STATUTE.

controver (kən-troh-vər). Hist. A person who concocts false news.

controversy. (14c) 1. A disagreement or a dispute, esp. in public. 2. A justiciable dispute.

public controversy. A controversy involving issues that are debated publicly and that have substantial ramifications for persons other than those engaged in it. • A participant in a public controversy may be deemed a public figure for purposes of a defamation suit arising from the controversy. See PUBLIC FIGURE. [Cases: Libel and Slander ↷48(1).]

separable controversy. (1881) A claim that is separate and independent from the other claims being asserted in a suit. • This term is most often associated with the statute that permits an entire case to be removed to federal court if one of the claims, being separate and independent from the others, presents a federal question that is within the jurisdiction of the federal courts. 28 USCA § 1441(c). [Cases: Removal of Cases ↷48–61.]

3. Constitutional law. A case that requires a definitive determination of the law on the facts alleged for the adjudication of an actual dispute, and not merely a hypothetical, theoretical, or speculative legal issue. — Also termed (in senses 2 & 3) actual controversy. See CASE-OR-CONTROVERSY REQUIREMENT. [Cases: Action ↷6; Federal Courts ↷12.1.]

"What is a 'case or controversy' that is justiciable in the federal courts? The answer of Chief Justice Hughes is classic if cryptic. He said: 'A controversy in this sense must be one that is appropriate for judicial determination. A justiciable controversy is thus distinguished from a difference or dispute of a hypothetical character; from one that is academic or moot. The controversy must be definite and concrete, touching the legal relations of parties having adverse legal interests. It must be a real and substantial controversy admitting of specific relief through a decree of a conclusive character, as distinguished from an opinion advising what the law would be upon a hypothetical state of facts.' [Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 240–41, 57 S.Ct. 461, 464 (1937) (Hughes, C.J.)] Unfortunately, this definition, though often quoted, turns upon labels that the Court had used in the past to describe cases before it, and the labels themselves are 'elastic, inconstant, and imprecise.'" Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 12, at 60–61 (5th ed. 1994).

controvert (kon-trə-vərt or kon-trə-vərt), vb. (16c) To dispute or contest; esp., to deny (as an allegation in a pleading) or oppose in argument <the allegations in Peck's pleadings were never adequately controverted>.

contubernium (kon-t[y]uu-bər-nee-əm). [Latin] Roman law. A marriage-like union between slaves. • Contubernium was recognized in the United States. Before slavery was abolished, only one Southern court gave a marriage between slaves legal effect upon manumission. See Girod v. Lewis, 6 Mart. (O.S.) 559, 559–60 (La. 1819). In 1825, the Louisiana legislature passed a law expressly making such marriages invalid.

"No such thing as marriage among slaves was, or could be, recognized by the law. As slaves were wholly subject to the disposal of their masters, no unions having the character of permanence or sacredness could exist among them: such a union, if it existed, would abridge the master's power of absolute control. Among slaves there could only be contubernium, cohabitation of the sexes for a longer or shorter time, but no legal matrimonium." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 111 (1881).

"There was . . . among slaves a permitted cohabitation called contubernium, but it brought with it no civil rights. . . . [C]ohabitation, . . . in a state of slavery, was not marriage, or evidence of marriage. It conferred no rights upon the offspring, and created no legal disabilities on the part of the father from forming a valid marriage, whenever he became in a condition which would authorize him to contract one." Adrienne D. Davis, The Private Law of Race and Sex: An Antebellum Perspective, 51 Stan. L. Rev. 221, 245 (1999).

contumace capiendo. See DE CONTUMACE CAPIENDO.

contumacious conduct. See CONDUCT.

contumacy (kɒn-t[y]uu-mə-see), n. (15c) Contempt of court; the refusal of a person to follow a court's order or direction. See CONTEMPT. [Cases: Contempt ⇨ 1-26.] — contumacious, adj.

contumax. Hist. 1. A person found to be in contempt of court. 2. A person who is accused of a crime but refuses to appear and answer the charge.

contumelious (kɒn-t[y]oo-mee-lee-əs), adj. Insolent, abusive, spiteful, or humiliating.

contumely (kɒn-t[y]uu-mə-lee or kɒn-t[y]oo-mə-lee), n. Insulting language or treatment; scornful rudeness.

contutor (kɒn-t[y]oo-tər), n. [Latin] Roman law. A coguardian of a ward. • Appointment as a coguardian could be accomplished by testament or by court order.

conubium (kə-n[y]oo-bee-əm), n. [fr. Latin con "together" + nubere "to marry"] Roman law. 1. The legal capacity to wed. 2. The collection of rights that accompany a marriage between persons who have the capacity to marry. — Also spelled connubium. — Also termed jus connubii. See CONCUBINATUS; JUSTAE NUPTIAE.

"The word connubium denotes properly the right to intermarry with Roman citizens; and hence to contract a Roman marriage, according to the peculiar forms and with the peculiar incidents and effects of marriage between Roman citizens. Chief among these incidents or effects was the patria potestas, or life-long control of the father over his children, which, as we shall soon see, was among the most remarkable peculiarities of the Roman system. In general, connubium embraces the peculiar rights of Roman citizens, so far as they pertain to family relations." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 116 (1881).

conusance (kɒn-yə-zənts). Hist. 1. Cognizance; jurisdiction. • The word conusance is actually an archaic form of cognizance. See COGNIZANCE (1); CLAIM OF COGNIZANCE. 2. JUDICIAL NOTICE. 3. An acknowledgment (of a debt, act, or opposing claim). • Examples of conusance include an acknowledgment in replevin that the defendant took the sued-for goods, or an acknowledgment in a land transfer (by fine) that the grantee is entitled to the land. See FINE (1).

conusant (kɒn-yə-zənt), adj. (Of a person) having cognizance or knowledge. See COGNIZANCE.

conusee (kɒn-yə-zee). See COGNIZEE.

conusor (kɒn-yə-zər or -zɔr). See COGNIZOR.

convene, vb. (15c) 1. To call together; to cause to assemble. 2. Eccles. law. To summon to respond to an action. See CONVENTIO (1).

"When the defendant was brought to answer, he was said to be convened, — which the canonists called conventio, because the plaintiff and defendant met to contest." 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier's Law Dictionary 668 (8th ed. 1914).

3. Civil law. To bring an action.

convenience account. See ACCOUNT.

convening authority. Military law. An officer (usu. a commanding officer) with the power to convene, or who has convened, a court-martial. [Cases: Military Justice ⇨ 877, 1380.]

convening order. Military law. An instrument that creates a court-martial. • The convening order specifies (1) the type of court-martial and its time and place, (2) the names of the members and the trial and defense counsel, (3) the name of the military judge, if one has been detailed, and (4) if necessary, the authority by which the court-martial has been convened. [Cases: Military Justice ⇨ 879.1.]

conventicle (kən-ven-tə-kəl). [fr. Latin conventiculum "small assembly"] 1. An assembly of a clandestine or unlawful character. 2. An assembly for religious worship; esp., a secret meeting for worship not sanctioned by law. 3. A place where such meetings are held.

conventio (kən-ven-shee-oh). [fr. Latin convenire "to come together"] 1. Eccles. law. The act of convening the parties to an action by summoning the defendant. 2. Hist. An agreement or convention; an agreement between two or more persons respecting a legal relation between them. See CONVENTION (1).

"Conventio is a word much used both in Ancient and Modern Law-pleadings, for an Agreement or Covenant." Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

convention. (15c) 1. An agreement or compact, esp. one among nations; a multilateral treaty <the Geneva Convention>. See TREATY. [Cases: Treaties ⇨ 1.] 2. A special deliberative assembly elected for the purpose of framing, revising, or amending a constitution. — Also termed constitutional convention. See CONSTITUTION (1). [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 509, 535.] 3. An assembly or meeting of members belonging to an organization or having a common objective <an ABA convention>. — Also termed conference. 4. Parliamentary law. A deliberative assembly that consists of delegates elected or appointed from subordinate or constituent organizations within a state or national organization, or elected directly from the organization's membership or from defined geographic or other constituencies into which the membership is grouped, and that usu. exercises the organization's highest policymaking authority . — Also termed assembly; congress; convocation; delegate assembly; general assembly. See HOUSE OF DELEGATES. 5. Parliamentary law. A session of a convention (sense 4), consisting of a series of consecutive meetings separated by short recesses or adjournments, often during a convention (sense 3) that includes educational and social programs for the benefit of delegates and other members. 6. A generally accepted rule or practice; usage or custom <the court dispensed with the convention of having counsel approach the bench>.

conventional, adj. 1. Customary; orthodox; traditional <conventional motion practice>. 2. Depending on, or arising from, the agreement of the parties, as distinguished from something arising by law <conventional subrogation>. 3. Arising by treaty or convention <conventional international law>.

conventional custom. See CUSTOM.

conventionalism. (1837) A jurisprudential conception of legal practice and tradition holding that law is a matter of respecting and enforcing legal and social rules.

conventional law. (17c) A rule or system of rules agreed on by persons for the regulation of their conduct toward one another; law constituted by agreement as having the force of special law between the parties, by either supplementing or replacing the general law of the land.

conventional lien. See LIEN.

conventional loan. See conventional mortgage under MORTGAGE.

conventional mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

conventional obligation. See OBLIGATION.

conventional remission. See REMISSION.

conventional sequestration. See SEQUESTRATION.

conventional servitude. See SERVITUDE (2).

conventional subrogation. See SUBROGATION.

Convention application. See PATENT APPLICATION.

convention (kən-ven-shee-oh-nee). [Latin] Hist. A writ for the breach of a written covenant. • This writ was often used when parties wished to convey land by fine. — Also termed writ of covenant. See FINE (1).

Convention for the European Patent for the Common Market. See COMMUNITY PATENT CONVENTION.

Convention for the Protection of Performers, Producers of Phonograms, and Broadcasting Organizations. See ROME CONVENTION ON RELATED RIGHTS.

Convention on the Grant of European Patent. See EUROPEAN PATENT CONVENTION.

Convention Relating to the Distribution of Program-Carrying Signals Transmitted by Satellite. See BRUSSELS SATELLITE CONVENTION.

conventus (kən-ven-təs), n. [Latin] 1. An assembly. • Conventus magnatum vel procerum ("the assembly of the nobles") was an ancient name for Parliament. 2. CONVENTUS JURIDICUS. Pl. conventus.

conventus juridicus (kən-ven-təs juu-rid-i-kəs). [Latin "judicial assembly"] Roman law. A court session held by a provincial governor in the leading cities of the province. — Sometimes shortened to conventus.

conversion, n. (14c) 1. The act of changing from one form to another; the process of being exchanged.

equitable conversion. A change in the nature of property so that real property is treated as personal property, or vice versa, in certain circumstances. • Equitable conversion is based on the maxim that equity regards as done that which ought to be done. The most common situation involves transferring real property as the parties to a contract intended before the seller experienced a change in circumstances, such as marriage or death, that could affect the property's ownership. When a contract is made, the buyer acquires equitable title to the property, and the seller retains legal title. But the seller's interest is treated as one in personal property rather than in real property because the seller's true interest is in the proceeds (usu. personal property such as cash); the legal title is security for the buyer's payment. Courts usu. apply the doctrine of equitable conversion to recognize the transfer of equitable title, including the right of possession, to the buyer when the contract was signed. The buyer then acquires legal title by performing under the contract. [Cases: Conversion ⇨1.] forced conversion. The conversion of a convertible security, after a call for redemption, when the value of the security that it may be converted to is greater than the amount that will be received if the holder permits the security to be redeemed.

2. Tort & criminal law. The wrongful possession or disposition of another's property as if it were one's own; an act or series of acts of willful interference, without lawful justification, with an item of property in a manner inconsistent with another's right, whereby that other person is deprived of the use and possession of the property. [Cases: Trover and Conversion ⇨1.] — convert, vb. — conversionary, adj.

"There are three distinct methods by which one man may deprive another of his property, and so be guilty of a conversion and liable in an action for trover — (1) by wrongly taking it, (2) by wrongly detaining it, and (3) by wrongly disposing of it. The term conversion was originally limited to the third of these cases. To convert goods meant to dispose of them, or make away with them, to deal with them, in such a way that neither owner nor wrongdoer had any further possession of them: for example, by consuming them, or by destroying them, or by selling them, or otherwise delivering them to some third person. Merely to take another's goods, however wrongfully, was not to convert them. Merely to detain them in defiance of the owner's title was not to convert them. The fact that conversion in its modern sense includes instances of all three modes in which a man may be wrongfully deprived of his goods, and not of one mode only, is the outcome of a process of historical development whereby, by means of legal fictions and other devices, the action of trover was enabled to extend its limits and appropriate the territories that rightly belonged to other and earlier forms of action." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 94 (17th ed. 1977).

"By conversion of goods is meant any act in relation to goods which amounts to an exercise of dominion over them, inconsistent with the owner's right of property. It does not include mere acts of damage, or even an asportation which does not amount to a denial of the owner's right of property; but it does include such acts as taking possession, refusing to give up on demand, disposing of the goods to a third person, or destroying them." William Geldart, Introduction to English Law 143 (D.C.M. Yardley ed., 9th ed. 1984).

constructive conversion. Conversion consisting of an action that in law amounts to the appropriation of property. • Constructive conversion could be, for example, an appropriation that was initially lawful. [Cases: Trover and Conversion ⇨6.]

conversion by detention. Conversion by detaining property in a way that is adverse to the owner or other lawful possessor. • The mere possession of property without title is not conversion. The defendant must have shown an intention to keep it in defiance of the owner or lawful possessor. [Cases: Trover and Conversion ⇨6.]

conversion by estoppel. A judicial determination that a conversion has taken place — though in truth one has not — because a defendant is estopped from offering a defense. • This occurs, for example, under the traditional rule that a bailee is estopped from denying the bailor's title even if the bailor has no title to the chattel.

conversion by taking. Conversion by taking a chattel out of the possession of another with the intention of exercising a permanent or temporary dominion over it, despite the owner's entitlement to use it at all times. [Cases: Trover and Conversion ⇨11.]

conversion by wrongful delivery. Conversion by depriving an owner of goods by delivering them to someone else so as to change the possession. [Cases: Carriers ⇨93.]

conversion by wrongful destruction. Conversion by willfully consuming or otherwise destroying a chattel belonging to another person. [Cases: Trover and Conversion ⇨12.]

conversion by wrongful disposition. Conversion by depriving an owner of goods by giving some other person a lawful title to them. [Cases: Trover and Conversion ⇨10.]

direct conversion. The act of appropriating the property of another to one's own benefit, or to the benefit of a third person. • A direct conversion is per se unlawful, and the traditional requirements of demand and refusal of the property do not apply. [Cases: Trover and Conversion ⇨3-5.]

fraudulent conversion. Conversion that is committed by the use of fraud, either in obtaining the property or in withholding it. [Cases: Trover and Conversion ⇨3, 7.]

involuntary conversion. The loss or destruction of property through theft, casualty, or condemnation.

negligent conversion. See technical conversion.

technical conversion. The taking of another's personal property by one who acts in good faith and mistakenly believes that he or she is lawfully entitled to the property. — Also termed innocent conversion; negligent conversion.

conversionary act. See ACT.

conversion divorce. See DIVORCE.

conversion premium. Securities. The surplus at which a security sells above its conversion price.

conversion price. Securities. The contractually specified price per share at which a convertible security can be converted into shares of common stock.

conversion ratio. 1. The number of common shares into which a convertible security may be converted. 2. The ratio of the face amount of the convertible security to the conversion price.

conversion rule. See SPECIFIC-PURPOSE RULE.

conversion security. See SECURITY.

conversion statute. A law under which a state official or court oversees the sale or transfer of control of an organization in order to protect public assets.

conversion value. A convertible security's value as common stock. • For example, a bond that can be converted into ten shares of stock worth $40 each has a conversion value of $400. See BOND CONVERSION.

converter, n. One who wrongfully possesses or disposes of another's property; esp., one who engages in a series of acts of willful interference, without lawful justification, with an item of property in a manner inconsistent with another's right, whereby that other person is deprived of the use and possession of the property. [Cases: Trover and Conversion ⇨1-12.]

innocent converter. A person who takes another's chattel tortiously but in good faith and without knowledge that he or she has no entitlement to it.

convertible arbitrage. See kind arbitrage under ARBITRAGE.

convertible bond. See BOND (3).

convertible collision insurance. See INSURANCE.

convertible debenture. See DEBENTURE.

convertible debt. 1. See DEBT. 2. See convertible security under SECURITY.

convertible divorce. See conversion divorce under DIVORCE.

convertible insurance. See INSURANCE.

convertible security. See SECURITY.

convertible stock. See convertible security under SECURITY.

convertible subordinated debenture. See DEBENTURE.

convey, vb. (14c) To transfer or deliver (something, such as a right or property) to another, esp. by deed or other writing; esp., to perform an act that is intended to create one or more property interests, regardless of whether the act is actually effective to create those interests.

conveyance (kən-vay-ənts), n. (15c) 1. The voluntary transfer of a right or of property.

absolute conveyance. A conveyance in which a right or property is transferred to another free of conditions or qualifications (i.e., not as a security). Cf. conditional conveyance.

conditional conveyance. A conveyance that is based on the happening of an event, usu. payment for the property; a mortgage. Cf. absolute conveyance.

derivative conveyance. See secondary conveyance.

innocent conveyance. Hist. A leaseholder's conveyance of the leaseholder's property interest — that is, something less than a fee simple. • The conveyance is of an equitable interest. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨74.]

mesne conveyance (meen). An intermediate conveyance; one occupying an intermediate position in the chain of title between the first grantee and the present holder.

original conveyance. See primary conveyance.

present conveyance. A conveyance made with the intent that it take effect at once rather than in the future.

primary conveyance. A conveyance that creates an estate. • Examples of primary conveyances include feoffment, gift, grant, lease, exchange, and partition. — Also termed original conveyance. Cf. secondary conveyance.

"Of conveyances by the common law, some may be called original, or primary conveyances; which are those by means whereof the benefit or estate is created or first arises: others are derivative or secondary; whereby the benefit or estate, originally created, is enlarged, restrained, transferred, or extinguished." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 309 (1766).

secondary conveyance. A conveyance that follows an earlier conveyance and that serves only to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest created by the primary conveyance. — Also termed derivative conveyance; derivative deed. Cf. primary conveyance.

voluntary conveyance. A conveyance made without valuable consideration, such as a deed in favor of a relative.

2. The transfer of a property right that does not pass by delivery of a thing or merely by agreement. 3. The transfer of an interest in real property from one living person to another, by means of an instrument such as a deed. 4. The document (usu. a deed) by which such a transfer occurs. [Cases: Deeds ⇨3.] 5. A means of transport; a vehicle. 6. Bankruptcy. A transfer of an interest in real or personal property, including an assignment, a release, a monetary payment, or the creation of a lien or encumbrance. — Also termed (in sense 6) bond for deed. See FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE; PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER.

conveyancer (kən-vay-ən-sər). (17c) A lawyer who specializes in real-estate transactions. • In England, a conveyancer is a solicitor or licensed conveyancer who examines title to real estate, prepares deeds and mortgages, and performs other functions relating to the transfer of real property.

conveyancing (kən-vay-ən-sing). (17c) The act or business of drafting and preparing legal instruments, esp. those (such as deeds or leases) that transfer an interest in real property.

"Conveyancing is the art or science of preparing documents and investigating title in connection with the creation and assurance of interests in land. Despite its connection with the word 'conveyance', the term in practice is not limited to use in connection with old system title but is used without discrimination in the context of all types of title." Peter Butt, Land Law 7 (2d ed. 1988).

"Conveyancing may be regarded as the application of the law of real property in practice." Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 125 (6th ed. 1993).

conveyancing counsel. English law. Three to six lawyers who are appointed by the Lord Chancellor to assist the High Court of Justice with opinions in matters of property titles and conveyancing. — Also termed conveyancing counsel of the Supreme Court; (formerly) conveyancing counsel to the Court of Chancery.

conveyee (kən-vay-ee). (18c) One to whom property is conveyed.

conveyor (kən-vay-ər or -or). (16c) One who transfers or delivers title to another.

conviciandi animo (kən-vish-ee-ən-dī ən-ə-moh). [Latin] Hist. With the intention of insulting; with the intention of bringing into contempt.

convicium (kən-vish-ee-əm), n. [Latin] Roman law. Reproach, abuse, revilement, or clamor directed at a person.

convict (kən-vikt), n. (15c) A person who has been found guilty of a crime and is serving a sentence of confinement for that crime; a prison inmate. [Cases: Convicts ⇨20.]

convict (kən-vikt), vb. (15c) To find (a person) guilty of a criminal offense upon a criminal trial, a plea of guilty, or a plea of nolo contendere (no contest).

convicted felon. See FELON.

conviction (kən-vik-shən), n. 1. The act or process of judicially finding someone guilty of a crime; the state of having been proved guilty. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻977(5).] 2. The judgment (as by a jury verdict) that a person is guilty of a crime. 3. A strong belief or opinion.

abiding conviction. A settled conviction; a definite conviction based on a thorough examination of the case.

summary conviction. A conviction of a person for a violation or minor misdemeanor as the result of a trial before a magistrate sitting without a jury.

conviction rate. (1928) Within a given area or for a given time, the number of convictions (including plea bargains) as a percentage of the total number of prosecutions undertaken.

convivium (kən-viv-ee-əm). [Latin "banquet"] Hist. Tenure that binds the tenant to provide meat and drink for the lord at least once a year.

convocation. 1. CONVENTION (4). 2. See call to order under CALL (1). 3. See provincial synod under SYNOD.

convoy, n. A group of vehicles or vessels traveling together for safety, esp. with armed escorts. • The term also applies figuratively to groups traveling together for convenience. — convoy, vb.

COO. abbr. CHIEF OPERATING OFFICER.

co-obligee. One of two or more persons to whom an obligation is owed. See OBLIGEE.

co-obligor. 1. One of two or more persons who have undertaken an obligation. See OBLIGOR. 2. A person who is under a duty of contribution. See CONTRIBUTION (1).

cool blood. (17c) Criminal law. In the law of homicide, a condition in which the defendant's emotions are not in such an excited state that they interfere with his or her faculties and reason. — Also termed cool state of blood. See COLD BLOOD. Cf. HEAT OF PASSION. [Cases: Homicide ↻669.]

Cooley doctrine. (1936) Constitutional law. The principle that Congress has exclusive power under the Commerce Clause to regulate the national as well as the local aspects of national commercial matters, and that the states may regulate those aspects of interstate commerce so local in character as to require diverse treatment. • The Supreme Court has abandoned the Cooley doctrine in favor of a balancing test for Commerce Clause cases. Cooley v. Port Bd. of Wardens, 53 U.S. (12 How.) 299 (1851). [Cases: Commerce ↻2, 11.]

cooling-off period. (1913) 1. An automatic delay between a person's taking some legal action and the consequence of that action. 2. A period during which a buyer may cancel a purchase. 3. An automatic delay in some states between the filing of divorce papers and the divorce hearing. 4. Securities. A period (usu. at least 20 days) between the filing of a registration and the effective registration. 5. During a dispute, a period during which no cooling time. (1874) Criminal law. Time to recover cool blood after great excitement, stress, or provocation, so that one is considered able to contemplate, comprehend, and act with reference to the consequences that are likely to follow. See COOL BLOOD. [Cases: Homicide ↻669.]

"[O]ne who controls his temper time after time, following repeated acts of provocation, may have his emotion so bottled-up that the final result is an emotional explosion [I]n such a case the 'cooling time' begins to run not from earlier acts, but from 'the last straw.' . . . As was the position in regard to the adequacy of the provocation, so the early holding was that the cooling time was a matter of law for the court." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 100 (3d ed. 1982).

cool state of blood. See COOL BLOOD.

cooperation. 1. An association of individuals who join together for a common benefit. 2. Patents. A unity of action to a common end or result, not merely joint or simultaneous action. 3. Int'l law. The voluntary coordinated action of two or more countries occurring under a legal régime and serving a specific objective.

cooperation clause. Insurance. A policy provision requiring that the insured assist the insurer in investigating and defending a claim. [Cases: Insurance ↻3202, 3204.]

cooperative, n. (1883) 1. An organization or enterprise (as a store) owned by those who use its services. [Cases: Corporations ↻3.] 2. A dwelling (as an apartment building) owned by its residents, to whom the apartments are leased. — Often shortened to coop; co-op. Cf. CONDOMINIUM (2). [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↻350.]

cooperative adoption. See ADOPTION.

cooperative cause. See CAUSE (1).

cooperative corporation. See CORPORATION.

cooperative law. A dispute-resolution method by which the parties and their attorneys agree first to use non-adversarial strategies in an attempt to reach a binding agreement, with the possibility of litigation if a settlement fails, typically with the same attorneys involved in the litigation. Cf. COLLABORATIVE LAW; MEDIATION (1).

Cooperative State Research, Education, and Extension Service. An agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for coordinating departmental research activities with those of academic and land-grant institutions. — Abbr. CSREES.

co-optation (koh-ahp-tay-shən), n. The act of selecting a person to fill a vacancy (usu. in a close corporation). — co-optative, adj.

coordinate jurisdiction. See concurrent jurisdiction under JURISDICTION.

coordination-of-benefits clause. See COB CLAUSE.

coowner, n. (1858) A person who is in concurrent ownership, possession, and enjoyment of property with one or more others; a tenant in common, a joint tenant, or a tenant by the entirety. [Cases: Husband and Wife ↻14; Joint Tenancy ↻1; Tenancy in Common ↻1.] — coown, vb. — coownership, n.

COPA. abbr. CHILD ONLINE PROTECTION ACT.

cop a plea, vb. (1914) Slang. (Of a criminal defendant) to plead guilty to a lesser charge as a means to avoid standing trial for a more serious offense. See PLEA BARGAIN.

coparcenary (koh-pahr-sə-ner-ee), n. (16c) An estate that arises when two or more persons jointly inherit from one ancestor, the title and right of possession being shared equally by all. • Coparcenary was a form of coownership created by common-law rules of descent upon intestacy when two or more persons together constituted the decedent's heirs. Typically, this situation arose when the decedent was survived by no sons but by two or more daughters, so that the daughters took as coparceners. — Also termed parcenary; tenancy in coparcenary. — coparcenary, adj.

"Coparcenary is converted into separate ownership (i) by partition, or (ii) by the union in one parcener of all the shares, and it is converted into a tenancy in common if one parcener transfers her share to a stranger." G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 553 (3d ed. 1933).

coparcener (koh-pahr-sə-nər). A person to whom an estate descends jointly, and who holds it as an entire estate; a person who has become a concurrent owner as a result of descent. — Also termed parcener; (archaically) coparticeps.

"Coparceners constitute a single heir, and they occupy a position intermediate between joint tenants and tenants in common. Like joint tenants they have unity of title, interest and possession; like tenants in common, their estate is not subject to the doctrine of survivorship, and if there are three coparceners and one dies, her share passes separately to her heirs or devisee, not to the survivors, though the unity of possession continues. It follows that unity of time is not necessary to constitute coparcenary, for if a man has two daughters to whom his estate descends and one dies leaving a son, such son and the surviving daughter will be coparceners." G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 553 (3d ed. 1933).

coparticeps (koh-pahr-tə-seps). [fr. Latin particeps "sharing"] See COPARCENER.

copartner. A member of a partnership; PARTNER. [Cases: Partnership ↻1.]

"Copartner need not exist alongside partner. The joint relationship (i.e., that the existence of one partner implies the existence of one or more other partners) is clear to all native speakers of English. . . . Because copartner adds nothing to the language of the law, it should be avoided." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 223 (2d ed. 1995).

copartnership. See PARTNERSHIP. • The terms copartnership and partnership are equally old — each having first appeared in the 1570s.

coparty. (1906) A litigant or participant in a legal transaction who has a like status with another party; a party on the same side of a lawsuit. — Also termed joint party. See CODEFENDANT; COPLAINTIFF.

copayment. A fixed amount that a patient pays to a healthcare provider according to the terms of the patient's health plan. — Often shortened to copay. [Cases: Insurance ↻2523.]

copending, adj. Patents. (Of serial applications filed in the same patent prosecution) before the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office at or near the same time and concerning the same invention. • A continuation or divisional application that is copending with its parent application benefits from the parent's earlier filing date. [Cases: Patents ↻110.]

copending patent. See PATENT (3).

coplaintiff. (18c) One of two or more plaintiffs in the same litigation. — Also termed joint plaintiff. Cf. CODEFENDANT.

coprincipal. (17c) 1. One of two or more participants in a criminal offense who either perpetrate the crime or aid a person who does so. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻59.] 2. One of two or more persons who have appointed an agent whom they both have the right to control.

copulative condition. See CONDITION (2).

copy, n. (14c) 1. An imitation or reproduction of an original. • In the law of evidence, a copy is generally admissible to prove the contents of a writing. Fed. R. Evid. 1003. See BEST-EVIDENCE RULE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻398(1); Evidence ↻174.1.]

archival copy. See ARCHIVAL COPY.

attested copy. See certified copy.

certified copy. (18c) A duplicate of an original (usu. official) document, certified as an exact reproduction usu. by the officer responsible for issuing or keeping the original. — Also termed attested copy; exemplified copy; verified copy. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻430; Evidence ↻338.]

conformed copy. (1937) An exact copy of a document bearing written explanations of things that were not or could not be copied, such as a note on the document indicating that it was signed by a person whose signature appears on the original.

examined copy. A copy (usu. of a record, public book, or register) that has been compared with the original or with an official record of an original. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻445; Evidence ↻367.]

true copy. A copy that, while not necessarily exact, is sufficiently close to the original that anyone can understand it.

verified copy. See certified copy.

2. Copyright. The physical form in which a creative work is fixed and from which the work can be reproduced or perceived, with or without the aid of a special device. 17 USCA § 101. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻1.] 3. Copyright. An expressive work that is substantially similar to a copyrighted work and not produced coincidentally and independently from the same source as the copyrighted work. • Proof of copying in an infringement action requires evidence of the defendant's access to the original work and substantial similarity of the defendant's work to the original. See substantial similarity under SIMILARITY. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻53(1).]

"The noun 'copy' ordinarily connotes a tangible object that is a reproduction of the original work; the courts have generally found no reason to depart from this usage in the law of copyright." 1 Melville B. Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 4.08[B], at 4-47 (Supp. 1995).

copycat drug. See generic drug under DRUG.

copyhold. Hist. A base tenure requiring the tenant to provide the customary services of the manor, as reflected in the manor's court rolls. • Copyhold tenure descended from pure villeinage; over time, the customs of the manor, as reflected on the manor's rolls, dictated what services a lord could demand from a copyholder. This type of tenure was abolished by the Law of Property Act of 1922, which converted copyhold land into freehold or leasehold land. — Also termed copyhold tenure; customary estate; customary freehold; tenancy by the verge; tenancy par la verge; tenancy by the rod. See base tenure under TENURE; VILLEINAGE.

"Out of the tenure by villeinage, copyhold tenure developed. . . . By the end of the fifteenth century, to hold by copy of the court roll, to be a 'copyholder,' was a definite advantage, and, in most cases the holders had for many generations been personally free. The fusing of several different types of payment had also gone on, so that there was little difference between a holder in socage who had commuted the services for a sum of money and a copyholder who had done the same, except the specific dues of heriot and merchet. In Coke's time, a very large part of the land of England was still held by copyhold." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 371 (1936).

"[L]and held on an unfree tenure could be transferred only by a surrender and admittance made in the lord's court. The transaction was recorded on the court rolls and the transferee given a copy of the entry to prove his title; he thus held 'by copy of the court roll,' and the tenure became known as 'copyhold.'" Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 22 (6th ed. 1993).

privileged copyhold. Hist. A copyhold subject only to the customs of the manor and not affected by the non-conforming dictates of the current lord.

copyholder. Hist. A tenant by copyhold tenure. — Also termed tenant by the verge; tenant par la verge.

"The lord still held a court, and that court kept records of all transactions affecting the lands. These records were called the rolls of the court. When, for instance, a tenant sold his interest to a third party, the circumstances of the sale would be recorded, and the buyer would receive a copy of the court rolls in so far as they affected his holding. Inasmuch as he held his estate by copy of court roll, he came to be called a copyholder." G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 24 (3d ed. 1933).

copyhold tenant. See customary tenant under TENANT.

copyleft. Slang. A software license that allows users to modify or incorporate open-source code into larger programs on the condition that the software containing the source code is publicly distributed without restrictions.

copylefted software. Slang. Free software whose distribution terms forbid the addition of restrictions if the software is redistributed in its original or a modified form. • Not actually a legal term, this phrase is popularly used as the antithesis of copyright by Internet free-software promoters. See FREWARE.

copyright, n. (18c) 1. The right to copy; specifically, a property right in an original work of authorship (including literary, musical, dramatic, choreographic, pictorial, graphic, sculptural, and architectural works; motion pictures and other audiovisual works; and sound recordings) fixed in any tangible medium of expression, giving the holder the exclusive right to reproduce, adapt, distribute, perform, and display the work. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻1.] 2. The body of law relating to such works. • Copyright law is governed by the Copyright Act of 1976. 17 USCA §§ 101–1332. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻101.] — Abbr. c. — copyright, vb. — copyrighted, adj.

"[C]opyright is a monopoly of limited duration, created and wholly regulated by the legislature; and . . . an author has, therefore, no other title to his published works than that given by statute." Ethan S. Drone, A Treatise on the Law of Property in Intellectual Productions 2 (1879).

"The development of copyright law in England was shaped by the efforts of mercantile interests to obtain monopoly control of the publishing industry — similar to those of the guilds that were instrumental in shaping patent and trademark law. . . . American copyright law came to distinguish between the 'common law' right of an author to his unpublished creations, and the statutory copyright that might be secured upon publication. Until recently, therefore, an author had perpetual rights to his creation, which included the right to decide when, if, and how to publish the work, but that common law right terminated upon publication at which time statutory rights become the sole rights, if any, to which the author was entitled. This distinction was altered by the Copyright Act of 1976, which shifts the line of demarcation between common law and statutory copyright from the moment of publication to the moment of fixation of the work into tangible form." Arthur R. Miller & Michael H. Davis, Intellectual Property in a Nutshell 280–82 (2d ed. 1990).

"What is copyright? From copyright law's beginnings close to three centuries ago, the term has meant just what it says: the right to make copies of a given work — at first it meant simply written work — and to stop others from making copies without one's permission." Paul Goldstein, Copyright's Highway 3 (1994).

"Before the 1976 Copyright Act swept virtually all copyrightable subject matter within the exclusive domain of federal protection, the term 'copyright' implied a statutory right created by Congress in order to 'Promote the Progress of Science.' Our first copyright act, in 1790, protected only maps, charts, and books. Protection gradually was extended to musical compositions and graphic works. In the middle of the nineteenth century, photography was developed and then protected, followed at the end of the century by motion pictures (although they were protected as photographs). As the twentieth century comes to a close, digital technology and multimedia forms of authorship seriously challenge the gradual, compartmentalized approach to granting new rights and new subject matter" 1 William F. Patry, Copyright Law and Practice 1 (1994).

ad interim copyright. Hist. A limited five-year U.S. copyright granted to the author of a foreign edition of an English-language book or periodical if, within six months after its publication abroad, the author deposited one complete copy of that edition in the U.S. Copyright Office and requested ad interim copyright protection. • An ad interim copyright was granted as an exception to the 1909 Copyright Act's manufacturing clause, which limited copyright protection for English-language books and periodicals to those printed in the U.S. If the copyright owner published the work in the U.S. during the period of ad interim protection and complied with the Act's manufacturing requirements, full copyright protection related back to the date of first publication. Otherwise, the work went into the public domain at the end of five years.

common-law copyright. A property right that arose when the work was created, rather than when it was published. • Under the Copyright Act of 1976, which took effect on January 1, 1978, common-law copyright was largely abolished for works created after the statute's effective date. But the statute retained the common law's recognition that the property right arose when the work was created rather than when it was published. The common-law copyright still applies in a few areas: notably, a common-law copyright received before January 1, 1978 remains entitled to protection. 17 USCA § 301. — Also termed right of first publication.

copyrightability test. A judicial test for determining whether a contributor to a joint work is an author for legal purposes, based on whether the contributor's effort is an original expression that could qualify for copyright protection on its own. • This test has been adopted by a majority of courts. Cf. DE MINIMIS TEST. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 41(3).]

Copyright Act of 1790. The first U.S. copyright law, which, like England's Statute of Anne, gave authors copyright protection for 14 years, renewable for another 14 years, after which time the work then entered the public domain.

Copyright Act of 1909. A major revision of U.S. copyright law, extending the term of protection from 14 to 28 years (renewable for a second 28-year term); measuring the copyright term from the time of publication rather than the time of registration with the Copyright Office; and expanding coverage to all writings. • The Act retained the formalities for securing a copyright and required that a copyright mark appear on the work. It governed U.S. copyrights issued between July 1, 1909 and December 31, 1977. Although the 1976 Copyright Act supplanted the 1909 Act, the 1909 Act still applies to some pre-1978 claims and affects certain other rights of copyright owners. — Also termed 1909 Copyright Act.

Copyright Act of 1976. A major revision of U.S. copyright law, extending the term of protection to the life of the author plus 50 years, measured from the date of creation; greatly expanding the types of works that qualify for protection; dropping the requirement that the work be published before it can be protected; making fair use a statutory defense to a claim in infringement; and preempting state common-law copyright. 17 USCA §§ 101 et seq. • This is the current federal statute that governs copyright registrations and rights. — Also termed 1976 Copyright Act.

Copyright and the Challenge of Technology. See GREEN PAPER ON COPYRIGHT AND THE CHALLENGE OF TECHNOLOGY.

copyright application. A written request for copyright protection made by a work's creator, filed with the U.S. Copyright Office and accompanied by a filing fee and either a deposit copy of the work or approved identifying material. • A registrant who does not meet the deposit requirement of the Copyright Act of 1976 risks losing copyright protection. See, e.g., Coles v. Wonder, 283 F.3d 798 (6th Cir. 2002). [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 50.20.] copyright bug. See COPYRIGHT NOTICE.

Copyright Clause. (1940) U.S. Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 8, which gives Congress the power to secure to authors the exclusive rights to their writings for a limited time. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 2.]

copyright clearinghouse. An organization that licenses members' works to applicants for specific purposes. • A clearinghouse usu. licenses only one type or class of works, such as songs, photographs, cartoons, or written materials.

copyright infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

copyright legend. See COPYRIGHT NOTICE.

copyright-management information. The name and other identifying information about the creator, performer, or copyright owner of a creative work. See DIGITAL MILLENNIUM COPYRIGHT ACT.

copyright misuse. In an infringement action, an affirmative defense based on the copyright owner's use of a license to restrain trade or in any other manner that is against public policy. • The defense, roughly parallel to the declining patent-misuse defense, was invoked, for example, to prevent the American Medical Association from enforcing its copyright in its medical-procedure codes after licensing them to the U.S. Government for use in the Medicaid program. See Practice Mgmt. Info. Corp. v. Am. Med. Ass'n, 121 F.3d 516 (9th Cir. 1997). [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 75.]

copyright notice. (1889) A notice that a work is copyright-protected, usu. placed in each published copy of the work. • A copyright notice takes the form © (year of publication) (name of basic copyright owner). Since March 1, 1989, such notice is not required for a copyright to be valid (although the notice continues to provide certain procedural advantages). The phrase “all rights reserved” is usu. no longer required. — Sometimes termed copyright bug; copyright legend; notice of copyright. See ALL RIGHTS RESERVED; BUENOS AIRES CONVENTION. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻50.1(2).]

copyright owner. (1886) 1. One who holds an exclusive right or rights to copyrighted material. 17 USCA § 101. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻41.] 2. One who is named as the owner on any copyright notice attached to a work and who is registered with the U.S. Copyright Office as the owner.

Copyright Royalty Tribunal. A former board in the legislative branch of the federal government responsible for establishing and monitoring copyright royalty rates for published and recorded materials. • Its functions are now performed by copyright arbitration royalty panels. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻48.1.]

coram (kor-əm), prep. [Latin] (Of a person) before; in the presence of.

coram domino rege (kor-əm dom-ə-noh ree-jee). [Latin] Hist. Before our lord the king.

coram ipso rege (kor-əm ip-soh ree-jee). [Latin] Hist. Before the king himself. — Also termed coram ipso domino rege.

“The court of king’s bench (so called because the king used formerly to sit there in person, the style of the court still being coram ipso rege) is the supreme court of common law in the kingdom . . .” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 41 (1768).

coram iudice (kor-əm joo-di-see). 1. In the presence of a judge. 2. JURISDICTION.

coram nobis (kor-əm noh-bis). [Latin “before us”] 1. Hist. A writ of error taken from a judgment of the King’s Bench. • “Before us” refers to the sovereign, in contrast to the writ coram vobis (“before you”), which refers to any court other than King’s Bench, esp. the Court of Common Pleas. 2. A writ of error directed to a court for review of its own judgment and predicated on alleged errors of fact. — Also termed writ of error coram nobis; writ of coram nobis; (misspelled) quorum nobis. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻1411; Judgment ↻334.]

coram non iudice (kor-əm non joo-di-see). [Latin “not before a judge”] 1. Outside the presence of a judge. 2. Before a judge or court that is not the proper one or that cannot take legal cognizance of the matter.

coram paribus (kor-əm par-ə-bəs). [Latin] Hist. Before the peers. • This phrase appeared in deed attestations.

Coram Rege Court. See KING’S BENCH.

coram sectatoribus (kor-əm sek-tə-tor-ə-bəs). [Law Latin] Hist. Before the suitors.

coram vobis (kor-əm voh-bis), n. [Latin “before you”] Hist. 1. A writ of error directed to a court other than the King’s Bench, esp. the Court of Common Pleas, to review its judgment.

“Certain errors in the process of the court, committed by the defaults of the clerks, or as to matters of fact, could be remedied by the court itself. The writ issued for this purpose was called a writ of error ‘coram vobis’ if the error was in the Common Pleas; ‘coram nobis’ if it was in the King’s Bench.” 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 224 (7th ed. 1956).

2. A writ of error sent by an appellate court to a trial court to review the trial court’s judgment based on an error of fact. — Also termed writ of error coram vobis; writ of coram vobis. [Cases: Courts ↻207.1.]

Cordon rule. A rule of the U.S. Senate requiring any committee that is reporting a bill amending current law to show in its report what wording the bill would strike from or insert into the current statute. • The rule is named for Senator Guy Cordon (1890–1969) of Oregon, who proposed it. The analogous rule in the U.S. House of Representatives is the Ramseyer rule. See RAMSEYER RULE.

core proceeding. Bankruptcy. 1. A proceeding involving claims that substantially affect the debtor-creditor relationship, such as an action to recover a preferential transfer. • In such a proceeding, the bankruptcy court, as opposed to the district court, conducts the trial or hearing and enters a final judgment. Cf. RELATED PROCEEDING. 2. In federal courts, an action involving subject matter that is clearly within the confines of federal bankruptcy law and the management of the bankrupt’s estate. • A federal bankruptcy court may also hear noncore matters that have an independent basis for subject-matter jurisdiction, such as a federal question. For a nonexclusive list of core proceedings, see 28 USCA § 157(b)(2). [Cases: Bankruptcy ↻2043–2063.]

core rights. 1. Human rights that are generally recognized and accepted throughout the world. • These rights include freedom from extrajudicial execution, torture, and arbitrary arrest and detention. Core rights are embodied in many human rights conventions, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. 2. Fundamental rights claimed within a social, cultural, or other context. • These are not universally recognized rights. For example, the ability to vote may be a fundamental right of citizens in one country but only a privilege limited to selected people in another.

corespondent. (1857) 1. A coparty who responds to a petition, such as a petition for a writ of certiorari. 2. In some states, a coparty who responds to an appeal. 3. Family law. In a divorce suit based on adultery, the person with whom the spouse is accused of having committed adultery. See RESPONDENT. [Cases: Divorce ↻26, 72.] core work product. See opinion work product under WORK PRODUCT.

corium forisfacere (kor-ee-əm for-is-fay-sə-ree). [Law Latin “to forfeit skin”] Hist. To whip (a person, esp. a servant) as punishment. — Also termed corium perdere.

corium redimere (kor-ee-əm ri-dim-ər-ee). [Latin] Hist. To redeem one’s skin. • This referred to a person who paid restitution for an offense.

cornage (kor-nij). [fr. Anglo-French corne “horn”] Hist. 1. A type of grand-serjeanty military tenure in which the tenant was bound to blow a horn to alert others whenever an enemy approached. 2. A form of tenure entitling a landowner to rent based on the number of horned cattle owned by the tenant. • Cornage may have developed into a type of serjeanty or knight-service tenure that obligated the tenant to blow a horn to warn of invaders, esp. along the border with Scotland. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 2) horn tenure. See KNIGHT-SERVICE; SERJEANTY. 3. A tribute of corn due only on special occasions, as distinguished from a regularly provided service. • This term has often been spelled coraage or coraagium, stemming perhaps from a spelling error in the 1569 edition of Bracton’s De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliae.

Cornelian law. See LEX CORNELIA.

corner, n. 1. The common end of two survey lines; an angle made by two boundary lines. [Cases: Boundaries ↻7.]

existent corner. A corner whose location can be verified by an original landmark, a surveyor’s field notes, or other reliable evidence.

lost corner. A point in a land description, such as a landmark or natural object, whose position cannot be reasonably determined from traces of the original marks or other acceptable evidence. • The location can be determined by reference to one or more independent points remaining in the description.

obliterated corner. A corner that can be located only with evidence other than that put in place by the original surveyor.

2. The acquisition of control over all or a dominant quantity of a commodity with the purpose of artificially enhancing the price, carried out by purchases and sales of the commodity — and of options and futures — in a way that depresses the market price so that the participants are enabled to purchase the commodity at satisfactory prices and withhold it from the market for a time, thereby inflating its price. • A corner accomplished by confederation, with the purpose of raising or depressing prices and operating on the market, is a criminal conspiracy if the means are unlawful.

corner influence. Property. In an appraisal, the additional value of a corner lot, esp. one zoned for commercial purposes, attributable to factors such as increased light and air, easier ingress and egress, greater accessibility by pedestrian and automotive traffic, and more space for displays and advertisements.

cornering the market. The act or process of acquiring ownership or control of a large portion of the available supply of a commodity or security, permitting manipulation of the commodity’s or security’s price.

Corn Products doctrine. Tax. The principle that a capital asset should be narrowly defined to exclude inventory-related property that is integrally tied to the day-to-day operations of a business. Corn Prods. Refining Co. v. C.I.R., 350 U.S. 46, 76 S.Ct. 20 (1955). [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3178, 3230.1.]

corody (kor- or kahr-ə-dee). Hist. An allowance of money, accommodation, food, or clothing given by a religious house to any person who signed over personal or real property or both in exchange or to a royal servant at the Crown’s request. • The amount of property required from a person who purchased a corody depended on the person’s age and remaining life expectancy. The Crown was entitled to a corody for a retired royal servant only from houses that the Crown had founded. Theoretically, the cost of a retired royal servant’s care would come from the royal purse. But since the royal purse did not always open, royal servants were not always accepted as corodiaries. Cf. LIFE-CARE CONTRACT. — Also spelled corrody. — corodiary (kə-roh-dee-air-ee), corrodiary, n.

corollary (kor- or kahr-ə-ler-ee), n. (14c) A proposition that follows from a proven proposition with little or no additional proof; something that naturally follows.

corona (kə-roh-nə). [Latin] Hist. The Crown. • This term formerly appeared in criminal pleadings, e.g., placita coronae (“pleas of the Crown”).

coronation case. Hist. Any of the many lawsuits for breach of contract resulting from the postponement of the coronation of Edward VII because of his illness. • In one case, for example, the defendant had agreed to hire a ship for watching the naval review by King Edward VII and for a day’s cruise around the fleet. The court held that the contract was not frustrated by the cancellation of the naval review — the day’s cruise around the fleet was still possible, and indeed, the ship could have been used for many other purposes.

coronator (kor- or kahr-ə-nay-tər). [fr. Latin corona “crown”] A coroner. See CORONER (2).

“The formal title of custos (or occasionally conservator placitorum corone) continued to be used throughout the Middle Ages, but the more convenient shorter forms coronarius, which was confined to a short period around 1200, and CORONATOR rapidly gained greater currency. The English form was ‘coroner’ or ‘crownier.’” R.F. Hunnisett, The Medieval Coroner 1 n.1 (1961).

coronatore eligendo. See DE CORONATORE ELIGENDO.

coronatore exonerando. See DE CORONATORE EXONERANDO.

coroner (kor- or kahr-ə-nər). (14c) 1. A public official whose duty is to investigate the causes and circumstances of any death that occurs suddenly, suspiciously, or violently. See MEDICAL EXAMINER. [Cases: Coroners ⇨ 1.] 2. Hist. A royal official with countywide jurisdiction to investigate deaths, to hold inquests, and to assume the duties of the sheriff if need be. • The coroner acted as a check on the sheriff, a local officer whose growing power threatened royal control over the counties. The coroner reported criminal activity to the king's justices in eyre. When the eyre court arrived in a county, it collected the coroner's roll to learn what had occurred in the county during the eyre's absence. The justices fined the coroner if he failed to produce the roll, or if they learned of criminal activity in the county from a source other than the roll.

corporate-opportunity doctrine. (1942) The rule that a corporation's directors, officers, and employees are precluded from using information gained as such to take personal advantage of any business opportunities that the corporation has an expectancy right or property interest in, or that in fairness should otherwise belong to the corporation. • In a partnership, the analogous principle is termed the firm-opportunity doctrine. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 315.]

corporate-owned life insurance. See LIFE INSURANCE.

corporate purpose. (18c) The general scope of the business objective for which a corporation was created. • A statement of corporate purpose is commonly required in the articles of incorporation.

corporate raider. A person or business that attempts to take control of a corporation, against its wishes, by buying its stock and replacing its management. — Often shortened to raider. — Also termed hostile bidder; unfriendly suitor. Cf. WHITE KNIGHT.

corporate resolution. See RESOLUTION (2).

corporate seal. See SEAL.

corporate speech. See SPEECH.

corporate stock. See STOCK.

corporate trustee. See TRUSTEE (1).

corporate veil. (1927) The legal assumption that the acts of a corporation are not the actions of its shareholders, so that the shareholders are exempt from liability for

corporation, n. (15c) An entity (usu. a business) having authority under law to act as a single person distinct from the shareholders who own it and having rights to issue stock and exist indefinitely; a group or succession of persons established in accordance with legal rules into a legal or juristic person that has a legal personality distinct from the natural persons who make it up, exists indefinitely apart from them, and has the legal powers that its constitution gives it. — Also termed corporation aggregate; aggregate corporation; body corporate; corporate body. See COMPANY. [Cases: Corporations ↷ 1.] — incorporate, vb. — corporate, adj.

"A corporation is an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law. . . . [I]t possesses only those properties which the charter of its creation confers upon it." Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 636 (1819) (Marshall, J.). acquired corporation. The corporation that no longer exists after a merger or acquisition. [Cases: Corporations ↷ 586.]

admitted corporation. A corporation licensed or authorized to do business within a particular state. — Also termed qualified corporation; corporation qualified to do business.

aggressor corporation. A corporation that attempts to obtain control of a publicly held corporation by (1) a direct cash tender, (2) a public exchange offer to shareholders, or (3) a merger, which requires the agreement of the target's management.

alien corporation. See foreign corporation.

brother-sister corporation. See sister corporation.

business corporation. A corporation formed to engage in commercial activity for profit. Cf. nonprofit corporation.

C corporation. A corporation whose income is taxed through it rather than through its shareholders. • Any corporation not electing S-corporation tax status under the Internal Revenue Code is a C corporation by default. — Also termed subchapter-C corporation. Cf. S corporation.

charitable corporation. (17c) A nonprofit corporation that is dedicated to benevolent purposes and thus entitled to special tax status under the Internal Revenue Code. — Also termed eleemosynary corporation. See CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷ 4045–4069.]

civil corporation. Any corporation other than a charitable or religious corporation.

clearing corporation. A corporation whose capital stock is held by or for a national security exchange or association registered under federal law such as the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

close corporation. (1840) A corporation whose stock is not freely traded and is held by only a few shareholders (often within the same family). • The requirements and privileges of close corporations vary by jurisdiction. — Also termed closely held corporation; closed corporation; (when family owned) family corporation. [Cases: Corporations ↷ 3.]

collapsible corporation. (1955) A corporation formed to give a short-term venture the appearance of a long-term investment in order to portray income as capital gain, rather than profit. • The corporation is typically formed for the sole purpose of purchasing property. The corporation is usu. dissolved before the property has generated substantial income. The Internal Revenue Service treats the income earned through a collapsible corporation as ordinary income rather than as capital gain. IRC (26 USCA) § 341(a). Cf. collapsible partnership under PARTNERSHIP. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷ 3728.]

conglomerate corporation. See CONGLOMERATE.

controlled corporation. 1. A corporation in which the majority of the stock is held by one individual or firm. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷ 3643.] 2. A corporation in which a substantial amount (but less than a majority) of the stock is held by one individual or firm. • Some states presume control with as little as 10%. [Cases: Corporations ↷ 1.4, 1.5.]

controlled foreign corporation. Tax. A foreign corporation in which more than 50% of the stock is owned by U.S. citizens who each own 10% or more of the voting stock. • These shareholders (known as U.S. shareholders) are required to report their pro rata share of certain passive income of the corporation. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 951–964. — Abbr. CFC. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷ 4119.]

cooperative corporation. An entity that has a corporate existence, but is primarily organized for the purpose of providing services and profits to its members and not for corporate profit. • The most common kind of cooperative corporation is formed to purchase real property, such as an apartment building, so that its shareholders may lease the apartments. See COOPERATIVE (1). [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷ 350, 352.]

corporation aggregate. 1. See CORPORATION. 2. Hist. A corporation made up of a number of individuals. Cf. corporation sole.

"The first division of corporations is into aggregate and sole. Corporations aggregate consist of many persons united together into one society, and are kept up by a perpetual succession of members, so as to continue forever: of which kind are the mayor and commonalty of a city, the head and fellows of a college, the dean and chapter of a cathedral church." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 457 (1765).

"The corporation aggregate is the typical corporation, which, at any given time, normally contains a number of individuals as members. This number may be great or small, varying from the hundreds of thousands of burgesses of a large borough to the two members of a private joint-stock company. It is even said that a corporation aggregate would not necessarily cease to exist if all its members died, leaving no successors; and this is, probably, sound doctrine." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 118 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

corporation by estoppel. A business that is deemed, by operation of law, to be a corporation because a third party dealt with the business as if it were a corporation, thus preventing the third party from holding a shareholder or officer of the corporation individually liable. See ESTOPPEL. [Cases: Corporations ⇨34.]

corporation by prescription. A corporation that, though lacking a charter, has acquired its corporate status through a long period of operating as a corporation. • Such an entity may engage in any enterprises that are not manifestly inconsistent with the purposes for which it is assumed to have been created. — Also termed common-law corporation. [Cases: Corporations ⇨27.]

corporation de jure. See de jure corporation.

corporation for profit. See for-profit corporation.

corporation qualified to do business. See admitted corporation.

corporation sole. A series of successive persons holding an office; a continuous legal personality that is attributed to successive holders of certain monarchical or ecclesiastical positions, such as kings, bishops, rectors, vicars, and the like. • This continuous personality is viewed, by legal fiction, as having the qualities of a corporation. Cf. corporation aggregate (2).

"It would have been quite possible to explain in the same way the devolution of the lands of the Crown, or of a bishopric, or of a rectory, from the sovereign, bishop, or rector, to his successor; but English law has preferred to introduce for this purpose the fiction, peculiar to itself, of a 'corporation sole.'" Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 350-51 (13th ed. 1924).

"But English Law knows another kind of corporation, the 'corporation sole', in which the group consists, not of a number of contemporary members, but of a succession of single members, of whom only one exists at any given time. This kind of corporation has been described by eminent legal writers as a 'freak'; but it is a freak which undoubtedly has a legal existence. It has been said that the Crown is the only common law lay corporation sole; though the Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, has been claimed as another example, and statutory examples, such as the Public Trustee and the Treasury Solicitor, are conspicuous. But the examples of ecclesiastical corporations sole are numerous. Every diocesan bishop, every rector of a parish, is a corporation sole, and can acquire and hold land (and now also personal property) even during the vacancy of the see or living, for the benefit of his successors, and can bind his successors by his lawful conveyances and contracts. But, obviously, the distinction between the bishop or rector, in his personal and in his corporate character, is even harder to grasp than that between the members of a corporation aggregate and the corporation itself . . ." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 118-19 (P.B. Fairest ed., 6th ed. 1967).

dead corporation. See dissolved corporation.

de facto corporation (di fak-toh). An incompletely formed corporation whose existence operates as a defense to personal liability of the directors, officers, and shareholders who in good faith thought they were operating the business as a duly formed corporation. — Also termed corporation de facto. [Cases: Corporations ⇨28.]

de jure corporation (di juur-ee). A corporation formed in accordance with all applicable laws and recognized as a corporation for liability purposes. — Also termed corporation de jure. [Cases: Corporations ⇨3.]

dissolved corporation. A corporation whose charter has expired or been revoked, relinquished, or voluntarily terminated. — Also termed dead corporation. [Cases: Corporations ⇨617-619.]

domestic corporation. (1819) 1. A corporation that is organized and chartered under the laws of a state. • The corporation is considered domestic by the chartering state. Cf. foreign corporation. 2. Tax. A corporation created or organized in the United States or under federal or state law. IRC (26 USCA) § 7701(a) (4). [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3623; Taxation ⇨3485.]

dormant corporation. 1. An inactive corporation; a legal corporation that is presently not operating. 2. A corporation whose authority to do business has been revoked or suspended either by operation of law (as by failure to pay franchise taxes) or by an act of the government official responsible for the corporation's authority.

dummy corporation. (1899) A corporation whose only function is to hide the principal's identity and to protect the principal from liability.

ecclesiastical corporation (i-klee-zee-as-tə-kəl). English law. A corporation that is organized for spiritual purposes or for the administration of property held for religious uses. — Also termed religious corporation. Cf. lay corporation.

"Ecclesiastical corporations. Corporations created for the furtherance of religion . . . They are of two kinds: (1) corporations sole, i.e., bishops, certain deans, parsons and vicars; and (2) corporations aggregate, i.e., deans and chapters, and formerly prior and convent, abbot and monks, and the like. Such corporations are called 'religious corporations,' or 'religious societies,' in the United States." 1 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 432 (1883).

eleemosynary corporation. See charitable corporation.

foreign corporation. (18c) A corporation that was organized and chartered under the laws of another state, government, or country <in Arizona, a California corporation is said to be a foreign corporation>. — Also termed alien corporation. Cf. domestic corporation. [Cases: Corporations ⇨632.]

"'Foreign' is defined as 'not native or domestic.' This is the meaning given to the word in the various judicial definitions of foreign corporations. With respect to a particular state or country, a corporation created by or under the laws of that state or country is a 'domestic corporation,' and any corporation that owes its existence to the laws of another state, government or country is a 'foreign corporation.' The difference between a domestic and a foreign corporation of the same kind is one of status, determined by considerations that are external to the corporation and not internal or organic. Moreover, foreign corporations of all classes fall equally within the definition. In many jurisdictions foreign corporations are defined by statute, and the statutory definitions do not differ in substance from that stated above." 17 Fletcher Cyclopaedia on the Law of Private Corporations § 8290, at 6-7 (1998).

for-profit corporation. A corporation organized for the purpose of making a profit; a business corporation. — Also termed corporation for profit; moneyed corporation.

government corporation. See public corporation (3).

joint-venture corporation. A corporation that has joined with one or more individuals or corporations to accomplish some specified project.

lay corporation. English law. A corporation made up of laypersons, and existing for a business or charitable purpose. Cf. ecclesiastical corporation.

limited-liability corporation. See limited-liability company under COMPANY.

migratory corporation. A corporation formed under the laws of another state than that of the incorporators' residence for the purpose of carrying on a significant portion of its business in the state of the incorporators' residence or in a state other than where it was incorporated.

moneyed corporation. 1. A corporation that uses money capital in its business, esp. one (such as a bank) that engages in the exchange or lending of money. 2. See for-profit corporation.

multinational corporation. A company with operations in two or more countries, generally allowing it to transfer funds and products according to price and demand conditions, subject to risks such as changes in exchange rates or political instability. — Also termed transnational corporation.

multistate corporation. A corporation incorporated under the laws of two or more states.

municipal corporation. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

municipal corporation de facto. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

nonprofit corporation. (1908) A corporation organized for some purpose other than making a profit, and usu. afforded special tax treatment. — Also termed not-for-profit corporation. Cf. business corporation. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 3; Internal Revenue ⇨ 4045-4071.]

nonstock corporation. A corporation that does not issue shares of stock as evidence of ownership but instead is owned by its members in accordance with a charter or agreement. • Examples are mutual insurance companies, charitable organizations, and private clubs. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 64.]

not-for-profit corporation. See nonprofit corporation.

parent corporation. (1893) A corporation that has a controlling interest in another corporation (called a subsidiary corporation), usu. through ownership of more than one-half the voting stock. — Often shortened to parent. — Also termed parent company.

political corporation. See public corporation (2).

private corporation. (17c) A corporation founded by and composed of private individuals principally for a nonpublic purpose, such as manufacturing, banking, and railroad corporations (including charitable and religious corporations). — Also termed quasi-individual. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 3.]

professional corporation. (1958) A corporation providing services of a type requiring a professional license. • A professional corporation may be made up of architects, accountants, lawyers, physicians, veterinarians, or the like. — Abbr. P.C.

publicly held corporation. See public corporation (1).

public-service corporation. (1894) A corporation whose operations serve a need of the general public, such as public transportation, communications, gas, water, or electricity. • This type of corporation is usu. subject to extensive governmental regulation. [Cases: Public Utilities ⇨ 103.]

qualified corporation. See admitted corporation.

quasi-corporation. An entity that exercises some of the functions of a corporation but that has not been granted corporate status by statute; esp., a public corporation with limited authority and powers (such as a county or school district). — Also sometimes termed quasi-municipal corporation. Cf. MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨ 2.]

quasi-public corporation. A for-profit corporation providing an essential public service. • An example is an electric company or other utility.

railroad corporation. A corporation organized to construct, maintain, and operate railroads. — Also termed railroad company. [Cases: Railroads ⇨ 13.]

"A railroad company or corporation is usually regarded as a private corporation, and justly so, as contrasted with a strictly public corporation, such as a city, county, township, or the like governmental subdivision, but it is not a private corporation in the strict sense that an ordinary business corporation is, for it is charged with duties of a public nature that distinguish it from a purely and strictly private corporation." 1 Byron K. Elliott & William F. Elliott, A Treatise on the Law of Railroads § 3, at 7 (3d ed. 1921).

registered corporation. (1928) A publicly held corporation, a security of which is registered under § 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. • The corporation is subject to the Act's periodic disclosure requirements and proxy regulations. 15 USCA § 78f.

religious corporation. A corporation created to carry out some ecclesiastical or religious purpose. See ecclesiastical corporation. [Cases: Religious Societies ↷4.]

S corporation. (1961) A corporation whose income is taxed through its shareholders rather than through the corporation itself. • Only corporations with a limited number of shareholders can elect S-corporation tax status under Subchapter S of the Internal Revenue Code. — Also termed subchapter-S corporation; tax-option corporation. Cf. C corporation. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3885–3903.]

shell corporation. (1969) A corporation that has no active business and usu. exists only in name as a vehicle for another company's business operations.

sister corporation. One of two or more corporations controlled by the same, or substantially the same, owners. — Also termed brother-sister corporation. [Cases: Corporations ↷1.5(2), 3.]

small-business corporation. (1898) 1. A corporation having no more than 75 shareholders and otherwise satisfying the requirements of the Internal Revenue Code provisions permitting a subchapter S election. IRC (26 USCA) § 1361. See S corporation. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3885–3903.] 2. A corporation receiving money for stock (as a contribution to capital and paid-in surplus) totaling not more than $1,000,000, and otherwise satisfying the requirements of the Internal Revenue Code section 1244(c) thereby enabling the shareholders to claim an ordinary loss on worthless stock. IRC (26 USCA) § 1244(c).

spiritual corporation. A corporation whose members are spiritual persons, such as bishops, rectors, and abbots.

stock corporation. A corporation in which the capital is contributed by the shareholders and divided into shares represented by certificates. [Cases: Corporations ↷65.]

subchapter-C corporation. See C corporation.

subchapter-S corporation. See S corporation.

subsidiary corporation. (1882) A corporation in which a parent corporation has a controlling share. — Often shortened to subsidiary; sub. [Cases: Corporations ↷174.]

surviving corporation. A corporation that acquires the assets and liabilities of another corporation by a merger or takeover. [Cases: Corporations ↷586.]

target corporation. A corporation over which control is being sought by another party. See TAKEOVER.

tax-option corporation. See S corporation.

thin corporation. A corporation with an excessive amount of debt in its capitalization. See thin capitalization under CAPITALIZATION. [Cases: Corporations ↷3.]

trading corporation. A corporation whose business involves the buying and selling of goods.

tramp corporation. A corporation chartered in a state where it does not conduct business. [Cases: Corporations ↷635.]

transnational corporation. See multinational corporation.

trust corporation. See trust company under COMPANY.

U.S.-owned foreign corporation. A foreign corporation in which 50% or more of the total combined voting power or total value of the stock is held directly or indirectly by U.S. citizens. IRC (26 USCA) § 904(g) (6). • If the dividend or interest income paid by a U.S. corporation is classified as a foreign source, the U.S. corporation is treated as a U.S.-owned foreign corporation. IRC (26 USCA) § 861. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4099–4105, 4119.]

Corporation Act. Hist. A 1661 English statute (13 Car. 2, St. 2, ch. 1) prohibiting the holding of public office by anyone who would not take the Anglican sacrament and the oaths of supremacy and allegiance. • The Act was repealed by the Promissory Oaths Act of 1871.

corporation counsel. See COUNSEL.

corporation court. See COURT.

Corporation for National and Community Service. A federal corporation that fosters civic responsibility, provides educational opportunity for those who contribute services, and oversees AmeriCorps (the domestic Peace Corps), Learn and Serve America, and the National Senior Service Corps. • It was established in 1993. 42 USCA § 12651.

corporator (kor-pə-ray-tər). (18c) 1. A member of a corporation. 2. INCORPORATOR.

"Usually, a member of a corporation, in which sense it includes a stockholder; also, one of the persons who are the original organizers or promoters of a new corporation. The corporators are not the corporation, for either may sue the other." William C. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 266 (1889).

corporeal (kor-por-ee-əl), adj. (15c) Having a physical, material existence; TANGIBLE <land and fixtures are corporeal property>. Cf. INCORPOREAL. — corporeality, n.

corporeal hereditament. See HEREDITAMENT.

corporeal ownership. See OWNERSHIP.

corporeal possession. See POSSESSION.

corporeal property. See PROPERTY.

corporeal thing. See THING.

corps diplomatique (kor dee-plə-ma-teeek). DIPLOMATIC CORPS.

corpus (kor-pəs), n. [Latin “body”] 1. The property for which a trustee is responsible; the trust principal. — Also termed res; trust estate; trust fund; trust property; trust res; trust. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 1.] 2. PRINCIPAL (4). Pl. corpora (kor-pə-rə), corpuses (kor-pə-səz).

corpus comitatus (kor-pəs kom-ə-tay-təs). [Latin “the body of a county”] Hist. The area within a territorial jurisdiction rather than on the “high seas” and hence where admiralty jurisdiction did not originally extend. See INFRA CORPUS COMITATUS.

corpus corporatum (kor-pəs kor-pə-ray-təm). [Latin] Hist. A corporate body; a corporation.

corpus cum causa (kor-pəs kəm kaw-zə). [Law Latin “the body with the cause”] Hist. A writ issuing out of Chancery to remove both a person and a record from an inferior court in order to review a judgment issued by the inferior court.

“The first use of the writ to challenge imprisonment was in cases of privilege; an officer of a central court, or a litigant there, could be released from imprisonment in another court by writ of privilege in habeas corpus form. The Court of Chancery at the same time developed a similar procedure for reviewing the cause of imprisonment in an inferior tribunal; this species of writ was called corpus cum causa, and it became a common remedy against the misuse of borough jurisdiction in the fifteenth century.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 168 (3d ed. 1990).

corpus delicti (kor-pəs də-lik-tī or -tee). [Latin “body of the crime”] (1818) 1. The fact of a transgression; ACTUS REUS. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 26; Homicide ⇨ 511.]

“The phrase ‘corpus delicti’ does not mean dead body, but body of the crime, and every offense has its corpus delicti. Its practical importance, however, has been very largely limited to the homicide cases. It concerns the usability in a criminal case of a confession made by the defendant outside of court.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 140 (3d ed. 1982).

2. Loosely, the material substance on which a crime has been committed; the physical evidence of a crime, such as the corpse of a murdered person. • Despite the common misunderstanding, a victim’s body could be evidence of a homicide but the prosecutor does not have to locate or present the body to meet the corpus delicti requirement.

corpus delicti rule. (1926) Criminal law. The doctrine that prohibits a prosecutor from proving the corpus delicti based solely on a defendant’s extrajudicial statements. • The prosecution must establish the corpus delicti with corroborating evidence to secure a conviction. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 412(6), 517.3.] corpus juris (kor-pəs joor-is). [Latin “body of law”] (1832) The law as the sum or collection of laws <Corpus Juris Secundum>. — Abbr. C.J.

corpus juris Angliae (kor-pəs joor-is ang-gee-ee). The entire body of English law, comprising the common law, statutory law, equity, and special law in its various forms.

Corpus Juris Canonici (kor-pəs joor-is kə-non-ə-sī). [Latin] Hist. The body of the canon law, compiled from the decrees and canons of the Roman Catholic Church. • The Corpus Juris Canonici emerged during the 12th century, beginning with the publication of Gratian’s Decretum (c. 1140). In addition to the Decretum, it includes Raymond of Peñafort’s Liber Extra (1234), the Liber Sextus of Pope Boniface VIII (1298), the Clementines of Pope Clement V (1313), the Extravagantes Joannis of Pope John XXII (1325), and Extravagantes Communes published by Pope John’s successors (1499-1502). In 1582, the entire collection was edited by a commission of church dignitaries and officially named the Corpus Juris Canonici. It remained the Catholic Church’s primary body of law until the promulgation of the Code of Canon Law in 1917, now replaced by that of 1983.

“After Gratian, later papal enactments, called ‘decretals,’ were collected and issued by the authority of various popes. . . . A revised edition of such ‘decretals’ . . . was presented to Pope Gregory IX in 1234 — only a short while, therefore, after the final form of Magna Carta in 1225 — and issued by him with statutory force. The revision freely made changes in the text of the enactments and the resulting compilation in four ‘books’ was regarded as a ‘Code,’ corresponding to the ‘Code’ of Justinian, just as the Decretum of Gratian corresponded to the Digest. . . . All these compilations and collections were, from the sixteenth century on, known as the Corpus Juris Canonici, the ‘Body of Canon Law,’ and formed the basis of the law administered in the Church courts.” Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 33-34 (1936).

Corpus Juris Civilis (kor-pəs joor-is sə-vil-is or sə-vī-lis). The body of the civil law, compiled and codified under the direction of the Roman emperor Justinian in A.D. 528-556. • The collection includes four works — the Institutes, the Digest (or Pandects), the Code, and the Novels. The title Corpus Juris Civilis was not original, or even early, but was modeled on the Corpus Juris Canonici and given in the 16th century and later to editions of the texts of the four component parts of the Roman law. See ROMAN LAW. Cf. JUSTINIAN CODE.

corpus possessionis (kor-pās pā-zes[h]-ee-oh-nis). [Latin] Roman law. The physical aspect of possession. See animus possidendi under ANIMUS.

corpus pro corpore (kor-pās proh kor-pā-ree). [Latin] Hist. Body for body. • This phrase commonly expressed the liability of a surety in a civil action (a mainpernor). See MAINPRISE.

correal (kor-ee-əl or kə-ree-əl), adj. [fr. Latin correus "codebtor"] Roman law. Of or relating to liability that is joint and several. • A correal debtor who paid an entire obligation had no right of action against a codebtor. See CORREUS; SOLIDARY.

"If Aulus, having first obtained from Titius the promise of a hundred aurei, turned to Seius and said, Sponde me mihi, Sei, cosdem centum aureos dare? (Do you engage, Seius, to give me the same one hundred aurei?), then if Seius answered, Spondeo, there was one single obligation for a hundred aurei, binding in full on each of the two debtors. Aulus could demand a hundred from Titius or a hundred from Seius, and in case of non-payment could sue either one, taking his choice between them, for the full amount. If either paid the hundred, whether willingly or by compulsion, the other was released: for there was but one debt, and that was now discharged. This kind of obligation is called correal obligation (correal, from con, and reus or rei, connected parties, parties associated in a common debt or credit)." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 258 (1881).

correality (kor-ee-əl-ə-tee), n. The quality or state of being correal; the relationship between parties to an obligation that terminates when an entire payment is made by one of two or more debtors to a creditor, or a payment is made by a debtor to one of two or more creditors.

"But there were circumstances, apart from indivisibility, in which each of the parties might be liable in full. . . . Several were liable or entitled, each in solidum, under an obligation, but the thing was due only once. Satisfaction by, or to, one of those liable, or entitled, ended the whole obligation, and action by one of the joint creditors, or against one of the debtors, not only 'novated' the obligation between the actual parties, but destroyed it altogether as against the others. This relation is commonly called correality (correi debendi vel credendi)." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 349-50 (2d ed. 1939).

correi credendi (kor-ee-i kri-den-dī). [Latin] Roman law. Joint creditors. — Also termed correi stipulandi (stip-yā-lan-dī). See STIPULATIO.

"The mode for stipulatio is stated in the Institutes. Of several stipulators (correi credendi, active correality) each asks the debtor and he answers once for all. Of several promisors (correi debendi, passive correality) the creditor asks each and they answer together." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 350 (2d ed. 1939).

correi debendi (kor-ee-i di-ben-dī). [Latin] Roman & Scots law. Joint debtors. — Also termed correi promittendi (proh-mi-ten-dī). See STIPULATIO.

"Correi Debendi — The name given by the Roman law to persons jointly bound. . . . In the Scotch law, if bound severally, and not jointly and severally, each is bound only for his share, whatever be the responsibility of the others." Hugh Barclay, A Digest of the Law of Scotland 196 (3d ed. 1865).

correi stipulandi. See CORREI CREDENDI.

correlative (kə-rel-ə-tiv), adj. (16c) 1. Related or corresponding; analogous. 2. Having or involving a reciprocal or mutually interdependent relationship <the term right is correlative with duty>.

correlative-rights doctrine. (1938) 1. Water law. The principle that adjoining landowners must limit their use of a common water source to a reasonable amount. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ⇨41, 101.]

"Under the correlative rights doctrine . . . rights to groundwater are determined by land ownership. However, owners of land overlying a single aquifer are each limited to a reasonable share of the total supply of groundwater. The share is usually based on the acreage owned." David H. Getches, Water Law in a Nutshell 249 (3d ed. 1997).

2. Oil & gas. The rule that a lessee's or landowner's right to capture oil and gas from the property is restricted by the duty to exercise that right without waste or negligence. • This is a corollary to the rule of capture. Cf. RULE OF CAPTURE (4). [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨47.]

"The word 'corruption' indicates impurity or debasement and when found in the criminal law it means depravity or gross impropriety." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 855 (3d ed. 1982).

2. The act of doing something with an intent to give some advantage inconsistent with official duty and the rights of others; a fiduciary's or official's use of a station or office to procure some benefit either personally or for someone else, contrary to the rights of others.

corruption in office. See official misconduct under MISCONDUCT.

corruption of a minor. See IMPAIRING THE MORALS OF A MINOR.

corruption of blood. A defunct doctrine, now considered unconstitutional, under which a person loses the ability to inherit or pass property as a result of an attainder or of being declared civilly dead. — Also termed corruption of the blood. See ATTAINDER; civil death (1) under DEATH.

"Corruption of blood is, when any one is attainted of felony or treason, then his blood is said to be corrupt; by means whereof neither his children, nor any of his blood, can be heirs to him, or to any other ancestor, for that they ought to claim by him. And if he were a noble or gentleman before, he and all his children are made thereby ignoble and ungentle . . ." Termes de la Ley 125 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

corruptly, adv. (16c) In a corrupt or depraved manner; by means of corruption or bribery. • As used in criminal-law statutes, corruptly usu. indicates a wrongful desire for pecuniary gain or other advantage.

corrupt-motive doctrine. (1962) Criminal law. The rule that conspiracy is punishable only if the agreement was entered into with an evil purpose, not merely with an intent to do the illegal act. • This doctrine — which originated in People v. Powell, 63 N.Y. 88 (1875) — has been rejected by the Model Penal Code. — Also termed Powell doctrine. [Cases: Conspiracy ↻24.5.]

corrupt-practices act. (1897) A federal or state statute that regulates campaign contributions and expenditures as well as their disclosure. [Cases: Elections ↻317.1.]

net book cost. The cost of property when it was first acquired or devoted to public use, minus accumulated depreciation. — Also termed rate-base value.

net cost. The cost of an item, arrived at by subtracting any financial gain from the total cost.

opportunity cost. (1894) The cost of acquiring an asset measured by the value of an alternative investment that is forgone <her opportunity cost of $1,000 in equipment was her consequent inability to invest that money in bonds>. — Also termed implicit cost.

original cost. See acquisition cost (1).

prime cost. The true price paid for goods on a bona fide purchase.

prophylactic cost. A party's expenditures to prepare property to withstand or prevent potential future harm. • These costs are not related to any existing property damage and are usu. not recoverable under insurance contracts. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2277.]

replacement cost. (1928) The cost of a substitute asset that is equivalent to an asset currently held. • The new asset has the same utility but may or may not be identical to the one replaced.

social cost. The cost to society of any particular practice or rule <although automobiles are undeniably beneficial to society, they carry a certain social cost in the lives that are lost every year on the road>.

sunk cost. (1916) A cost that has already been incurred and that cannot be recovered.

tangible cost. Oil & gas. A particular expense associated with drilling, such as the costs incurred for materials and land. • Drilling and testing costs are considered intangible.

transaction cost. (usu. pl.) A cost connected with a process transaction, such as a broker's commission, the time and effort expended to arrange a deal, or the cost involved in litigating a dispute.

unit cost. The cost of a single unit of a product or service; the total manufacturing cost divided by the number of units.

variable cost. (1953) The cost that varies in the short run in close relationship with changes in output.

2. (pl.) The charges or fees taxed by the court, such as filing fees, jury fees, courthouse fees, and reporter fees. — Also termed court costs. 3. (pl.) The expenses of litigation, prosecution, or other legal transaction, esp. those allowed in favor of one party against the other. • Some but not all states allow parties to claim attorney's fees as a litigation cost. — Also termed (in sense 3) litigation costs. [Cases: Costs ⇨ 2, 146–194, 194.16; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2721–2748.] accruing costs. Costs and expenses incurred after judgment.

costs of increase. See COSTS OF INCREASE.

costs of the day. Costs incurred in preparing for trial.

costs to abide event. Costs incurred by a successful party who is entitled to an award of those costs incurred at the conclusion of the matter; esp., appellate court's order for payment of costs to the party who finally prevails in a proceeding that has been returned to a lower court. [Cases: Costs ⇨69.]

interlocutory costs. Costs incurred during the pendency of an appeal.

taxable cost. A litigation-related expense that the prevailing party is entitled to as part of the court's award. [Cases: Costs ⇨2; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2735.]

cost accounting. See cost accounting method under ACCOUNTING METHOD.

cost accounting method. See ACCOUNTING METHOD.

cost and freight. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must (1) clear the goods for export, (2) arrange for transportation by water, and (3) pay the costs of shipping to the port of destination. • When the goods are safely stowed on the receiving ship while docked, the seller's delivery is complete; the risk of loss then passes to the buyer. This term is used only when goods are transported by sea or inland waterway. — Abbr. CF; CFR; C&F; CandF. Cf. COST, INSURANCE, AND FREIGHT; FREE ON BOARD. [Cases: Sales ⇨77(2), 202(5).]

cost approach. (1949) A method of appraising real property, based on the cost of building a new structure with the same utility, assuming that an informed buyer would pay no more for the property than it would cost to build a new structure having the same usefulness. Cf. MARKET APPROACH; INCOME APPROACH. [Cases: Taxation ⇨348(4).]

cost-benefit analysis. (1963) An analytical technique that weighs the costs of a proposed decision, holding, or project against the expected advantages, economic or otherwise.

cost-book mining company. An association of persons organized for the purpose of working mines or lodes, whose capital stock is divided into shares that are transferable without the consent of other members. • The management of the mine is entrusted to an agent called a purser. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨101.]

cost depletion. Oil & gas. The recovery of an oil-and-gas producer's basis (i.e., investment) in a producing well by deducting the basis proportionately over the producing life of the well. Treas. Reg. § 1.611-2. Cf. PERCENTAGE DEPLETION.

"Under cost depletion, the taxpayer in an oil and gas property deducts the basis in the property from the income as oil and gas are produced and sold. Cost depletion is calculated by a formula . . . [that] relates the recovery of the taxpayer's investment to the proportion that the current unit sales of oil and gas bear to the total anticipated sales of oil and gas from the property. The investment is recovered ratably over the life of the reserves." John S. Lowe, Oil and Gas Law in a Nutshell 353 (3d ed. 1995).

cost, insurance, and freight. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must (1) clear the goods for export, (2) arrange for transportation by water, (3) procure insurance against the buyer's risk of damage during carriage, and (4) pay the costs of shipping to the port of destination. • The seller's delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the goods are loaded on the receiving ship while docked in the port of shipment. This term is used only when goods are transported by sea or inland waterway. — Abbr. CIF. Cf. COST AND FREIGHT; FREE ON BOARD. [Cases: Sales ⇨77(2).]

"'C.i.f.' is a mercantile symbol that is commonly used in international sales contracts. It is defined by section 2-320 of the UCC and by the Incoterms — 1953 and the Revised American Foreign Trade Definitions — 1941. Under all of these definitions the letters 'c.i.f.' mean that the price covers the cost of the goods, the cost of insuring them for the benefit of the order of the buyer, and the cost of carrying them to the named point, almost always the destination. Like the other mercantile symbols, the meaning of 'C.I.F.' may be varied by agreement." William D. Hawkland, Uniform Commercial Code Series § 2-320:01 (1984).

CIF destination. A contractual term denoting that the price includes in a lump sum the cost of the goods and the insurance and freight to the named destination. — Also termed CIF place of destination. [Cases: Sales ⇨77(2).] cost justification. (1938) Under the Robinson-Patman Act, an affirmative defense against a charge of price discrimination dependent on the seller's showing that it incurs lower costs in serving those customers who are paying less. 15 USCA § 13(a). cost-of-capital method. A means of measuring a utility's cost of acquiring debt and equity capital. • Regulatory commissions often use this method to determine a fair rate of return for the utility's investors. [Cases: Gas ⇨14.4(10); Public Utilities ⇨129.]

cost of completion. See COST (1).

cost-of-living adjustment. An automatic increase or decrease in the amount of money, usu. support or maintenance, to be paid by one party to another, the adjustment being tied to the cost-of-living-adjustment figures maintained and updated by the federal government. — Abbr. COLA.

cost-of-living clause. (1953) A provision (as in a contract or lease) that gives an automatic wage, rent, or benefit increase tied in some way to cost-of-living rises in the economy. • A cost-of-living clause may also cover a decrease, though this is rare. See INFLATION. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨200.7.]

court-appointed counsel. See assigned counsel.

Cumis counsel. An independent attorney hired by a defendant in a lawsuit in which the damages may be covered by the defendant's insurer but a conflict of interest between the defendant and the insurer makes it unreasonable for an attorney selected by the insurer to represent the defendant. • The term derives from San Diego Federal Credit Union v. Cumis Ins. Society, Inc., 162 Cal. App. 3d 358 (1984), in which the concept was first clearly articulated. [Cases: Attorney and Client ⇨21.5(5); Insurance ⇨2929.]

house counsel. See in-house counsel.

independent counsel. (1920) An attorney hired to provide an unbiased opinion about a case or to conduct an impartial investigation; esp., an attorney appointed by a governmental branch or agency to investigate alleged misconduct within that branch or agency. See special prosecutor under PROSECUTOR. Cf. special counsel. [Cases: United States ⇨40.]

in-house counsel. (1974) One or more lawyers employed by a company. — Also termed house counsel; (when employed by a corporation) corporate counsel. Cf. corporate counsel.

junior counsel. 1. The younger or lower-ranking of two or more attorneys employed on the same side of a case, esp. someone charged with the less important aspects of the case. 2. English law. The barrister who assists Queen's Counsel.

King's Counsel. See KING'S COUNSEL.

count, n. (14c) Procedure. 1. The part of an indictment charging the suspect with a distinct offense. 2. In a complaint or similar pleading, the statement of a distinct claim. Cf. DECLARATION (7). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨627; Pleading ⇨53.]

¹This word . . . is in our old law-books used synonymously with declaration . . . But when the suit embraces two or more causes of action (each of which of course requires a common count. Hist. In a plaintiff's pleading in an action for debt, boilerplate language that is not founded on the circumstances of the individual case but is intended to guard against a possible variance and to enable the plaintiff to take advantage of any ground of liability that the proof may disclose. • In the action for indebitatus assumpsit, the common count stated that the defendant had failed to pay a debt as promised. See indebitatus assumpsit under ASSUMPSIT.

general count. A count that states the plaintiff's claim without undue particularity.

money count. Hist. A count, usu. founded on a simple contract, giving rise to a claim for payment of money.

"Simple contracts, express or implied, resulting in mere debts, are of so frequent occurrence as causes of action, that certain concise forms of counts were devised for suing upon them. These are called the 'indebitatus' or 'money counts.'" 2 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 833 (1883).

multiple counts. (1941) Several separate causes of action or charged offenses contained in a single pleading or indictment. [Cases: Indictment and Information ↷ 125, 126; Pleading ↷ 50.]

omnibus count (ahm-ni-bəs). A count that combines into one count all money claims, claims for goods sold and delivered, claims for work and labor, and claims for an account stated.

separate count. (18c) One of two or more criminal charges contained in one indictment, each charge constituting a separate indictment for which the accused may be tried. [Cases: Indictment and Information ↷ 97.]

several count. One of two or more counts in a pleading, each of which states a different cause of action. [Cases: Pleading ↷ 50, 53.]

special count. (18c) A section of a pleading in which the plaintiff's claim is stated with great particularity — usu. employed only when the pleading rules require specificity. [Cases: Pleading ↷ 18, 50.]

3. A canvassing. See CANVASS (2). 4. Hist. The plaintiff's declaration, or initial pleading, in a real action. See DECLARATION (7). 5. Patents. The part of a patent application that defines the subject matter in a priority contest (i.e., an interference) between two or more applications or between one or more applications and one or more patents. See INTERFERENCE (3). [Cases: Patents ↷ 106(2).]

count, vb. (17c) 1. In pleading, to declare or state; to narrate the facts that state a claim. 2. Hist. To plead orally; to plead or argue a case in court.

counted vote. See VOTE (4).

counter. Hist. An advocate or professional pleader; one who counts (i.e., orally recites) for a client. • Counters had coalesced into an identifiable group practicing before the Common Bench by the beginning of the 13th century. They were the leaders of the medieval legal profession, and over time came to be known as serjeants at law. — Also spelled countor; contor; counteur. See SERJEANT-AT-LAW.

counteraction. See COUNTERCLAIM.

counteraffidavit. See AFFIDAVIT.

counterbond. See BOND (2).

counterclaim, n. (18c) A claim for relief asserted against an opposing party after an original claim has been made; esp., a defendant's claim in opposition to or as a setoff against the plaintiff's claim. — Also termed counteraction; countersuit; cross-demand. Cf. CROSS-CLAIM. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷ 775–784; Pleading ↷ 138; Set-off and Counterclaim ↷ 9.] — counterclaim, vb. — counterclaimant, n.

"Under [Fed. R. Civ. P.] Rule 13 the court has broad discretion to allow claims to be joined in order to expedite the resolution of all controversies between the parties in one suit. Rule 13(c) specifically provides that the counterclaimant is not limited by recovery sought by the opposing party but may claim relief in excess of that amount. Further, the general legal rule is that it is immaterial whether a counterclaim is legal or equitable for purposes of determining whether it properly is brought under Rule 13. . . . The expectation is that this liberal joinder policy will further the elimination of circuity of action and multiple litigation." 6 Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 1403, at 15–16 (2d ed. 1990).

compulsory counterclaim. (1938) A counterclaim that must be asserted to be cognizable, usu. because it relates to the opposing party's claim and arises out of the same subject matter. • If a defendant fails to assert a compulsory counterclaim in the original action, that claim may not be brought in a later, separate action (with some exceptions). See Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷ 775; Judgment ↷ 585(4); Set-off and Counterclaim] ↷ 60.]

permissive counterclaim. (1924) A counterclaim that need not be asserted to be cognizable, usu. because it does not arise out of the same subject matter as the opposing party's claim or involves third parties over which the court does not have jurisdiction. • Permissive counterclaims may be brought in a later, separate action. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(b).

counter-complaint. See COMPLAINT.

counterdeed. See DEED.

counterfeisance (kown-tər-fee-zənts). Archaic. The act of counterfeiting.

counterfeit, vb. (14c) To unlawfully forge, copy, or imitate an item, esp. money or a negotiable instrument (such as a security or promissory note) or other officially issued item of value (such as a postage stamp or a food stamp), or to possess such an item without authorization and with the intent to deceive or defraud by presenting the item as genuine. • Counterfeiting includes producing or selling an item that displays a reproduction of a genuine trademark, usu. to deceive buyers into thinking they are purchasing genuine merchandise. See 18 USCA §§ 470 et seq. [Cases: Counterfeiting ↻1; Trademarks ↻1432.] — counterfeiting, n. — counterfeit, n. — counterfeit, adj.

"Literally a counterfeit is an imitation intended to pass for an original. Hence it is spurious or false, and to counterfeit is to make false. For this reason the verbs counterfeit and forge are often employed as synonyms and the same is true to some extent of the corresponding nouns. No error is involved in this usage but it is important to distinguish between the words as far as possible when used as the labels of criminal offenses. In the most restricted sense, [counterfeiting is the unlawful making of false money in the similitude of the genuine. At one time under English statutes it was made treason. Under modern statutes it is a felony." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 431-32 (3d ed. 1982).

Counterfeit Access Device and Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1984. A federal statute that criminalizes various computer-related activities such as accessing without permission a computer system belonging to a bank or the federal government, or using that access to improperly obtain anything of value. 18 USCA § 1030. [Cases: Telecommunications ↻1342, 1348.]

counterfeiter. A person who forges or otherwise makes a copy or an unauthorized imitation of something (esp. a document, currency, or another's signature) with the intent to deceive or defraud.

counterfeiting, n. The unlawful forgery, copying, or imitation of an item, esp. money or a negotiable instrument (such as a security or promissory note) or other officially issued item of value (such as a postage stamp), or the unauthorized possession of such an item, with the intent to deceive or defraud by claiming or passing the item as genuine. See 18 USCA §§ 470 et seq. [Cases: Counterfeiting ↻1.] — counterfeit, vb. — counterfeit, n. — counterfeit, adj.

counterfeit mark. See counterfeit trademark under TRADEMARK.

counterfeit recording. Copyright. An unauthorized copy of a copyright-protected recording's sounds, artwork, label, trademark, or packaging. — Also termed bootleg recording. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻70.]

counterfeit trademark. See TRADEMARK.

counterfoil (kown-tər-foyl), n. A detachable part of a writing on which the particulars of the main part are summarized. • The most common example is a check stub, on which the date, the payee, and the amount are typically noted.

counterletter. Civil law. A document in which the parties to a simulated contract record their true intentions. La. Civ. Code art. 2025. • For example, the record owner of real property may acknowledge in a counterletter that another person actually owns the property; the counterletter may then be used when the property is to be reconveyed after a period. A counterletter can have no effect against a third party acting in good faith. See simulated contract under CONTRACT.

countermand (kown-tər-mand), n. (16c) 1. A contradictory command that overrides or annuls a previous one. 2. An action that has the effect of voiding something previously ordered; a revocation. — countermand (kown-tər-mand or kown-), vb.

counteroffer, n. (18c) Contracts. An offeree's new offer that varies the terms of the original offer and that ordinarily rejects and terminates the original offer. • A late or defective acceptance is considered a counteroffer. See MIRROR-IMAGE RULE. [Cases: Contracts ↻24.] — counteroffer, vb. — counterofferor, n.

counterpart. (15c) 1. In conveying, a corresponding part of an instrument <the other half of the indenture — the counterpart — could not be found>. 2. One of two or more copies or duplicates of a legal instrument <this lease may be executed in any number of counterparts, each of which is considered an original>.

"Formerly 'part' was used as the opposite of 'counterpart,' in respect to covenants executed in duplicate, but now each copy is called a 'counterpart.'" 2 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 927 (1883).

"Counterparts are not nowadays written on the same parchment, but that which is executed by the grantor of an interest is called the 'original,' while that which is executed by the party to whom the interest passes — for example, a lessee — is called the 'counterpart.'" G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 674 (3d ed. 1933).

counterpromise, n. (18c) A promise made in exchange for another party's promise . See bilateral contract under CONTRACT. [Cases: Contracts ↻55.] — counterpromise, vb.

counter-roll. Hist. A record kept by an officer as a check on another officer's record, esp. the rolls maintained by a sheriff and a coroner.

countersign, vb. (16c) To write one's own name next to someone else's to verify the other signer's identity. [Cases: Signatures ↻1.] — countersignature, n.

countersuit. See COUNTERCLAIM.

countertrade. A type of international trade in which purchases made by an importing nation are linked to offsetting purchases made by the exporting nation.

"Countertrade is barter in modern clothes. It developed rapidly as a form of doing business with the USSR and Eastern European nations in the 1970s and 1980s, before the major economic and political reforms tended to diminish its emphasis as a means of doing business." Ralph H. Folsom & Michael W. Gordon, International Business Transactions § 2.1, at 46 (1995).

countervailable subsidy. See SUBSIDY.

countervailing duty. See DUTY (4).

countervailing equity. See EQUITY.

counter will. See mutual will under WILL.

counteur. See COUNTER.

countez (kawn-teez). [Law French] Hist. A direction given by a clerk of a court to a crier, after a jury was sworn, to count the jury members.

"Of this ignorance we may see daily instances, in the abuse of two legal terms of ancient French; one, the prologue to all proclamations, 'oyez, or hear ye,' which is generally pronounced most unmeaningly, 'O yes:' the other, a more pardonable mistake, viz., when a jury are all sworn, the officer bids the crier number them, for which the word in law-french is, 'countez;' but we now hear it pronounced in very good English, 'count these.'" 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 334 n.s (1769).

Counting House of the King's Household. See BOARD OF GREEN CLOTH.

countor. See COUNTER.

country. 1. A nation or political state; STATE (1). 2. The territory of such a nation or state.

county. (14c) The largest territorial division for local government within a state, generally considered to be a political subdivision and a quasi-corporation. • Every county exists as a result of a sovereign act of legislation, either constitutional or statutory, separating it from the rest of the state as an integral part of its territory and establishing it as one of the primary divisions of the state for purposes of civil administration. — Abbr. co. [Cases: Counties ↷1.]

"A county is a part of the realm, intirely governed by one sheriff under the king, but all subject to the general government of the realm; and therefore every county is as it were an intire body of itself, so that upon a feoffment of lands in many towns in one county, livery of seisin made in one parcel in any one of the towns in the name of all, sufficeth for all the lands in all the other towns within the same county: but upon a feoffment of lands in divers counties, there must be livery of seisin in every county." Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 79 (1759).

foreign county. Any county separate from that of a county where matters arising in the former county are called into question, though both may lie within the same state or country.

county agent. See juvenile officer under OFFICER (1).

county attorney. An attorney who represents a county in civil matters and, in some jurisdictions, prosecutes criminal offenders.

county auditor. See AUDITOR.

county bond. See BOND (3).

county commissioner. See COMMISSIONER.

county court. See COURT.

county judge. See JUDGE.

county officer. See OFFICER (1).

county palatine (pal-ə-tin or -tin). Hist. A county in which the lord held certain royal privileges, such as the right to pardon a felon or to have indictments recite that offenses were committed against the lord's — rather than the king's — peace. • In England, there were three such counties: Chester, Durham, and Lancaster. The separate legal systems in these counties were slowly eliminated; the last vestiges of a separate system were abolished by the Courts Act (1971). Cf. proprietary government under GOVERNMENT.

"The counties palatine were Chester, Durham, and Lancaster. Whatever may be the precise date at which these counties became 'Palatine,' it seems likely that there was in Saxon times a jurisdiction equivalent to that of the Palatine earl, and originating in usurpation and necessity. The Central Government was too far away both before and after the Conquest to control effectually the administration of the Marches, which were always turbulent and lawless districts." A.T. Carter, A History of English Legal Institutions 192 (4th ed. 1910).

county property. Property that a county is authorized to acquire, hold, or sell. [Cases: Counties ↷103.]

county purpose. An objective pursued by a county; esp., one that a county levies taxes for. [Cases: Counties ↷190.1.]

county seat. The municipality where a county's principal offices are located. — Also termed county town. [Cases: Counties ↷25.]

county supervisor. See county commissioner under COMMISSIONER.

county town. See COUNTY SEAT.

county warrant. See WARRANT (3).

coup d'état (koo day-tah). [French "stroke of state"] A sudden, usu. violent, change of government through seizure of power.

coupon (koo-pon). An interest or dividend certificate that is attached to another instrument, such as a bond, and that may be detached and separately presented for payment of a definite sum at a specified time. — Also termed interest coupon.

coupon bond. See BOND (3).

coupon interest rate. See coupon rate under INTEREST RATE.

coupon note. See NOTE (1).

coupon rate. See INTEREST RATE.

coupon security. See SECURITY.

coupon yield. See YIELD.

Cour de Cassation. See COURT OF CASSATION.

courier. A messenger, esp. one who delivers parcels, packages, and the like. • In international law, the term denotes a messenger duly authorized by a sending state to deliver a diplomatic pouch.

course of business. (17c) The normal routine in managing a trade or business. — Also termed ordinary course of business; regular course of business; ordinary course; regular course. [Cases: Customs and Usages ↷9.]

course of dealing. (16c) An established pattern of conduct between parties in a series of transactions (e.g., multiple sales of goods over a period of years). • If a dispute arises, the parties' course of dealing can be used as evidence of how they intended to carry out the transaction. Cf. COURSE OF PERFORMANCE; trade usage under USAGE. [Cases: Contracts ↷170.]

"A course of dealing is distinguishable from a course of performance. As defined by the [UCC], 'course of dealing' relates to conduct under other transactions which occurred with regularity prior to the formation of the present contract, while 'course of performance' relates to the conduct of the parties under the contract in question subsequent to its formation. However, in meaning the course of employment. (17c) Events that occur or circumstances that exist as a part of one's employment; esp., the time during which an employee furthers an employer's goals through employer-mandated directives. Cf. SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT; ZONE OF EMPLOYMENT.

course of performance. (18c) A sequence of previous performance by either party after an agreement has been entered into, when a contract involves repeated occasions for performance and both parties know the nature of the performance and have an opportunity to object to it. • A course of performance accepted or acquiesced in without objection is relevant to determining the meaning of the agreement. Cf. COURSE OF DEALING; trade usage under USAGE. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 170.]

"[C]ommon law courts have recognized the necessity of learning how people usually talk and what they usually mean by their language before one interprets their contracts. . . . '[C]ourse of performance' refers to a pattern of performance of the contract that is the subject of the dispute, as contrasted to 'course of dealing' which refers to the pattern of performance in prior contracts between the same parties." Claude Rohwer & Gordon D. Schaber, Contracts in a Nutshell 171-73 (4th ed. 1997).

"The phrase 'course of performance' relates to the way the parties have acted in performance of the particular contract in question. The judicial inquiry on this point is limited to the way the parties have acted in carrying out the particular contract that is in controversy, as distinguished from a general pattern of dealing that may embrace many other contracts or transactions between the parties." Ronald A. Anderson, Uniform Commercial Code § 1-205:74 (1997).

course of trade. See trade usage under USAGE.

court, n. (12c) 1. A governmental body consisting of one or more judges who sit to adjudicate disputes and administer justice .

"A court . . . is a permanently organized body, with independent judicial powers defined by law, meeting at a time and place fixed by law for the judicial public administration of justice." 1 William J. Hughes, Federal Practice, Jurisdiction & Procedure § 7, at 8 (1931).

2. The judge or judges who sit on such a governmental body <the court asked the parties to approach the bench>. 3. A legislative assembly <in Massachusetts, the General Court is the legislature>. 4. The locale for a legal proceeding <an out-of-court statement>. 5. The building where the judge or judges convene to adjudicate disputes and administer justice <the lawyers agreed to meet at the court at 8:00 a.m.>. — Also termed (in sense 5) courthouse.

admiralty court. See ADMIRALTY (1).

appellate court. (18c) A court with jurisdiction to review decisions of lower courts or administrative agencies. — Also termed appeals court; appeal court; court of appeals; court of appeal; court of review. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 203-254.]

"Appellate courts are among the most important institutions of governance in the United States. Through their review of trial court and administrative agency decisions they ensure that those bodies function lawfully and that litigants receive justice under law. Moreover, they provide authoritative interpretations of statutory and constitutional provisions and control the shaping of the common law in response to ever-changing circumstances; they are thus major sources of law." Daniel John Meador & Jordana Simone Bernstein, Appellate Courts in the United States v (1994).

Archdeacon's court. See COURT OF ARCHDEACON.

Article I Court. See legislative court.

constitutional court. (1823) 1. A court named or described and expressly protected in a constitution; esp., ARTICLE III COURT. 2. A court whose jurisdiction is solely or primarily over claims that legislation (and sometimes executive action) is inconsistent with a nation's constitution. • Germany, for example, has state constitutional courts and a Federal Constitutional Court.

consular court (kon-sə-lər). A court held by the consul of one country within the territory of another. • Consular courts are created by treaty, and their jurisdiction is usu. limited to civil cases. The last of the U.S. consular courts (Morocco) was abolished in 1956. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls ⇨ 6.]

coroner's court. English law. A common-law court that holds an inquisition if a person died a violent or unnatural death, died in prison, or died suddenly when the cause is not known. • The court also has jurisdiction over treasure trove.

corporation court. In some jurisdictions, a court that serves an incorporated municipality. See municipal court.

county court. (16c) 1. A court with powers and jurisdiction dictated by a state constitution or statute. • The county court may govern administrative or judicial matters, depending on state law. — Also termed parish court; (in Latin) curia comitatus. [Cases: Counties ⇨ 38; Courts ⇨ 182.] 2. See probate court.

court above. (17c) A court to which a case is appealed. — Also termed higher court; upper court.

court a quo (ay kwoh). A court from which a case has been removed or appealed.

court below. (17c) A trial court or intermediate appellate court from which a case is appealed. — Also termed lower court.

court christian. See ecclesiastical court.

court de facto. See de facto court.

court merchant. Hist. A court of limited jurisdiction that decided controversies arising between merchants, dealers, shipmasters, supercargoes, and other, usu. transient, people connected with trade. • Cases were usu. tried before a jury of merchants.

court not of record. An inferior court that is not required to routinely make a record of each proceeding and usu. does not. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 49.]

court of appeals. (17c) 1. An intermediate appellate court. — Also termed (as in California and England) court of appeal. See appellate court. 2. In New York and Maryland, the highest appellate court within the jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 226, 237(1).]

court of claims. A court with the authority to hear claims made against a state (or its political subdivision) for cases in which the state has waived sovereign immunity. — Also termed claims court. See UNITED STATES COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS. [Cases: States ⇨ 184.]

court of competent jurisdiction. A court that has the power and authority to do a particular act; one recognized by law as possessing the right to adjudicate a controversy. — Also termed competent court.

court of domestic relations. See family court.

court of equity. (16c) A court that (1) has jurisdiction in equity, (2) administers and decides controversies in accordance with the rules, principles, and precedents of equity, and (3) follows the forms and procedures of chancery. Cf. court of law. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 42(7).] court of instance. See trial court.

court of last resort. (17c) The court having the authority to handle the final appeal of a case, such as the U.S. Supreme Court.

court of law. (16c) 1. Broadly, any judicial tribunal that administers the laws of a state or nation. 2. A court that proceeds according to the course of the common law, and that is governed by its rules and principles. Cf. court of equity.

court of limited jurisdiction. A court with jurisdiction over only certain types of cases, or cases in which the amount in controversy is limited. [Cases: Courts ↻ 159–197.]

court of ordinary. See probate court.

court of original jurisdiction. (18c) A court where an action is initiated and first heard. [Cases: Courts ↻ 117.5–158.1, 206.]

court of record. (18c) 1. A court that is required to keep a record of its proceedings. • The court's records are presumed accurate and cannot be collaterally impeached. See OF RECORD (2). [Cases: Courts ↻ 48.]

"The distinction that we still draw between 'courts of record' and courts that are 'not of record' takes us back to early times when the king asserts that his own word as all that has taken place in his presence is incontestable. This privilege he communicates to his own special court; its testimony as to all that is done before it is conclusive. If any question arises as to what happened on a previous occasion, the justices decide this by recording or bearing record (recordantur, portant recordum). Other courts . . . may and, upon occasion, must bear record; but their records are not irrefragable . . . We easily slip into saying that a court whose record is incontrovertible is a court which has record (habet recordum) or is a court of record, while a court whose record may be disputed has no record (non habet recordum) and is no court of record." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 669 (2d ed. 1899).

2. A court that may fine and imprison people for contempt.

"A court of record is, strictly speaking, a court which has power to fine and imprison." Lancelot Feilding Everest, Everest and Strode's Law of Estoppel 13 (1923).

court of review. See appellate court.

court of special jurisdiction. See limited court.

court of special session. (1813) A court that has no stated term and is not continuous, but is organized only for hearing a particular case. [Cases: Courts ↻ 64.]

Crown Court. See CROWN COURT.

Dean of Guild Court. See DEAN OF GUILD COURT.

de facto court (di fak-toh). 1. A court functioning under the authority of a statute that is later adjudged to be invalid. — Also termed court de facto. [Cases: Courts dependency court. A court having jurisdiction over matters involving abused and neglected children, foster care, the termination of parental rights, and (sometimes) adoption.

diocesan court (di-ahs-i-sin). Eccles. law. A court exercising general or limited jurisdiction (as determined by patent, local custom, or legislation) of matters arising within a bishop's diocese. • Diocesan courts include the consistory court, the courts of the commissaries, and the courts of archdeacons.

district court. (18c) 1. A trial court having general jurisdiction within its judicial district. — Abbr. D.C. [Cases: Courts ↻ 191.] 2. Scots law. A local court, usu. staffed by lay magistrates, with jurisdiction over petty crimes.

divisional court. An English court made up of two or more judges from the High Court of Justice sitting in special cases that cannot be disposed of by one judge. • Each division of the High Court has a divisional court, e.g., the Divisional Court of the Family Division. With the exception of the Divisional Court of the Chancery Division, which has jurisdiction to review land-registration appeals from the county court, almost all judicial appeals are from decisions of a magistrates' court. The Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division hears appeals from the Crown Court or the magistrates' court by way of case stated in criminal prosecutions, which is the most frequent use of a divisional court.

domestic court. (1801) 1. A court having jurisdiction at the place of a party's residence or domicile. 2. See family court.

domestic-relations court. See family court.

drug court. A court that hears cases against nonviolent adults and juveniles, who are often first-time offenders and who are usu. charged with possession of a controlled substance or with committing a minor drug-related crime. • Drug courts focus on treatment rather than on incarceration. Cf. problem-solving court. [Cases: Chemical Dependents ↻ 12; Sentencing and Punishment ↻ 2051.]

ecclesiastical court (i-klee-zee-as-ti-kəl). 1. A religious court that hears matters concerning a particular religion. 2. In England, a court having jurisdiction over matters concerning the Church of England (the established church) as well as the duties and rights of the people serving it, but whose modern jurisdiction is limited to matters of ecclesiastical discipline and church property. — Also termed church court; court christian; spiritual court; (in Latin) christianitatis curia; curia christianitatis. [Cases: Religious Societies ↻ 12, 14.]

"The ecclesiastical courts exercised a jurisdiction which played a part of the development of the English legal system, and their work was not confined to controlling the clergy and doctrines of the Church. The jurisdiction of these courts was of particular significance before the Reformation, but, in certain matters and especially in matrimonial causes and the law of succession to property on death (testate and intestate succession), it remained of importance till the middle of the nineteenth century." 1 A.K.R. Kiralfy, Potter's Historical Introduction to English Law and Its Institutions 211 (4th ed. 1958).

examining court. (18c) A lower court (usu. presided over by a magistrate) that determines probable cause and sets bail at a preliminary hearing in a criminal case.

family court. (1923) A court having jurisdiction over matters involving divorce, child custody and support, paternity, domestic violence, and other family-law issues. — Also termed domestic-relations court; court of domestic relations; domestic court. [Cases: Courts ↻174.]

federal court. (18c) A court having federal jurisdiction, including the U.S. Supreme Court, circuit courts of appeals, district courts, bankruptcy courts, and tax courts. — Also termed United States court.

foreign court. (16c) 1. The court of a foreign nation. 2. The court of another state.

forty-days court. See COURT OF ATTACHMENTS.

franchise court. See FRANCHISE COURT.

full court. (16c) A court session that is attended by all the court's judges; an en banc court. — Also termed full bench.

General Court. See GENERAL COURT.

general-jurisdiction court. See court of general jurisdiction.

High Commission Court. See COURT OF HIGH COMMISSION.

High Court. 1. See HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE. 2. See HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY.

High Court of Admiralty. See HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

High Court of Chivalry. See HIGH COURT OF CHIVALRY.

High Court of Delegates. See COURT OF DELEGATES.

High Court of Errors and Appeals. See COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

High Court of Justice. See HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

High Court of Justiciary. See HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY.

higher court. See court above.

highest court. (16c) The court of last resort in a particular jurisdiction; a court whose decision is final and cannot be appealed because no higher court exists to consider the matter. • The U.S. Supreme Court, for example, is the highest federal court.

hot court. (1972) A court, esp. an appellate court, that is familiar with the briefs filed in the case, and therefore with the issues, before oral argument. • Typically, a hot court controls the oral argument with its questioning, as opposed to listening passively to set presentations of counsel.

housing court. A court dealing primarily with landlord-and-tenant matters, including disputes over maintenance, lease terms, and building and fire codes. [Cases: Courts ↻174.]

hundred court. Hist. In England, a larger court baron, held for all inhabitants of a particular hundred rather than a manor, in which the free suitors were the judges (jurors) and the steward the register. • A hundred court was not a court of record, and it resembled a court-baron in all respects except for its larger territorial jurisdiction. The last hundred court was abolished in 1971. — Also termed hundred moot. See COURT BARON.

impeachment court. See COURT FOR THE TRIAL OF IMPEACHMENTS.

inferior court. (17c) 1. Any court that is subordinate to the chief appellate tribunal within a judicial system. 2. A court of special, limited, or statutory jurisdiction, whose record must show the existence of jurisdiction in any given case to give its ruling presumptive validity. — Also termed lower court.

inquisitorial court. A court in which the inquisitorial system prevails.

instance court. 1. See trial court. 2. Hist. The admiralty court in England that exercised original jurisdiction in all cases except those involving prizes.

insular court. A federal court with jurisdiction over U.S. island territories, such as the Virgin Islands. [Cases: Federal Courts ↻1021-1024.]

intermediate court. An appellate court that is below a court of last resort.

International Court of Justice. See INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE.

International Criminal Court. See INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT.

International Trade Court. See UNITED STATES COURT OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE.

J.P. court. See justice court.

justice court. (16c) A court, presided over by a justice of the peace, that has jurisdiction to hear minor criminal cases, matters involving small amounts of money, or certain specified claims (such as forcible-entry-and-detainer suits). — Also termed justice-of-the-peace court; J.P. court. [Cases: Justices of the Peace ↻31.]

juvenile court. (1903) 1. A court having jurisdiction over cases involving children under a specified age, usu. 18. • Illinois enacted the first statewide juvenile-court act in 1899. Today every state has a specialized juvenile or family court with exclusive original delinquency jurisdiction. — Also termed children's court. [Cases: Courts ↻174.] 2. A court having special jurisdiction over orphaned, delinquent, dependent, and neglected children. • This type of juvenile court is created by statute and derives its power from the specific wording of the statute, usu. having exclusive original jurisdiction over matters involving abuse and neglect, adoption, status offenses, and delinquency. Generally, juvenile courts are special courts of a paternal nature that have jurisdiction over the care, custody, and control of children (as defined by the statute). The jurisdiction of the juvenile court is exercised as between the state (for the child) and the parents of the child and is not concerned with a custody controversy that does not affect the morale, health, or welfare of the child. A juvenile court is not a criminal court. The primary concern of a juvenile court is the child's immediate welfare. See UNIFORM JUVENILE COURT ACT. [Cases: Infants ↻196.] kangaroo court. (1849) 1. A self-appointed tribunal or mock court in which the principles of law and justice are disregarded, perverted, or parodied. • Kangaroo courts may be assembled by various groups, such as prisoners in a jail (to settle disputes between inmates) and players on a baseball team (to "punish" teammates who commit fielding errors). 2. A court or tribunal characterized by unauthorized or irregular procedures, esp. so as to render a fair proceeding impossible. 3. A sham legal proceeding. • The term's origin is uncertain, but it appears to be an Americanism. It has been traced to 1853 in the American West. "Kangaroo" might refer to the illogical leaps between "facts" and conclusions, or to the hapless defendant's quick bounce from court to gallows.

King's Court. See CURIA REGIS.

land court. A court having jurisdiction over land-related matters including: (1) exclusive original jurisdiction of applications for registration of land titles and related questions, writs of entry and petitions to clear title to real estate, petitions to determine the validity and extent of municipal zoning ordinances, bylaws, and regulations, and proceedings for foreclosure and redemption from tax titles; (2) original concurrent jurisdiction of declaratory judgment proceedings, shared with the supreme judicial, superior, and probate courts; and (3) original concurrent equity jurisdiction in land-related matters, except for cases of specific performance of land contracts. • Land courts today exist in the United States only in Massachusetts and Hawaii. [Cases: Courts ↻174, 472.1.] landed-estates court. Hist. English law. A statutorily established tribunal to dispose of encumbered real estate more promptly and easily than could be accomplished through the ordinary judicial machinery. • This type of court was first established in Ireland by acts of 11 & 12 Vict., ch. 48 and 12 & 13 Vict., ch. 77. The purpose of the court was to enable the owner, or any lessee of an unexpired term of 63 years or less, of encumbered land to apply to commissioners to direct a sale. The court served as a court of record and was called the Incumbered Estates Court. A later act abolished that court and created a new permanent tribunal called the Landed Estates Court. 21 & 22 Vict., ch. 72.

legatine court. A court held by a papal legate and having ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

legislative court. (1828) A court created by a statute, as opposed to one created by a constitution. — Also termed (in federal law) Article I court. [Cases: Courts ↻41.]

levy court. Hist. A court in the District of Columbia that exercised many of the functions typical of county commissioners or county supervisors in the states, such as constructing and repairing roads and bridges.

limited court. A court having special jurisdiction conferred by statute, such as a probate court. — Also termed court of special jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts ↻159-197.]

liquidation court. Any court in which a liquidation proceeding takes place.

local court. A court whose jurisdiction is limited to a particular territory, such as a state, municipal, or county court.

lord mayor's court. Hist. A court of law and equity that had jurisdiction in civil cases arising within the city of London and acted as the appellate court from the Chamberlain Court. • It was abolished by the Court Act of 1971.

magistrate's court (maj-i-strays or -strits). (1904) 1. A court with jurisdiction over minor criminal offenses. • Such a court also has the power to bind over for trial persons accused of more serious offenses. — Also termed police court. 2. A court with limited jurisdiction over minor criminal and civil matters. — Sometimes spelled (esp. in England) magistrates' court. — Also termed (in England) court of petty sessions; court of summary jurisdiction. [Cases: Justices of the Peace ↻31.]

mayor's court. A municipal court in which the mayor presides as the judge, with jurisdiction over minor criminal (and sometimes civil) matters, traffic offenses, and the like. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ↻635.]

military court. A court that has jurisdiction over members of the armed forces and that enforces the military court of inquiry. A military court that has special and limited jurisdiction and that is convened to investigate specific matters and, traditionally, to determine whether further procedures are warranted. 10 USCA § 935. [Cases: Armed Services ↷41.]

moot court. See MOOT COURT.

municipal court. (17c) A court having jurisdiction (usu. civil and criminal) over cases arising within the municipality in which it sits. • A municipal court's civil jurisdiction to issue a judgment is often limited to a small amount, and its criminal jurisdiction is limited to petty offenses. — Also termed city court. [Cases: Courts ↷186; Municipal Corporations ↷634.]

naturalization court. See NATURALIZATION COURT.

nisi prius court. See NISI PRIUS.

open court. See OPEN COURT.

ordinary's court. See probate court.

orphan's court. See probate court.

Palace Court. See PALACE COURT.

parish court. See county court.

peacemaker's court. Native American law. A tribal court that adjudicates, arbitrates, or mediates some disputes, usu. according to traditional and statutory tribal law. [Cases: Indians ↷220.]

people's court. See PEOPLE'S COURT.

piepowder court. See PIEPOWDER COURT.

police court. See magistrate's court (1).

policy court. An appellate court, usu. a court of last resort, that must consider a decision's effects not only on the litigants but also on public policy.

practice court. 1. See MOOT COURT. 2. (cap.) See BAIL COURT.

prerogative court. In New Jersey, a probate court. See probate court. [Cases: Courts ↷200.]

pretorial court. Hist. A 17th-century Maryland court that had jurisdiction over capital and other serious crimes. • It consisted of three judges: the colony's lord proprietor or his lieutenant-general, the Secretary or Register of the Council of State, and one other member of the Council.

prize court. A court having jurisdiction to adjudicate the captures made at sea in time of war. See PRIZE (2). Cf. COURT OF APPEALS IN CASES OF CAPTURE. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↷28(1).]

probate court. (18c) A court with the power to declare wills valid or invalid, to oversee the administration of estates and (in some states) to appoint guardians and approve the adoption of minors. — Also termed surrogate's court; surrogate court; court of ordinary; ordinary's court; county court; orphan's court (abbr. o.c.). See PROBATE. [Cases: Courts ↷198.]

provisional court. A federal court with jurisdiction and powers governed by the order granting its authority, such as a temporary court established in a conquered or occupied territory.

Quarter Sessions Court. See COURT OF GENERAL QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

recorder's court. A court having jurisdiction over felony cases. • This court exists in only a few jurisdictions, such as Michigan, where the recorder's court hears felony cases arising within the Detroit city limits. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷90.]

register's court. Hist. A probate court in Pennsylvania or Delaware. See probate court. [Cases: Courts ↷200.]

rogue court. A court that fails to apply controlling law in making its decisions.

sheriff's court. Scots law. The principal inferior court in Scotland, having both civil and criminal jurisdiction.

small-claims court. (1923) A court that informally and expeditiously adjudicates claims that seek damages below a specified monetary amount, usu. claims to collect small accounts or debts. — Also termed small-debts court; conciliation court. [Cases: Courts ↷174.] spiritual court. See ecclesiastical court.

state court. (18c) A court of the state judicial system, as opposed to a federal court.

superior court. (18c) 1. In some states, a trial court of general jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts ↷117.5–158.1.] 2. In Pennsylvania, an intermediate court between the trial court and the chief appellate court. [Cases: Courts ↷242(3).]

supreme court. See SUPREME COURT.

Supreme Court of the United States. See SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Supreme Judicial Court. (18c) The highest appellate court in Maine and Massachusetts. [Cases: Courts ↷225, 227.]

surrogate's court. See probate court.

tax court. See TAX COURT.

teen court. A group of teenagers who (1) hear cases involving juveniles, usu. first-time offenders, who have acknowledged their guilt or responsibility, and territorial court. A U.S. court established in a U.S. territory (such as the Virgin Islands) and serving as both a federal and state court. ● The Constitution authorizes Congress to create such court. U.S. Const. art. IV, § 3, cl. 2. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨ 1021–1024.]

(2) impose sanctions within a fixed range, usu. involving counseling, community service, or restitution. ● Some local jurisdictions in more than half the states have provided for this type of tribunal. The juvenile offender consents to the assessment of punishment by this jury of peers. The American Bar Association encourages the formation of these kinds of courts. — Also termed youth court.

Teind Court. See TEIND COURT.

three-judge court. A court made up of three judges; esp., a panel of three federal judges convened to hear a trial in which a statute is challenged on constitutional grounds. ● Three-judge courts were virtually abolished in 1976 when Congress restricted their jurisdiction to constitutional challenges to congressional reapportionments. Occasionally, Congress creates three-judge courts in special legislation, as with the 2002 campaign-finance law. Appeals from a three-judge court go directly to the Supreme Court. See 28 USCA § 2284. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨ 991–1013.]

traffic court. A court with jurisdiction over prosecutions for parking violations and infractions of road law.

trial court. (18c) A court of original jurisdiction where the evidence is first received and considered. — Also termed court of first instance; instance court; court of instance.

Tribal Court. See TRIBAL COURT.

unified family court. In some jurisdictions, a court that hears all family matters, including matters of divorce, juvenile delinquency, adoption, abuse and neglect, and criminal abuse. ● A unified family court also hears matters typically heard in family court (in jurisdictions that have statutory family courts) or in courts of general jurisdiction, such as divorce, paternity, and emancipation proceedings. Proponents of unified family courts cite the benefits of having all family-related matters heard by one court — for instance, the benefit of having a child testify only once rather than forcing the child to testify in one court in a divorce proceeding, in a different court in criminal proceedings against an abuser, and in yet another in a civil proceeding initiated by Child Protective Services. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 174.]

court-appointed special advocate. A trained volunteer appointed by a court to represent the interests of a child in an abuse or neglect case. — Abbr. CASA. Cf. guardian ad litem under GUARDIAN. [Cases: Infants ⇨ 205.]

Court Appointed Special Advocates. A federally funded program in which trained laypersons act on behalf of children in abuse and neglect cases. ● The CASA program began in 1977 in Seattle, Washington. In 1989, the American Bar Association endorsed using a combination of CASA volunteers and attorneys in abuse and neglect cases. CASA volunteers are sanctioned by the ABA as permissible guardians ad litem. — Abbr. CASA. [Cases: Infants ⇨ 205.]

court baron. Hist. A manorial court that had jurisdiction over amounts in controversy of 40 shillings or less. ● According to some authorities, the court baron developed into two courts: the customary court baron for disputes involving copyholders, and the court baron proper (also known as the freeholders' court baron), in which freeholders were allowed to hold court concerning minor disputes. — Also termed freeholder's court baron.

"In Coke's day it was said that the lord of a manor had one court, 'a court baron,' for his freeholders and another court, 'a customary court,' for his copyholders, and that in the latter the lord or his steward was the judge. Now over his unfree men the lord had, according to the law of the king's court, almost unlimited power; short of maiming them he might do what he liked with them; and every tenant of an unfree tenement was a tenant at will. Nevertheless in the court rolls and the manuals for stewards which come to us from the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries we cannot discover two courts or two methods of constituting the court. Freeholders and serfs are said to owe suit to the same halimoot, and so far as we can see, the curia which pronounces judgment is always the same body." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 593 (2d ed. 1898).

court clinic. A medical clinic, established for the benefit of the courts, to which a judge may send a defendant for psychiatric evaluation or, esp. in the case of a juvenile, to explore why the defendant committed the offense and what treatment is appropriate.

"Court Clinics have developed in two ways: one, in which the clinic has its own social workers to take case histories and to investigate the past of the offenders, and the second is when the Clinic utilizes the probation department as historians and as therapists. In both types of clinics, a history is taken, appropriate psychological tests are given to the offender, with particular reference to his intelligence, and a physical examination and a psychiatric examination are made. Usually these clinics have a meeting in which the whole staff discuss the cases when a diagnosis is made and, finally a report is sent to the referring judge, informing him as to the probable reason why the offender has committed the offense, the appropriate treatment if any is necessary, and the probably outcome of the case if the treatment procedures recommended are carried out." Encyclopedia of Criminology 79-80 (Vernon C. courtesy supervision. (1970) Oversight of a parolee by a correctional agency located in a jurisdiction other than where the parolee was sentenced. • Courtesy supervision is usu. arranged informally between correctional authorities in cases in which the offense is not serious and the parolee's rehabilitative needs are better served in another jurisdiction.

Court for Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved.

Hist. A court established in 1848 to review questions of law arising in criminal cases. • Trial judges posed the postverdict questions of law to the Court, which decided whether error had been committed. The Court was abolished in 1907, and its jurisdiction was transferred to the Court of Criminal Appeal. — Also termed Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

"It was an old practice for the judge, in case of a conviction, if he felt a doubt as to the law, to respite judgment or sentence, and discuss the matter informally with the other judges. If they thought that the prisoner had been improperly convicted, he was pardoned. Statutory authority was given to this practice in 1848 by the establishment of the court for Crown Cases Reserved. All the judges were members of this court; and five, of whom the Lord Chief Justice must be one, formed a quorum." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 217 (7th ed. 1956).

Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. Hist. A court that exercised jurisdiction over family issues, such as legitimacy and divorce. • The Court, which was established in 1857, acquired the matrimonial jurisdiction previously exercised by the ecclesiastical courts. It consisted of the Lord Chancellor, the Chief Justices of the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, the Chief Baron of Exchequer, the senior puisne judges of the last three courts, and the Judge Ordinary. In most instances, the Judge Ordinary heard the cases. The Judicature Act of 1873 abolished the Court and transferred its jurisdiction to the Probate Divorce and Admiralty Division (now Family Division) of the High Court of Justice.

Court for the Correction of Errors. A court having jurisdiction to review a lower court. • The name was formerly used in New York and South Carolina.

Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors. Hist. A court located in London that had jurisdiction over bankruptcy matters. • The Bankruptcy Act of 1861 abolished the Court.

court for the trial of impeachments. (18c) A tribunal empowered to try a government officer or other person brought before it by the process of impeachment. • The U.S. Senate and the British House of Lords have this authority, as do the upper houses of most state legislatures. — Also termed impeachment court; court of impeachment.

court hand. Hist. A script style used by English court clerks, the words being abbreviated and contracted according to a set of common principles for maintaining brevity and uniformity. • This type of writing, along with the use of Latin (except for technical or untranslatable phrases), was banned early in the 18th century in an effort to make court records more accessible to nonlawyers.

"[T]echnical Latin continued in use from the time of its first introduction, till the subversion of our ancient constitution under Cromwell; when, among many other innovations in the law, some for the better and some for the worse, the language of our records was altered and turned into English. But, at the restoration of king Charles, this novelty was no longer countenanced; the practicers finding it very difficult to express themselves so concisely or significantly in any other language but the Latin. And thus it continued without any sensible inconvenience till about the year 1730, when it was again thought proper that the proceedings at law should be done into English, and it was accordingly so ordered by statute 4 Geo. II. c. 26. . . . What is said of the alteration of language by the statute 4 Geo. II. c. 26 will hold equally strong with respect to the prohibition of using the ancient immutable court hand in writing the records of other legal proceedings; whereby the reading of any record that is forty years old is now become the object of science, and calls for the help of an antiquarian." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 322-23 (1768).

courthouse steps. The figurative location of settlement negotiations that occur shortly before trial commences, regardless of the literal location of the negotiations <the parties settled the lawsuit on the courthouse steps>.

court lands. Hist. The part of a manor used for the lord's household. — Also termed (in Latin) curtiles terrae.

court leet (kort leet). Hist. A feudal court responsible for receiving frankpledges and notices of criminal accusations. • Courts leet exercised both governmental and judicial powers, but they declined in the 14th century after the justices in eyre began to take over serious criminal cases. The court met once or twice a year, and was presided over by the lord's steward, a lawyer who acted as judge.

court-martial, n. (18c) An ad hoc military court convened under military authority to try someone, particularly a member of the armed forces, accused of violating the Uniform Code of Military Justice. [Cases: Military Justice ↻ 870-898.] Pl. courts-martial. — court-martial, vb.

"[C]ourts-martial are not a part of the federal judicial system, and the procedure in such courts is regulated by the Articles of War, Army Regulations, orders of the President, and military custom." Alt Mayer v. Sanford, 148 F.2d 161, 162 (5th Cir. 1945).

BCD special court-martial. A special court-martial in which a possible punishment is a bad-conduct discharge (a "BCD").

general court-martial. A proceeding that is presided over by a military judge, and no fewer than five members (who serve as jurors), and that has jurisdiction over all the members of the armed forces. • It is the highest military trial court.

special court-martial. A proceeding that is presided over by a military judge and no fewer than three members (who serve as jurors) to hear noncapital offenses and prescribe a sanction of hard labor, dismissal, or extended confinement (up to one year). • It is the intermediate level of courts-martial.

summary court-martial. A proceeding presided over by a single commissioned officer who is jurisdictionally limited in what sanctions can be imposed. • It is the lowest level of courts-martial.

court-martial order. A written order containing the result of a court-martial trial.

Court-Martial Reports. A publication containing the opinions of the U.S. Court of Military Appeals and select decisions of the Courts of Military Review. • This publication appeared during the years 1951–1975. — Abbr. CMR.

court not of record. See COURT.

Court of Admiralty. See HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

court of ancient demesne. Hist. A court made up of freeholders of land held by the Crown (i.e., an ancient demesne). • The freeholders acted as judges much the same way that freeholders of an ordinary manor would in a court baron. See ancient demesne under DEMESNE; COURT BARON.

Court of Appeal. An English court of civil and criminal appellate jurisdiction established by the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875. • The court is made up of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Chief Justice, Master of the Rolls, President of the Family Division, Vice-Chancellor of the Chancery Division, former Lord Chancellors, Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and Lords Justices of Appeal. In practice it is made up of the Master of Rolls and the Lords Justices. It sits in several divisions, each having three members.

Court of Appeal in Chancery. Hist. An English court of intermediate appeal in equity cases, established in 1851 and abolished in 1873–1875, when its jurisdiction was transferred to the Court of Appeal.

court of appeals. See COURT.

Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims. The federal court that reviews decisions of the Board of Veterans Appeals. [Cases: Armed Services ↻ 154.]

Court of Appeals in Cases of Capture. Hist. A court responsible for reviewing state-court decisions concerning British ships captured by American privateers during the Revolution. • Congress established the court under the Articles of Confederation. It was the first federal court in the United States and the chief United States court from 1780 to 1787. Cf. prize court under COURT.

Court of Archdeacon (ahrch-dee-kən). Hist. Eccles. law. An inferior ecclesiastical court that had jurisdiction over cases arising within the archdeaconry and probate matters. • Appeal was to the Bishop's Court. The Court of Archdeacon was abolished in 1967. — Also termed Archdeacon's Court; Archdiaconal Court (ahr-kə-dī-ak-ən-əl).

Court of Arches. Eccles. law. The ecclesiastical court of the province of Canterbury, responsible for appeals from provincial diocesan courts. • The Pope heard appeals from the Court of Arches until the break with Rome prompted a transfer of the appellate jurisdiction to the Court of Delegates. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council now hears certain appeals from the Court of Arches. — Also termed Arches Court of Canterbury; Court of Canterbury; Court of the Official Principal. Cf. CHANCERY COURT OF YORK.

"The Court of Arches is the provincial court of the Archbishop of Canterbury. It is held by a judge generally called the Dean of the Arches. Its jurisdiction was important while testamentary cases were dealt with in the Ecclesiastical Courts. The name is derived from the fact that the court was originally held in the Church of St. Mary-le-Bow (Ecclesia Beatae Mariae de Arcubus), the steeple of which is raised on stone pillars formed archwise like bent bows." W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 184 n.11 (2d ed. 1949).

Court of Assistants. Hist. A colonial body organized in Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1630 to act as a legislature and court for the colony. Cf. GENERAL COURT.

"The court of assistants, made up of governor, deputy governor, and magistrates, heard appeals from lower courts, and took original jurisdiction in certain cases — for example, cases of divorce. Below it were the county courts." Lawrence M. Friedman, A History of American Law 40 (2d ed. 1985).

Court of Attachments. Hist. An inferior forest court with jurisdiction over trespasses of the royal forests.

• The judges of this court (the verderers) met every 40 days to hear charges made by the royal foresters. Major trespass cases were heard by the justices in eyre. — Also termed wood-mote; forty-days court. See VERDERER.

Court of Audience. Hist. Eccles. law. A court in which the Archbishop of York or Canterbury exercised personal jurisdiction. • This court was abolished in 1963.

"Just as the bishop did not deprive himself of all jurisdiction by delegation to an official or commissary, so the archbishop did not originally deprive himself of all jurisdiction by delegation to the official principal. He possessed a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the court of the Arches, which was exercised in the court of Audience. In later times this jurisdiction was exercised by the judge of the court of Audience. At one time the archbishop may have exercised a considerable part of this jurisdiction in this court." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 601 (7th ed. 1956).

Court of Augmentations. Hist. A court established in 1536 by Henry VIII to determine controversies arising from the royal policy of taking over property owned by monasteries. • The court was merged into the Court of Exchequer in 1554.

Court of Canterbury. See COURT OF ARCHES.

Court of Cassation (ka-say-shən). The highest court of France. • The court's name derives from its power to quash (casser) the decrees of inferior courts. — Also termed (more formally) Cour de Cassation.

court of chancery. See CHANCERY (1).

Court of Civil Appeals. (1892) An intermediate appellate court in some states, such as Alabama and (formerly) Texas. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 210, 247.]

court of claims. 1. See COURT. 2. (cap.) See UNITED STATES COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS.

Court of Common Pleas. (16c) 1. Hist. A superior court having jurisdiction of all real actions and common pleas (i.e., actions between subjects). • The Court was presided over by a chief justice with four (later five) puisne judges. In 1873 it became the Common Pleas Division of the High Court of Justice. In 1881 it merged into the Queen's Bench Division. 2. An intermediate-level court in some states, such as Arkansas. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 211.] 3. A trial court of general jurisdiction in some states, such as Ohio, Pennsylvania, and South Carolina. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 150, 151, 153.] — Also termed Court of Common Bench. — Abbr. C.P.

"Common pleas is the kings Court now held in Westminster hall, but in auncient time moveable, as appeareth by the statute called Magna charta . . . [U]ntill the time that Henry the third granted the great charter, there were but two courts in all, called the Kings courts: whereof one was the Exchequer, and the other, the kings bench, which was then called (curia Domini regis) and (aula regis) because it followed the court or king: and that upon the grant of that charter, the court of common pleas was erected and settled in one place certaine: viz. at Westminster . . . All civil causes both reall and personall are, or were in former times, tryed in this court, according to the strict lawe of the realme: and by Fortescue, cap. 50 it seemeth to have bene the onely court for reall causes." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

court of conscience. Hist. A local English court that had jurisdiction over small-debt cases. • The court was so called because its judgments were supposed to reflect equity and good conscience. County courts assumed the jurisdiction of the courts of conscience in 1846.

Court of Convocation. Eccles. law. An assembly of high-ranking provincial officials and representatives of the lower clergy having jurisdiction over cases of heresy, schism, and other ecclesiastical matters.

Court of Criminal Appeals. (1856) 1. For each armed service, an intermediate appellate court that reviews court-martial decisions. • The court was established by the Military Justice Act of 1968. 10 USCA §§ 859–876. — Formerly termed Court of Military Review (abbr. CMR). [Cases: Military Justice ⇨ 1411.] 2. In some jurisdictions, such as Texas and Oklahoma, the highest appellate court that hears criminal cases.

Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Hist. An Article III court created in 1929 to hear appeals in customs and patent cases. • This court was abolished in 1982 and was superseded by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. — Abbr. CCPA. See UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FEDERAL CIRCUIT. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 113.]

Court of Delegates. Hist. Eccles. law. A court serving as the final court of appeal for admiralty and ecclesiastical matters. • The Court was established in 1534 to serve in the stead of the Papal Curia when the English Church severed its ties with the Papacy. Six delegates, appointed to hear only one case, made up the Court, usu. three persons trained in common law and three in civil law. This mixture led to confused rulings and unreliable precedents that hindered the Court's credibility and ultimately led to its dissolution. The Court was abolished in 1833 and its jurisdiction transferred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. — Also termed High Court of Delegates.

"The crown had an absolute discretion as to the person to be appointed. But, as the lawyers of Doctors' Common were the only lawyers acquainted with canon or civil law, certain of them were usually included in the commission. . . . It is not surprising to find that the [Court of Delegates] was unsatisfactory. It was a shifting body, so that no general rules of procedure could be established. It did not as a rule give reasons for its decisions. Its members were only paid a guinea a day; and consequently it was usually composed of the junior civilians. On them, the judges of the common law courts, appointed as delegates, were obliged to rely for their law. In consequence of the dissatisfaction felt at its working the Ecclesiastical Commission of 1832, in a special report, recommended the transfer of its jurisdiction to the Privy Council . . ." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 605 (7th ed. 1956).

court of domestic relations. See family court under COURT.

Court of Earl Marshal. 1. See COURT OF THE LORD HIGH CONSTABLE AND EARL MARSHAL. 2. See HIGH COURT OF CHIVALRY.

court of equity. See COURT.

court of error. 1. Hist. Formerly, the Court of Exchequer Chamber and the House of Lords. • Appeals from common-law courts lay to the Court of Exchequer Chamber, and then to the House of Lords until 1873, when the Judicature Act gave jurisdiction of superior-court appeals to the Court of Appeal. Cf. COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. 2. Generally, a court having jurisdiction to review a lower court's rulings.

Court of Errors and Appeals. Hist. Formerly, the court of last resort in New Jersey and New York. — Also termed High Court of Errors and Appeals.

Court of Exchequer (eks-chek-ər or eks-chek-ər). Hist. A former English superior court responsible primarily for adjudicating disputes about the collection of public revenue. • In 1873 it became the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice. In 1881 that Division was merged into the Queen's Bench Division. See QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION. Cf. CHAMBER OF ACCOUNTS.

Court of Exchequer Chamber. Hist. 1. An informal assembly of common-law judges who (sometimes with the Lord Chancellor) gathered to discuss important cases that had adjourned pending an opinion from the Court. • This body never became a court of law in a technical sense, but judges gave great weight to its decisions. The last reported decision of this body is from 1738.

"Earlier than these two statutory courts was the practice, which apparently originated about the time of Edward I, of informal meetings of the judges in the Exchequer Chamber to decide matters connected with litigation. . . . The purpose of the meeting was to bring before the judges a point of law which caused difficulty and which had arisen in a case being heard before one or other of the courts. Any resolution passed did not constitute a judgment; it was left to the court concerned to make the appropriate decree, and the official record made no reference to the informal decision. . . . Civil cases were debated in the Exchequer Chamber as late as the seventeenth century, and criminal cases continued to be 'reserved' for full discussion by all the common law judges until the nineteenth century." A.K.R. Kiralfy, Potter's Outlines of English Legal History 202-04 (5th ed. 1958).

2. A court created by statute in 1357 to hear appeals from the Court of Exchequer. 3. A court created by statute in 1585 to hear appeals from the King's Bench. • This court consisted of all the justices of the Common Pleas and the Barons of Exchequer who were serjeants. At least six judges were necessary to render a judgment.

"Parliament was only occasionally summoned in the sixteenth century; and as Parliament was the only court which could amend errors of the King's Bench, the want of a court which could hold regular sessions was much felt. To supply this want a new court of Exchequer Chamber was created in 1585 for the purpose of amending the errors of the King's Bench." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 244 (7th ed. 1956).

4. A court charged with hearing appeals from the common-law courts of record. • This court was created in 1830 by combining the courts created by the statutes of 1357 and 1585. Appeals from one common-law court were heard by judges from the other two courts.

"This complicated system of appellate courts was abolished in 1830, when a new Court of Exchequer Chamber was set up as the court of error from each of the three common law courts. It was composed of the judges of the two common law courts other than those of the court appealed from. At the same time the right of the King's Bench to hear error from the Common Pleas was abolished. From the judgment of this new court a further appeal still lay to the House of Lords. This court was thus, until the Judicature Act, 1873, a court of intermediate appeals. Its jurisdiction after the Judicature Act passed to the Court of Appeal which was then created." W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 144 (2d ed. 1949).

Court of Faculties. Eccles. law. An archbishop's tribunal that grants special dispensations (such as a marriage license) and decides questions relating to monuments and mortuary matters. See MASTER OF THE FACULTIES.

court of general jurisdiction. See COURT.

Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace. Hist.

1. English law. A court of criminal jurisdiction held in each county (or borough) once in every quarter of a year. • The court was made up of a county's justices of the peace. It committed certain cases to the Assizes. Quarter Sessions were abolished in 1971, with most jurisdiction transferred to the Crown Court. — Often shortened to Quarter Sessions; Sessions.

"The court of general quarter sessions of the peace is a court that must be held in every county, once in every quarter of a year It is held before two or more justices of the peace, one of which must be of the quorum. The jurisdiction of this court, by statute 34 Edw. III. c. I. extends to the trying and determining all felonies and trespasses whatsoever, though they seldom, if ever, try any greater offence than small felonies within the benefit of clergy" 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 268 (1769).

2. A court held in some states four times a year with jurisdiction over misdemeanors and occasionally tasks of an administrative nature, such as the care of public roads and bridges. — Often shortened to Quarter Sessions Court. — Also termed Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace.

Court of Great Sessions in Wales. Hist. A common-law court established in 1543 in Wales with jurisdiction equivalent to that of the English assizes. • The Court of Great Sessions was bound to follow English law, but not necessarily English case precedent. — Also termed King's Great Sessions in Wales.

"There was no outcry when, in 1536, 'the sinister usages and customs' of the Welsh were abrogated and Welsh subjects were granted the same laws and liberties as the English. . . . A new system of courts, called the Great Sessions in Wales, was set up. The courts were to sit twice a year in four circuits, each comprising three counties, and to each circuit were appointed justices 'learned in the laws of this realm'. These courts operated alongside the English courts, and they had the same jurisdiction in Wales as the King's Bench and Common Pleas had in England. . . . In 1830 the Great Sessions were abolished, and by complete procedural assimilation England and Wales became at last one unified jurisdiction, two extra circuits being added to the English assize system." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 37-38 (3d ed. 1990).

Court of High Commission. Hist. Eccles. law. A tribunal responsible for inquiring into religious offenses such as the holding of heretical opinions, and absence from church. • Functioning as a court, the High Commission also prosecuted violations of the Acts of Supremacy and Uniformity (1559), the statutes that gave the Crown supreme power over the Church of England. The Commission's broad powers and use of civil-law procedures in ways counter to the common law (such as compelling suspects to testify against themselves) sparked opposition to its existence. Its close relationship with the Court of Star Chamber hastened its demise (along with the Star Chamber) in 1641. — Also termed High Commission Court.

"[T]he court of the king's high commission in causes ecclesiastical . . . was intended to vindicate the dignity and peace of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offences, contempts, and enormities. Under the shelter of which very general words, means were found in that and the two succeeding reigns, to vest in the high commissioners extraordinary and almost despotic powers, of fining and imprisoning; which they exerted much beyond the degree of the offence itself, and frequently over offences by no means of spiritual cognizance. For these reasons this court was justly abolished by Statute 16 Car. 1, c. 11. And the weak and illegal attempt that was made to revive it, during the reign of King James the second, served only to hasten that infatuated prince's ruin." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 67-68 (1768).

Court of Honor. Hist. 1. English law. A feudal court of the manor. 2. English law. A court with jurisdiction to hear complaints concerning either affronts to honor or encroachments in precedence rights, heraldry, or coat-armor. 3. A tribunal of army officers convened to review and punish any dereliction from a code of honor.

Court of Hustings (hæs-tingz). Hist. 1. English law. A local court with jurisdiction over real and mixed actions, held in the Guildhall of London before the Recorder, the Lord Mayor, and Sheriff (the latter two officials serving as honorary judges). • This court dates from before the Conquest. 2. Formerly, a local court in Virginia. — Also termed curia burgi. See HUSTING.

Court of Orphans. Hist. In Maryland and Pennsylvania, a court that exercised probate jurisdiction.

Court of Oyer and Terminer (oy-ər an[d] tər-mə-nər). (17c) 1. Hist. An assize court commissioned by the Crown to pass through the counties two or more times a year and hear felonies and treason cases. • The judges sat by virtue of several commissions, each of which, strictly speaking, created a separate and distinct court. A judge with an oyer and terminer commission, for example, was allowed to hear only cases of felony and treason; he could not try persons charged with other criminal offenses. But if the judge also carried a commission of gaol delivery (as most did), he could try all prisoners held in gaol for any offense; in this way most Courts of Oyer and Terminer gathered full criminal jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the assize courts was taken over by the Crown Court in 1971. See ASSIZE (1); COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER; COMMISSION OF GAOL DELIVERY. 2. In some states, a court of higher criminal jurisdiction.

Court of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery. Hist. 1. A court that carries the commissions of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery. See COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER; COMMISSION OF GAOL DELIVERY. 2. In Pennsylvania, a court of criminal jurisdiction.

Court of Peculiars. Hist. Eccles. law. A branch of the Court of Arches that had jurisdiction over the provincial parishes of Canterbury that were exempt from the jurisdiction of the diocesan bishop and responsible to the metropolitan only. • The Court of Peculiars was abolished in the 19th century. See COURT OF ARCHES; PECULIAR.

court of petty sessions. See magistrate's court under COURT.

court of piepowder. See PIEPOWDER COURT.

Court of Pleas. Hist. A court of the county palatine of Durham, England having a local common-law jurisdiction. • It was abolished in 1873, and its jurisdiction was transferred to the High Court. — Also termed Court of Pleas of Durham.

Court of Policies of Insurance. Hist. A court that determines in a summary way insurance-policy issues arising between merchants. • The Court's jurisdiction extended only to London, and appeal was taken to the Court of Chancery. The Court was abolished in 1863. — Also termed Court of Policies of Assurance.

Court of Private Land Claims. Hist. A federal court — in existence from 1891 to 1895 — with jurisdiction to hear private parties' claims to public-domain land located in the southwestern part of the United States and deriving from Spanish or Mexican grants.

Court of Probate. 1. Hist. A court established in 1857 to receive the testamentary jurisdiction formerly held by the ecclesiastical courts. • In 1873 the Court was merged into the High Court of Justice, where its jurisdiction was exercised by the Probate Divorce and Admiralty (now Family) Division. 2. See probate court under COURT.

Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace. See COURT OF GENERAL QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

Court of Queen's Bench. See QUEEN'S BENCH.

court of record. See COURT.

Court of Regard. Hist. A forest court responsible for looking into matters of waste and encroachment onto forest land (i.e., purpresture). • The Court also ensured that the feet of all mastiffs — a breed allowed in royal forests as guard dogs — within the forest were declawed and cut so as to prevent them from chasing deer.

Court of Requests. Hist. A royal court whose jurisdiction was mainly civil, though it exercised quasi-criminal jurisdiction in offenses such as riot and forgery. • Dating from 1483, the Court of Requests was a part of the Privy Council. It was disbanded in 1641 when Parliament limited the Privy Council's judicial functions.

"The establishment of the court of Requests was due to the large increase in the judicial business of the Council and the Chancery under the Tudors. . . . It was related both to the judicial side of the Council, which, as we shall see, came, in the course of the Tudor period, to be known as the court of Star Chamber, and to the court of Chancery. . . . [F]rom the end of Henry VIII's reign onwards, the legal assessors of the court assumed entire control, with the result that it became a court which was quite separate from the court of Star Chamber. These legal assessors were styled Masters of Requests, and from their title the court got its name." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 412-13 (7th ed. 1956).

court of review. See appellate court under COURT.

Court of Session. 1. Scots law. The supreme Scottish civil court. • Its jurisdiction corresponds generally to the English High Court of Justice. The Court of Session is divided into Outer House and Inner House. In Outer House, one judge hears cases of first instance. The Outer House's jurisdiction corresponds generally to the English High Court of Justice. The Outer House has two appellate chambers, the First and Second Division, in which three-judge panels sit. The Inner House's jurisdiction corresponds generally to the English Court of Appeal. The Court of Session also has several Lords Ordinary, who sit individually as trial judges. — Also termed Supreme Civil Court in Scotland. 2. In a few states, a court with jurisdiction over criminal cases.

Court of Shepway. Hist. The Court of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, exercising civil jurisdiction. • The civil jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports was abolished in 1855. See CINQUE PORTS.

court of special jurisdiction. See limited court under COURT.

court of special session. See COURT.

Court of Star Chamber. See STAR CHAMBER (1).

court of summary jurisdiction. See magistrate's court under COURT.

Court of Swainmote. See COURT OF SWEINMOTE.

Court of Swainmote (swayn-moht). Hist. A medieval forest court with jurisdiction over a variety of matters, esp. the right to graze animals during the summer when deer were fawning. • The forest freeholders (the sweins) made up the jury of the Court. By the 14th century, the Court's jurisdiction had expanded, and it acquired a form similar to the eyre courts. — Also spelled Court of Swainmote.

Court of Teinds. See TEIND COURT.

Court of the Chief Justice in Eyre (air). Hist. An eyre court responsible for trying offenses against the forest laws. • The jurisdiction of this Court was similar to that of the Court of Swainmote. — Also termed Court of Justice Seat.

Court of the Earl Marshal. 1. COURT OF THE LORD HIGH CONSTABLE AND EARL MARSHAL. 2. HIGH COURT OF CHIVALRY.

Court of the Lord High Admiral. See HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

Court of the Lord High Constable and Earl Marshal. Hist. A court having jurisdiction over diverse military matters, such as treason, prisoners of war, and disputed coats of arms. • The Lord High Constable and the Earl Marshal were the top military officials of the Norman kings. After the office of Lord High Constable was forfeited in 1521, the court continued on as the Court of the Earl Marshal, but its jurisdiction was reduced to questions of chivalry only. Cf. HIGH COURT OF CHIVALRY.

Court of the Lord High Steward. Hist. A court commissioned to try a peer indicted for treason or a felony. • The Court met only if the House of Lords was not in session. The Lord High Steward sat as a judge and decided questions of law, and the peers decided facts only. The Court last sat in 1688.

Court of the Lord High Steward of the Universities.

Hist. A court convened to try scholars, esp. Oxford or Cambridge students, who have been indicted for treason, felony, or mayhem.

Court of the Marshalsea (mahr-shəl-see). Hist. A court that moved about with the king, and had jurisdiction over certain cases arising within 12 miles of the king's residence (an area known as the verge). • The Court's steward and marshal acted as judges of the Court, and heard criminal cases and the common pleas of debt, covenant, and certain trespasses. The court's migratory nature made it inconvenient for litigants, and prompted its abolition in 1849. — Also termed Court of the Steward and Marshal. Cf. PALACE COURT.

Court of the Official Principal. See COURT OF ARCHES.

Court of the Steward and Marshal. See COURT OF THE MARSHALSEA.

Court of the Steward of the King's Household. Hist. A court having jurisdiction over criminal cases involving a member of the royal household. • This court's jurisdiction was at first limited to acts of violence by the king's servants toward a member of the king's council, but it was later given broader criminal authority. The Court was abolished in 1828.

Court of Verge. 1. See VERGE (1). 2. See VERGE (2).

Court of Veterans Appeals, U.S. See UNITED STATES COURT OF VETERANS APPEALS.

Court of Wards and Liveries. Hist. A court created in 1540 to assert the Crown's right to income from a variety of feudal tenures. • The Court's unpopularity led to its abolition in 1660.

"[I]nquests of office were more frequently in practice than at present, during the continuance of the military tenures among us: when, upon the death of every one of the king's tenants, an inquest of office was held, called an inquisitio post mortem, to enquire of what lands he died seised, who was his heir, and of what age, in order to entitle the king to his marriage, wardship, relief, primer seisin, or other advantages, as the circumstances of the case might turn out. To superintend and regulate these enquiries, the court of wards and liveries was instituted by statute 32 Hen. VIII c. 46 which was abolished at the restoration of king Charles the second, together with the oppressive tenures upon which it was founded." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 258 (1768).

cousin once removed. 1. A child of one's cousin. 2. A cousin of one's parent.

cousin twice removed. 1. A grandchild of one's cousin. 2. A cousin of one's grandparent.

first cousin. See COUSIN (1).

second cousin. A person related to another by descending from the same great-grandfather or great-grandmother.

third cousin. A person related to another by descending from the same great-great-grandfather or great-great-grandmother.

covenant (kəv-ə-nənt), n. (14c) 1. A formal agreement or promise, usu. in a contract or deed, to do or not do a particular act.

absolute covenant. (17c) A covenant that is not qualified or limited by any condition. Cf. conditional covenant.

affirmative covenant. A covenant that obligates a party to do some act; esp., an agreement that real property will be used in a certain way. • An affirmative covenant is more than a restriction on the use of property. For the real-property sense, see affirmative covenant under COVENANT (4). Cf. negative covenant. [Cases: Covenants ↷ 49, 69.]

assertory covenant (ə-sər-tə-ree). One that affirmatively states certain facts; an affirming promise under seal.

auxiliary covenant (awg-zil-yə-ree). A covenant that does not relate directly to the primary subject of the agreement, but to something connected to it. Cf. principal covenant.

collateral covenant (kə-lat-ə-rəl). A covenant entered into in connection with the grant of something, but that does not relate immediately to the thing granted; esp., a covenant in a deed or other sealed instrument not pertaining to the conveyed property. Cf. inherent covenant.

concurrent covenant. (1819) A covenant that requires performance by one party at the same time as another's performance.

conditional covenant. (17c) A covenant that is qualified by a condition. Cf. absolute covenant.

continuing covenant. A covenant that requires the successive performance of acts, such as an agreement to pay rent in installments.

covenant in deed. See express covenant.

covenant in law. See implied covenant.

covenant not to compete. See noncompetition covenant.

covenant not to execute. A covenant in which a party who has won a judgment agrees not to enforce it. • This covenant is most common in insurance law. [Cases: Insurance ↷ 3367; Release ↷ 37.]

covenant not to sue. (18c) A covenant in which a party having a right of action agrees not to assert that right in litigation. — Also termed contract not to sue. [Cases: Release ↷ 7, 37.]

"A covenant not to sue is a promise by the creditor not to sue either permanently or for a limited period. If the promise is one never to sue it operates as a discharge just as does a release. The theory is that should the creditor sue despite his promise not to, the debtor has a counterclaim for damages for breach of the creditor's covenant not to sue which is equal to and cancels the original claim. . . . If the covenant is not to sue for a limited time, the modern view is that the covenant may be raised as an affirmative defense to any action brought in violation of the covenant." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 21-11, 878-79 (3d ed. 1987).

dependent covenant. A covenant that imposes a duty that depends on the other party's prior performance.

• Until the performance, the other party does not have to perform. Cf. concurrent covenant; independent covenant.

executed covenant. A covenant that has been fully performed.

executory covenant (eg-zek-yə-tor-ee). A covenant that remains unperformed in whole or in part.

express covenant. (17c) A covenant created by the words of the parties. — Also termed covenant in deed. Cf. implied covenant.

implied covenant. (17c) A covenant that can be inferred from the whole agreement and the conduct of the parties. — Also termed covenant in law. See implied term under TERM (2). Cf. express covenant.

implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. (1924) An implied covenant to cooperate with the other party to an agreement so that both parties may obtain the full benefits of the agreement; an implied covenant to refrain from any act that would injure a contracting party's right to receive the benefit of the contract. • Breach of this covenant is often termed bad faith. See BAD FAITH (2). [Cases: Contracts ↷ 168.]

implied negative covenant. (1890) A covenant binding a grantor not to permit use of any reserved right in a manner that might destroy the benefits that would otherwise inure to the grantee.

independent covenant. A covenant that imposes a duty that does not depend on the other party's prior performance. Cf. dependent covenant.

inherent covenant. A covenant that relates directly to land, such as a covenant of quiet enjoyment. Cf. collateral covenant.

intransitive covenant. A covenant whose performance does not pass from the original covenantor to the covenantor's representatives. Cf. transitive covenant.

joint covenant. A covenant that binds two or more covenantors together. Cf. several covenant.

negative covenant. (18c) A covenant that requires a party to refrain from doing something; esp., in a real-estate financing transaction, the borrower's promise to the lender not to encumber or transfer the real estate as long as the loan remains unpaid. Cf. affirmative covenant.

noncompetition covenant. A promise, usu. in a sale-of-business, partnership, or employment contract, not to engage in the same type of business for a stated time in the same market as the buyer, partner, or employer. • Noncompetition covenants are valid to protect business goodwill in the sale of a company. In other contexts, they are generally disfavored as restraints of trade: courts generally enforce them for the duration of the business relationship, but provisions that extend beyond the termination of that relationship must be reasonable in scope, time, and territory. — Also termed noncompetition agreement; noncompete covenant; covenant not to compete; restrictive covenant; promise not to compete; contract not to compete. [Cases: Contracts ⇨115.] positive covenant. A covenant that requires a party to do something (such as to erect a fence within a specified time).

principal covenant. A covenant that relates directly to the principal matter of an agreement. Cf. auxiliary covenant.

restrictive covenant. See noncompetition covenant. (For the real-property sense, see restrictive covenant under COVENANT (4).)

several covenant. A covenant that binds two or more covenantors separately. — Also termed separate covenant. Cf. joint covenant.

transitive covenant. A covenant whose duty of performance passes from the original covenantor to the covenantor's representatives. Cf. intransitive covenant.

2. TREATY. 3. A common-law action to recover damages for breach of contract under seal. 4. A promise made in a deed or implied by law; esp., an obligation in a deed burdening or favoring a landowner. See contract under seal under CONTRACT. [Cases: Covenants ⇨1-84.] — covenantal, adj.

"A covenant is properly defined as a promise made in deed, although in practice the term is used rather more loosely to mean simply an obligation affecting a landowner whether created by deed or not." Peter Butt, Land Law 334-35 (2d ed. 1988).

"In their nature, covenants are first cousins to easements appurtenant. The burdened land corresponds to a servient tenement, the benefitted land, to a dominant tenement. In concept, the main difference between easements and covenants is that, whereas an easement allows its holder to go upon and to do something upon the servient tenement, the beneficiary of a covenant may not enter the burdened land, but may require the owner of that land to do, or more likely not to do, something on that land." Roger A. Cunningham et al., The Law of Property § 8.13, at 467 (2d ed. 1993).

affirmative covenant. An agreement that real property will be used in a certain way. • An affirmative covenant is more than a restriction on the use of property. It requires the owner to undertake certain acts on the property. For a more general definition of this term, see affirmative covenant under COVENANT (1).

covenant against encumbrances. (1807) A grantor's promise that the property has no visible or invisible encumbrances. • In a special warranty deed, the covenant is limited to encumbrances made by the grantor. — Also termed general covenant against encumbrances. Cf. special covenant against encumbrances. [Cases: Covenants ⇨42, 64.]

covenant appurtenant (ə-pər-tə-nənt). (1899) A covenant that is connected with the grantor's land; a covenant running with the land. Cf. covenant in gross. [Cases: Covenants ⇨53-70.] covenant for further assurances. (18c) A covenant to do whatever is reasonably necessary to perfect the title conveyed if it turns out to be imperfect. See further assurance under ASSURANCE. [Cases: Covenants ⇨44, 66.]

covenant for quiet enjoyment. (17c) 1. A covenant insuring against the consequences of a defective title or any other disturbance of the title. [Cases: Covenants ⇨43, 65.] 2. A covenant ensuring that the tenant will not be evicted or disturbed by the grantor or a person having a lien or superior title. • This covenant is sometimes treated as being synonymous with covenant of warranty. — Also termed covenant of quiet enjoyment.

covenant for title. (18c) A covenant that binds the grantor to ensure the completeness, security, and continuance of the title transferred. • This covenant usu. includes the covenants for seisin, against encumbrances, for the right to convey, for quiet enjoyment, and of warranty. [Cases: Covenants ⇨38-48, 62-67.]

covenant of good right to convey. See covenant of seisin.

covenant of habitability (hab-ə-tə-bil-ə-tee). See implied warranty of habitability under WARRANTY (2).

covenant of nonclaim. (1848) A covenant barring a grantor or the grantor's heirs from claiming title in the conveyed land.

covenant of quiet enjoyment. See covenant for quiet enjoyment.

covenant of seisin (see-zin). (18c) A covenant, usu. appearing in a warranty deed, stating that the grantor has an estate, or the right to convey an estate, of the quality and size that the grantor purports to convey. • For the covenant to be valid, the grantor must have both title and possession at the time of the grant. — Also termed covenant of good right to convey; right-to-convey covenant. [Cases: Covenants ⇨40, 62.]

covenant of warranty. (18c) A covenant by which the grantor agrees to defend the grantee against any lawful or reasonable claim of superior title by a third party and to indemnify the grantee for any loss sustained by the claim. • This covenant is sometimes treated as being synonymous with covenant for quiet enjoyment. The covenant is not breached if the grantor fails to defend the grantee against an invalid claim. See WARRANTY (1). [Cases: Covenants ↷ 46–48, 67.]

covenant running with the land. (18c) A covenant intimately and inherently involved with the land and therefore binding subsequent owners and successor grantees indefinitely. — Also termed real covenant. [Cases: Covenants ↷ 53–70.]

covenant running with the title. 1. A covenant that relates to the land but has a specific or reasonably determinable expiration time. 2. See covenant running with the land.

covenant to convey. A covenant in which the covenantor agrees to transfer an estate’s title to the covenantee.

covenant to renew. An executory contract that gives a lessee the right to renew the lease.

covenant to stand seised (seezd). Archaic. A covenant to convey land to a relative. • This covenant could not be used to convey land to a stranger; the only consideration that supports the covenant is the relationship by blood or marriage. [Cases: Deeds ↷ 24.]

future covenant. A covenant that can be breached only upon interference with the possession of the grantee or the grantee’s successors. • The covenants in this class are the covenant for further assurances, the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and the covenant of warranty. The distinction between future and present covenants becomes important in determining when the statute of limitations begins to run. Cf. present covenant.

general covenant against encumbrances. See covenant against encumbrances.

implied reciprocal covenant. A presumption that a promisee has, in return for a promise made respecting land, impliedly made a promise to the promisor respecting other land. — Also termed implied reciprocal servitude.

personal covenant. A covenant that creates a personal right or obligation enforceable only between the covenanting parties and that is not binding on the heirs or assigns of the parties. Cf. covenant running with the land. [Cases: Covenants ↷ 1.]

present covenant. A covenant that can be breached only at the time of conveyance. • The three covenants in this class are the covenant against encumbrances, the covenant of right to convey, and the covenant of seisin. Cf. future covenant.

restrictive covenant. (1811) 1. A private agreement, usu. in a deed or lease, that restricts the use or occupancy of real property, esp. by specifying lot sizes, building lines, architectural styles, and the uses to which the property may be put. • Some restrictive covenants, such as race-based restrictions on transfers, are unenforceable but do not necessarily void the deed. — Also termed restrictive covenant in equity; equitable easement; equitable servitude. [Cases: Covenants ↷ 49–52, 69.] 2. See noncompetition covenant under COVENANT (1).

right-to-convey covenant. See covenant of seisin.

special covenant against encumbrances. (1860) A grantor’s promise that the property is free of encumbrances created by the grantor only, not the grantor’s predecessors. See special warranty deed under DEED. Cf. covenant against encumbrances. [Cases: Covenants ↷ 42, 64.]

covenant, vb. (14c) To promise or undertake in a covenant; to agree formally.

covenantee (kəv-ə-nən-tee). (17c) The person to whom a promise by covenant is made; one entitled to the benefit of a covenant.

covenantor. See COVENANTOR.

covenant marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

covenant of good right to convey. See covenant of seisin under COVENANT (4).

covenantor (kəv-ə-nən-tər or kəv-ə-nən-tor). (17c) The person who makes a promise by covenant; one subject to the burden of a covenant. — Also spelled covenanter.

covenant running with the land. See COVENANT (4).

covenant to protect against drainage. See PROTECTION COVENANT.

Coventry Act (kəv-ən-tree or kov-). Hist. An 1803 English statute establishing the death penalty for anyone who, with malice aforethought, did “cut out or disable the tongue, put out an eye, slit the nose, cut off a nose or lip, or cut off or disable any limb or member of any subject; with the intention in so doing to maim or disfigure him.”

“[At common law,] an injury such as cutting off [a man’s] ear or nose did not constitute mayhem . . . , because it did not result in permanent disablement, but merely disfigured the victim. This was corrected by an early English statute. It seems that an assault was made upon Sir John Coventry on the street by persons who waylaid him and slit his nose in revenge for obnoxious words uttered by him in Parliament. This emphasized the weakness of the law of mayhem, and the so-called ‘Coventry Act’ was passed [in 1803].” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 239–40 (3d ed. 1982).

coventurer (koh-ven-chər-ər). (1913) A person who undertakes a joint venture with one or more persons. — Also termed co-adventurer. Cf. JOINT VENTURE. [Cases: Joint Adventures ↷ 1.1.]

cover, n. The purchase on the open market, by the buyer in a breach-of-contract dispute, of goods to substitute for those promised but never delivered by the seller. • Under UCC § 2-712, the buyer can recover from the seller the difference between the cost of the substituted goods and the original contract price. [Cases: Sales ↻ 418(7).]

coverage, n. (1912) 1. Inclusion of a risk under an insurance policy; the risks within the scope of an insurance policy. [Cases: Insurance ↻ 2091.] — cover, vb.

dependent coverage. An insurance provision for protection of an insured's dependents.

full coverage. Insurance protection that pays for the full amount of a loss with no deduction.

2. The ratio between corporate pretax income and corporate liability for bond interest payments.

coverage opinion. See OPINION (2).

coverage ratio. (1975) A measurement of a firm's ability to cover its financing charges.

cover-all clause. See MOTHER HUBBARD CLAUSE (2).

cover-baron. See COVERT BARON.

covered-interest arbitrage. See ARBITRAGE.

covered wages. See WAGE.

cover letter. See TRANSMITTAL LETTER.

cover note. A written statement by an insurance agent confirming that coverage is in effect. • The cover note is distinguished from a binder, which is prepared by the insurance company.

covert baron (kāv-ərt bār-ən). [Law French] Hist. The condition or status of a married woman at common law. — Also written cover-baron. — Also termed covert de baron.

"By marriage, the husband and wife are one person in law: that is, the very being or legal existence of the woman is suspended during the marriage, or at least is incorporated and consolidated into that of the husband; under whose wing, protection, and cover, she performs every thing; and is therefore called in our law-french a feme-covert; is said to be covert-baron, or under the protection and influence of her husband, her baron, or lord; and her condition during her marriage is called her coverture." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 430 (1765).

covert-entry search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

coverture (kāv-ər-čər also -tyoor), n. Archaic. The condition of being a married woman <under former law, a woman under coverture was allowed to sue only through the personality of her husband>. See feme covert under FEME. [Cases: Husband and Wife ↻ 55.] — covert (kāv-ərt), adj.

"Coverture, is a french word signifying any thing that covereth, as apparell, a coverlet . . . It is particularly applied in our common lawe, to the estate and condition of a married woman, who by the lawes of our realme, is in (potestate viri) and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the prejudice of her selfe or her husband, without his consent and privity; or at the least, without his allowance and confirmation." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

"Coverture is by law applied to the state and condition of a married woman, who is sub potestate viri, (under the power of her husband) and therefore unable to contract with any to the damage of herself or husband, without his consent and privity, or his allowance and confirmation thereof. When a woman is married she is called a Femme covert, and whatever is done concerning her during marriage is said to be done during coverture." The Pocket Lawyer and Family Conveyancer 96 (3d ed. 1833).

cover-up, n. Concealment of wrongdoing, esp. by a conspiracy of deception, nondisclosure, and destruction of evidence, usu. combined with a refusal to cooperate with investigators. • A cover-up often involves obstruction of justice. — cover up, vb.

covin (kāv-ən). Hist. A secret conspiracy or agreement between two or more persons to injure or defraud another. — Also spelled covine.

"Covin is a secret assent determined in the hearts of two or more, to the prejudice of another: As if a tenant for term of life, or tenant in tail, will secretly conspire with another, that the other shall recover against the tenant for life the land which he holds, &c. in prejudice of him in the reversion." Termes de la Ley 129 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

covinous (kāv-ə-nās), adj. Hist. Of a deceitful or fraudulent nature.

cozen (kəz-ən), vb. Hist. To cheat or defraud. — Also spelled cosen.

cozening (kəz-ən-ing). Hist. A deceitful practice; the offense of cheating, or fraudulent dealing. — Also spelled cosening. Cf. STELLIONATUS.

"Cosening is an offence unnamed, whereby any thing is done guilefully in or out of contracts, which cannot be fitly termed by any special name. It is called stellionatus in the civile law . . ." John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).

crack. vb. Slang. 1. To open (a lock). 2. To decode (security information); esp., to decipher or discover (a code, a password, etc. needed to break into a computer, network, server, or database). Cf. HACK. 3. To bypass (an encryption or a security device, esp. one designed to prevent unauthorized access, as in a cable television box, or copying, as in a DVD player). 4. To hack (a computer, network, server, or database) with the intention of causing damage or disruption.

cracking. n. A gerrymandering technique in which a geographically concentrated political or racial group that is large enough to constitute a district's dominant force

craft union. See UNION.

cramdown, n. (1954) Court confirmation of a Chapter 11 bankruptcy plan despite the opposition of certain creditors. • Under the Bankruptcy Code, a court may confirm a plan — even if it has not been accepted by all classes of creditors — if the plan (1) has been accepted by at least one impaired class, (2) does not discriminate unfairly, and (3) is fair and equitable. 11 USCA § 1129(b). [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3563.] — cram down, vb.

crash-and-dash. See RAM RAID.

crashworthiness doctrine. (1969) Products liability. The principle that the manufacturer of a product will be held strictly liable for injuries occurring in a collision, even if the collision results from an independent cause, to the extent that a defect in the product causes injuries above and beyond those that would have occurred in the collision itself. — Also termed second-collision doctrine; second-impact doctrine. [Cases: Products Liability ⇨ 20.8.]

crassa ignorantia (kras-ə ig-nə-ran-shee-ə). Hist. Gross ignorance, esp. in circumstances where a person was able to acquire knowledge and should have done so.

crassa negligentia (kras-ə neg-li-jen-shee-ə). [Latin] Hist. Crass negligence; gross negligence.

"In the Civil Law: Crassa negligentia is termed magna culpa or lata culpa, and it is in some cases deemed equivalent to fraud or deceit. . . . In the Common Law: it is defined to be the want of that care which every man of common sense, under the circumstances, takes of his own property." Henry C. Adams, A Juridical Glossary 510 (1886).

crastino (kras-tə-noh). [Law Latin] Hist. Tomorrow; on the morrow. • The return day of writs, so-called because the court terms always began on a saint's day; writs were therefore returnable the day after.

CRAT. abbr. Charitable-remainder annuity trust. See charitable remainder annuity trust under TRUST.

creancier (kree-ən-sər). [Law French] Hist. A creditor. — Also spelled creansour.

create a blank. Parliamentary law. To amend a motion by striking out one or more terms and replacing them with blanks rather than different terms. See amendment by striking out and inserting under AMENDMENT (3). • This form allows a vote on several competing proposals at one time, rather than the usual process of voting separately upon each proposal. See BLANK (2).

creationism. The teaching of the biblical version of the creation of the universe. • The United States Supreme Court held unconstitutional a Louisiana law that forbade the teaching of the theory of evolution unless biblical creation was also taught. The Court found the law violated the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment because it lacked a "clear secular purpose." Edwards v. Aguillard, 482 U.S. 578, 107 S.Ct. 2573 (1987).

See ANTI-EVOLUTION STATUTE. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 1354(2); Schools ⇨ 165.]

scientific creationism. A doctrine holding that the biblical account of creation is supported by scientific evidence.

creation science. The interpretation of scientific evidence, arguments, and knowledge to support creationism. See CREATIONISM.

creative sentence. See alternative sentence under SENTENCE.

creative work. See work of authorship under WORK (2).

creativity. Copyright. The degree to which a work displays imaginativeness beyond what a person of very ordinary talents might create. • Labor and expense are not elements of creativity; for that reason, they are not protected by copyright. Feist Pubs. Inc. v. Rural Tel. Serv. Co., 499 U.S. 340, 111 S.Ct. 1282 (1991). Cf. ORIGINALITY, SWEAT-OF-THE-BROW DOCTRINE. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 12.]

"Where creativity refers to the nature of the work itself, originality refers to the nature of the author's contribution to the work. Thus, a public domain painting may evince great creativity, but if a copyright claimant adds nothing of his own to it, by way of reproduction or otherwise, then copyright will be denied on the basis of lack of originality. Conversely, a work may be entirely the product of the claimant's independent efforts, and hence original, but may nevertheless be denied protection as a work of art if it is completely lacking in any modicum of creativity." 1 Melville B. Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 2.08[B][2], at 2-88 (Supp. 1995).

creature of statute. (1854) A doctrine, governmental agency, etc. that would not exist but for a legislative act that brought it into being.

credential. (usu. pl.) 1. A document or other evidence that proves one's authority or expertise. 2. A testimonial that a person is entitled to credit or to the right to exercise official power. 3. The letter of credence given to an ambassador or other representative of a foreign country. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls ⇨ 4.] 4. Parliamentary law. Evidence of a delegate's entitlement to be seated and vote in a convention or other deliberative assembly. • Before the meeting begins, the evidence usu. takes the form of a certificate or proof of election or appointment, which the delegate presents to a credentials committee so that the committee can list the delegate on its roster. During the meeting, the evidence usu. takes the form of a badge or card that the credentials committee issues to each delegate on its roster. See credentials committee under COMMITTEE. — credential, vb.

credentials committee. See COMMITTEE.

credibility, n. (16c) The quality that makes something (as a witness or some evidence) worthy of belief. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 553; Evidence ⇨ 588.] — credible, adj.

credible evidence. See EVIDENCE.

credible witness. See WITNESS.

credit, n. (16c) 1. Belief; trust <the jury gave credit to Benson's version>. 2. One's ability to borrow money; the faith in one's ability to pay debts . 3. The time that a seller gives the buyer to make the payment that is due <30 days' credit>. 4. The availability of funds either from a financial institution or under a letter of credit <the bank extended a line of credit to the customer>.

bank credit. Credit that a bank makes available to a borrower.

consumer credit. Credit extended to an individual to facilitate the purchase of consumer goods and services. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↷1.]

installment credit. Consumer credit scheduled to be repaid in two or more payments, usu. at regular intervals. • The seller ordinarily exacts finance charges.

noninstallment credit. Consumer credit arranged to be repaid in a single payment. • Examples include doctors' and plumbers' bills.

revolving credit. A consumer-credit arrangement that allows the borrower to buy goods or secure loans on a continuing basis as long as the outstanding balance does not exceed a specified limit. — Also termed open credit; revolving charge account. Cf. revolver loan under LOAN. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↷34.]

5. LETTER OF CREDIT <the bank issued a credit in favor of the exporter>. 6. A deduction from an amount due; an accounting entry reflecting an addition to revenue or net worth <confirm that the credit was properly applied to my account>. Cf. DEBIT. 7. TAX CREDIT <the $500 credit reduced their income-tax liability by $500>.

accumulated-earnings credit. Tax. A deduction allowed in arriving at a corporation's accumulated taxable income. • It offsets the base on which the tax is assessed by reducing the taxable base by the greater of $250,000 or the accumulated earnings retained for the reasonable needs of the corporation, reduced by the net capital gain. IRC (26 USCA) § 535. See accumulated-earnings tax under TAX.

creditable. 1. Worthy of being believed; credible <creditable evidence>. 2. Capable of being ascribed or credited <creditable service time>. 3. Reputable; respectable <creditable witness>.

credit balance. Accounting. The status of an account when the sum of the credit entries exceeds the sum of the debit entries.

credit bureau. (1874) An organization that compiles information on people's creditworthiness and publishes it in the form of reports that are used chiefly by merchants and service-providers who deal directly with customers. • The practices of credit bureaus are regulated by federal (and often state) law. Most bureaus are

credit card. An identification card used to obtain items on credit, usu. on a revolving basis. See revolving credit under CREDIT. Cf. DEBIT CARD. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↷8.]

credit-card cramming. 1. A credit-card issuer's practice of charging consumers for optional goods or services that the consumers have not agreed to pay or do not understand. • For example, the credit-card crammer may offer the consumer a free service for a limited period without making it clear that if the service is not canceled when the period ends, it will be automatically renewed for a fee. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↷8.] 2. A single act of charging a consumer's credit card without authorization, particularly for goods or services that the consumer did not agree to or receive. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↷8.]

credit freeze. See FREEZE.

credit insurance. See INSURANCE.

credit life insurance. See LIFE INSURANCE.

credit line. See LINE OF CREDIT.

credit memorandum. A document issued by a seller to a buyer confirming that the seller has credited (i.e., reduced) the buyer's account because of an error, return, or allowance.

credit mobilier. A company or association that carries on a banking business by making loans on the security of personal property.

creditor. (15c) 1. One to whom a debt is owed; one who gives credit for money or goods. — Also termed debtee. 2. A person or entity with a definite claim against another, esp. a claim that is capable of adjustment and liquidation. 3. Bankruptcy. A person or entity having a claim against the debtor predating the order for relief concerning the debtor. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↷2822.] 4. Roman law. One to whom any obligation is owed, whether contractual or otherwise. Cf. DEBTOR.

attaching creditor. A creditor who has caused an attachment to be issued and levied on the debtor's property. [Cases: Attachment ↷16.]

bond creditor. A creditor whose debt is secured by a bond.

catholic creditor. Scots law. A person who has a security interest in more than one piece of the debtor's property.

certificate creditor. A creditor of a municipal corporation who receives a certificate of indebtedness rather than payment because the municipality cannot pay the debt. Cf. warrant creditor.

conditional creditor. Civil law. A creditor who has either a future right of action or a right of action in expectancy.

creditor at large. A creditor who has not established the debt by reducing it to judgment, or who has not otherwise secured a lien on any of the debtor's property. See unsecured creditor.

domestic creditor. A creditor who resides in the same state or country as the debtor or the debtor's property.

double creditor. A creditor who has a lien on two funds. Cf. single creditor.

execution creditor. A judgment creditor who has caused an execution to issue on the judgment. [Cases: Execution ⇨ 17.]

foreign creditor. A creditor who resides in a different state or country from that of the debtor or the debtor's property.

gap creditor. Bankruptcy. A creditor who extends credit to, lends money to, or has a claim arise against the debtor in the period between the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition and the entry of the order for relief. • Under the Bankruptcy Code, a gap creditor's claim receives second priority, immediately below administrative claims. 11 USCA §§ 502(f), 507(a)(2). [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 2833.]

hypothetical creditor. Bankruptcy. An actual or code-created judicial-lien creditor or bona fide purchaser who establishes a bankruptcy trustee's status under the Bankruptcy Code's priority scheme, claiming property through the debtor at the time of the bankruptcy filing. 11 USCA § 544. — Also termed hypothetical lien creditor. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 2704, 2705.]

joint creditor. A creditor who is entitled, along with another creditor, to demand payment from a debtor.

judgment creditor. See JUDGMENT CREDITOR.

junior creditor. A creditor whose claim accrued after that of another creditor; a creditor who holds a debt that is subordinate to another's.

known creditor. A creditor whose identity or claim is either known or reasonably ascertainable by the debtor. • Known creditors are entitled to notice of the debtor's bankruptcy or corporate dissolution, as well as notice of any deadline for filing proofs of claim.

lien creditor. A creditor whose claim is secured by a lien on the debtor's property. UCC § 9-102(a)(52). [Cases: Secured Transactions ⇨ 140.]

preferred creditor. A creditor with a superior right to payment, such as a holder of a perfected security interest as compared to a holder of an unsecured claim. [Cases: Secured Transactions ⇨ 138-140, 168.]

principal creditor. A creditor whose claim or demand greatly exceeds the claims of other creditors.

prior creditor. A creditor who is given priority in payment from the debtor's assets.

secondary creditor. A creditor whose claim is subordinate to a preferred creditor's.

secured creditor. A creditor who has the right, on the debtor's default, to proceed against collateral and apply it to the payment of the debt. UCC § 9-102-(a)(72). — Also termed secured party.

"'Secured party' means (A) a person in whose favor a security interest is created or provided for under a security agreement, whether or not any obligation to be secured is outstanding; (B) a person that holds an agricultural lien; (C) a consignor; (D) a person to which accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes have been sold; or (E) if a security interest or agricultural lien is created or provided for in favor of a trustee, agent, collateral agent, or other representative, that representative." UCC § 9-102(a)(50).

single creditor. In the marshaling of assets, a creditor with a lien on one fund. See RULE OF MARSHALING ASSETS. Cf. double creditor.

specialty creditor. A creditor to whom an heir is liable for a decedent's debts to the extent of the land inherited. • Historically, unless the creditor obtained a judgment against the debtor before the debtor's death, the creditor's right of action on the debt was limited to the decedent's lawful heir. If the debtor devised the land to a stranger, the creditor's claim was defeated. See HEIR (1). [Cases: Descent and Distribution ⇨ 126; Executors and Administrators ⇨ 263.]

subsequent creditor. A creditor whose claim comes into existence after a given fact or transaction, such as the recording of a deed or the execution of a voluntary conveyance.

unsecured creditor. A creditor who, upon giving credit, takes no rights against specific property of the debtor. — Also termed general creditor. See creditor at large.

warrant creditor. A creditor of a municipal corporation who is given a municipal warrant for the amount of the claim because the municipality lacks the funds to pay the debt. Cf. certificate creditor. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨ 896.]

creditor beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.

creditor dominii (kred-i-tor də-min-ee-i). [Law Latin] Hist. The creditor who is entitled to ownership of an object; a secured creditor.

"Creditor dominii . . . In commodate the lender is creditor of the subject, and on the bankruptcy of the borrower may vindicate his right of property and recover the subject itself . . ." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 114 (4th ed. 1894).

creditor's bill. (1826) An equitable suit in which a judgment creditor seeks to reach property that cannot be reached by the process available to enforce a judgment. — Also termed creditor's suit. [Cases: Debtor and Creditor ↻11.]

creditor's claim. See CLAIM (5).

creditors' committee. (1874) Bankruptcy. A committee comprising representatives of the creditors in a Chapter 11 proceeding, formed to negotiate the debtor's plan of reorganization. • Generally, a committee has no fewer than 3 and no more than 11 members and serves as an advisory body. 11 USCA § 1102. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↻3024.] creditors' composition. See COMPOSITION (1).

creditors' meeting. See MEETING.

creditors' scheme of arrangement. See SCHEME OF ARRANGEMENT.

creditor's suit. See CREDITOR'S BILL.

credit plan. A financing arrangement under which a borrower and a lender agree to terms for a loan's repayment with interest, usu. in installments.

open-end credit plan. A plan under which a creditor reasonably expects repeated transactions, prescribes terms for those transactions, and includes a finance charge that may be periodically computed on the outstanding balance. 15 USCA § 1602(i).

credit rating. An evaluation of a potential borrower's ability to repay debt, prepared by a credit bureau at the request of a lender. [Cases: Credit Reporting Agencies ↻1-4.]

credit report. 1. A credit bureau's report on a person's financial status, usu. including the approximate amounts and locations of a person's bank accounts, charge accounts, loans, and other debts, bill-paying habits, defaults, bankruptcies, foreclosures, marital status, occupation, income, and lawsuits. See CREDIT BUREAU. 2. The report of a credit-reporting bureau, usu. including highly personal information gathered through interviews with a person's friends, neighbors, and coworkers. See CREDIT-REPORTING BUREAU. [Cases: Credit Reporting Agencies ↻1-4.]

credit-reporting bureau. (1904) An organization that, on request, prepares investigative reports not just on people's creditworthiness but also on personal information gathered from various sources, including interviews with neighbors, friends, and coworkers. • These reports are used chiefly by employers (for prospective employees), insurance companies (for applicants), and landlords (for prospective tenants). — Also termed investigating bureau. Cf. CREDIT BUREAU. [Cases: Credit Reporting Agencies ↻1-4.]

creditrrix (kred-ə-triks), n. [fr. Latin credere "to lend, entrust"] Civil law. Archaic. A female creditor.

credit sale. See SALE.

credit service charge. See SERVICE CHARGE (2).

credit-shelter trust. See bypass trust under TRUST.

credit slip. A document that allows a store customer to either purchase another item or receive cash or credit for merchandise the customer has returned to the store.

credit union. A cooperative association that offers low-interest loans and other consumer banking services to persons sharing a common bond — often fellow employees and their family members. • Most credit unions are regulated by the National Credit Union Administration. State-chartered credit unions are also subject to regulation by the chartering state, and they may be regulated by state banking boards. [Cases: Building and Loan Associations ↻1-6, 24-40.]

"Credit unions were the last major thrift institutions developed in the United States . . . What distinguished credit unions from mutual savings banks and savings and loan associations was their emphasis on a common bond of workers, church members, or people in a local area, wanting to borrow relatively small amounts at reasonable interest rates from each other, and help each other save to meet these short-term needs. Their goal was to provide a low interest rate alternative . . . to loan sharks and pawnbrokers." William A. Lovett, Banking and Financial Institutions Law in a Nutshell 284 (1997).

creditworthy, adj. (1924) (Of a borrower) financially sound enough that a lender will extend credit in the belief default is unlikely; fiscally healthy. — creditworthiness, n.

creeping acquisition. See ACQUISITION.

creeping tender offer. See creeping acquisition under ACQUISITION.

Creorganization. See REORGANIZATION (2).

crescendo rental. See RENTAL.

cretion (kree-shən), n. [fr. Latin cernere "to decide"] Roman law. 1. A method or form of accepting an inheritance by an heir who is appointed in a testament. • Cretion usu. had to be declared within 100 days from the date an heir received notice of the appointment.

"In the old law it was the practice to fix a time limit, usually of one hundred days, within which the heir was to make a formal acceptance, with the addition that if he failed to do so, he was to be disinherited and a substitute was to take the inheritance in his place. This formal acceptance was known as cretio from the Latin verb cernere — to decide. The practice had fallen into disuse before Justinian, who formally abolished it." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 199 (4th ed. 1956).

2. The period within which an heir might decide whether to accept an inheritance. — Also termed (in Latin) cretio (kree-shee-oh). — cretionary (kree-shən-er-ee), adj.

crew member. See SEAMAN.

CRF, abbr. CRIMINAL-REFERRAL FORM.

crib, n. [Origin unknown] Hist. An enclosure at the side of a court where the apprentices stood to learn the law.

• For a full history of this term and its variants, see J.H. Baker, "The Pecunes," in The Legal Profession and the Common Law 171, 173 (1986). — Also spelled cribbe; crubbe. — Also termed pecune.

cri de pais. See CRY DE PAIS.

crier (kri-ər). (15c) 1. An officer of the court who makes public pronouncements as required by the court. Cf. BAILIFF (1). — Also termed court crier. [Cases: Courts ↻58.] 2. An auctioneer. — Also spelled cryer.

criez la peez (kri-eez lə pees). [Law French] Hist. Rehearse the concord (or peace). • This phrase was used to confirm the conveyance of land by fine. The serjeant or countor in attendance read the phrase aloud in court. See FINE (1).

crim. con. abbr. CRIMINAL CONVERSATION.

crime. (14c) An act that the law makes punishable; the breach of a legal duty treated as the subject-matter of a criminal proceeding. — Also termed criminal wrong. See OFFENSE (1).

"Understanding that the conception of Crime, as distinguished from that of Wrong or Tort and from that of Sin, involves the idea of injury to the State of collective community, we first find that the commonwealth, in literal conformity with the conception, itself interposed directly, and by isolated acts, to avenge itself on the author of the evil which it had suffered." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 320 (17th ed. 1901).

"It is a curious fact that all the minor acts enumerated in the penal code of a state like, say, New York are in law called crimes, which term includes both murder and overparking. It is a strong term to use for the latter, and of course the law has for centuries recognized that there are more serious and less serious crimes. At the common law, however, only two classes were recognized, serious crimes or felonies, and minor crimes or misdemeanors." Max Radin, The Law and You 91 (1948).

administrative crime. (1943) An offense consisting of a violation of an administrative rule or regulation that carries with it a criminal sanction.

capital crime. See capital offense under OFFENSE (1).

commercial crime. (1900) A crime that affects commerce; esp., a crime directed toward the property or revenues of a commercial establishment. • Examples include robbery of a business, embezzlement, counterfeiting, forgery, prostitution, illegal gambling, and extortion. See 26 CFR § 403.38.

common-law crime. (1827) A crime that is punishable under the common law, rather than by force of statute. Cf. statutory crime.

complainantless crime. See victimless crime.

computer crime. (1971) A crime involving the use of a computer, such as sabotaging or stealing electronically stored data. — Also termed cybercrime. [Cases: Telecommunications ↻1342, 1348.]

consensual crime. See victimless crime.

constructive crime. A crime that is built up or created when a court enlarges a statute by altering or straining the statute's language, esp. to drawing unreasonable implications and inferences from it. — Also termed implied crime; presumed crime.

continuous crime. (1907) 1. A crime that continues after an initial illegal act has been consummated; a crime that involves ongoing elements. • An example is illegal U.S. drug importation. The criminal act is completed not when the drugs enter the country, but when the drugs reach their final destination. 2. A crime (such as driving a stolen vehicle) that continues over an extended period. Cf. instantaneous crime.

corporate crime. (1934) A crime committed by a corporation's representatives acting on its behalf. • Examples include price-fixing and consumer fraud. Although a corporation as an entity cannot commit a crime other than through its representatives, it can be named as a criminal defendant — Also termed organizational crime. Cf. occupational crime. [Cases: Corporations ↻526.]

credit-card crime. See CREDIT-CARD CRIME.

crime against nature. See SODOMY.

crime against the environment. See ENVIRONMENTAL CRIME.

crime malum in se. See MALUM IN SE.

crime of omission. (18c) An offense that carries as its material component the failure to act.

crime of passion. (18c) A crime committed in the heat of an emotionally charged moment, with no opportunity to reflect on what is happening. See HEAT OF PASSION.

crime of violence. See violent crime.

crime without victims. See victimless crime.

cybercrime. See computer crime.

economic crime. A nonphysical crime committed to obtain a financial gain or a professional advantage.

"There are two major styles of economic crime. The first consists of crimes committed by businessmen as an adjunct to their regular business activities. Businessmen's responsibilities give them the opportunity, for example, to commit embezzlement, to violate regulations directed at their areas of business activity, or to evade the payment of taxes. This style of economic crime is often called white-collar crime. The second style of economic crime is the provision of illegal goods and services or the provision of goods and services in an illegal manner. Illegal provision of goods and services requires coordinated economic activity similar to that of normal business, but all of those engaged in it are involved in crime. The madam operating a brothel has many concerns identical to the manager of a resort hotel, and the distributor of marijuana must worry about the efficacy of his distribution system just as does a distributor of any other product. This type of economic crime is often called organized crime because the necessity of economic coordination outside the law leads to the formation of criminal groups with elaborate organizational customs and practices." Edmund W. Kitch, "Economic Crime," in 2 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 670, 671 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

environmental crime. See ENVIRONMENTAL CRIME.

expressive crime. A crime committed for the sake of the crime itself, esp. out of frustration, rage, or other emotion rather than for financial gain. Cf. instrumental crime.

federal crime. See FEDERAL CRIME.

general-intent crime. A crime that involves performing a particular act without intending a further act or a further result. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨20.]

hate crime. (1984) A crime motivated by the victim's race, color, ethnicity, religion, or national origin. • Certain groups have lobbied to expand the definition by statute to include a crime motivated by the victim's disability, gender, or sexual orientation. Cf. hate speech under SPEECH. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨1808; Sentencing and Punishment ⇨70, 753.]

high crime. (17c) A crime that is very serious, though not necessarily a felony. • Under the U.S. Constitution, a government officer's commission of a "high crime" is, along with treason and bribery, grounds for removal from office. U.S. Const. art. II, § 4. See IMPEACHABLE OFFENSE.

honor crime. A crime motivated by a desire to punish a person who the perpetrator believes has injured a person's or group's sense of honor. • The term is most often applied to crimes committed against Muslim women by members of their own families for behavior that leads to perceived social harm, esp. loss of family honor. The term also extends to non-Muslims and covers many acts of violence, including assault, rape, infanticide, and murder. When the crime involves a death, it is also termed honor killing.

implied crime. See constructive crime.

inchoate crime. See inchoate offense under OFFENSE (1).

index crime. See index offense under OFFENSE (1).

infamous crime (in-fə-məs). (16c) 1. At common law, a crime for which part of the punishment was infamy, so that one who committed it would be declared ineligible to serve on a jury, hold public office, or testify. • Examples are perjury, treason, and fraud. [Cases: Jury ⇨45; Officers and Public Employees ⇨31.] 2. A crime punishable by imprisonment in a penitentiary. • The Fifth Amendment requires a grand-jury indictment for the prosecution of infamous (or capital) crimes, which include all federal felony offenses. See indictable offense under OFFENSE (1). Cf. noninfamous crime.

"At common law an infamous crime was one . . . inconsistent with the common principles of honesty and humanity. Infamous crimes were treason, felony, all offenses found in fraud and which came within the general notion of the crimen falsi of the civil law, piracy, swindling, cheating, barratry, and the bribing of a witness to absent himself from a trial, in order to get rid of his evidence." Justin Miller, Handbook of Criminal Law § 8, at 25 (1934).

instantaneous crime. (1887) A crime that is fully completed by a single act, as arson or murder, rather than a series of acts. • The statute of limitations for an instantaneous crime begins to run with its completion. Cf. continuous crime.

instrumental crime. A crime committed to further another end or result; esp., a crime committed to obtain money to purchase a good or service. Cf. expressive crime.

international crime. See INTERNATIONAL CRIME.

major crime. See FELONY (1).

noninfamous crime. A crime that does not qualify as an infamous crime. Cf. infamous crime.

occupational crime. A crime that a person commits for personal gain while on the job. Cf. corporate crime.

organizational crime. See corporate crime.

organized crime. See ORGANIZED CRIME.

personal-condition crime. See status crime.

personal crime. A crime (such as rape, robbery, or pickpocketing) that is committed against an individual's person.

political crime. See POLITICAL OFFENSE.

predatory crime. A crime that involves preying upon and victimizing individuals. • Examples include robbery, rape, and carjacking.

preliminary crime. See inchoate offense under OFFENSE (1).

presumed crime. See constructive crime.

quasi-crime. (18c) Hist. 1. An offense not subject to criminal prosecution (such as contempt or violation of a municipal ordinance) but for which penalties or forfeitures can be imposed. • The term includes offenses that give rise to qui tam actions and forfeitures for the violation of a public duty. 2. An offense for which someone other than the actual perpetrator is held liable, the perpetrator being presumed to act on the command of the responsible party. See quasi-delict (1) under DELICT.

signature crime. (1974) A distinctive crime so similar in pattern, scheme, or modus operandi to previous crimes that it identifies a particular defendant as the perpetrator. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨369.15.]

spontaneous crime. A criminal act that occurs suddenly and without premeditation in response to an unforeseen stimulus. • For example, a husband who discovers his wife in bed with another man and shoots him could be said to have committed an effectively spontaneous crime.

status crime. (1961) A crime of which a person is guilty by being in a certain condition or of a specific character. • An example of a status crime is vagrancy. — Also termed status offense; personal-condition crime. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨26.]

statutory crime. (1940) A crime punishable by statute. Cf. common-law crime. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨21.]

street crime. (1966) A crime generally directed against a person in public, such as mugging, theft, or robbery. — Also termed visible crime.

strict-liability crime. A crime that does not require a mens rea element, such as traffic offenses and illegal sales of intoxicating liquor. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 21.]

substantive crime. See substantive offense under OFFENSE (1).

vice crime. A crime of immoral conduct, such as gambling or prostitution.

victimless crime. (1964) A crime that is considered to have no direct victim, usu. because only consenting adults are involved. • Examples are possession of illicit drugs and deviant sexual intercourse between consenting adults. — Also termed consensual crime; crime without victims; complainantless crime.

"When a man's house has been robbed or his brother murdered, he is likely to take this complaint vigorously to the police and demand action. His presence on the scene dramatizes the need for law enforcement and gives sense and purpose to the work of the police and district attorney. In contrast, the absence of a prosecuting witness surrounds 'crimes without victims' with an entirely different atmosphere. Here it is the police who must assume the initiative. If they attempt to work without the aid of informers, they must resort to spying, and this spying is rendered all the more distasteful because what is spied upon is sordid and pitiable." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 44 (1968).

violent crime. (18c) A crime that has as an element the use, attempted use, threatened use, or substantial risk of use of physical force against the person or property of another. 18 USCA § 16; USSG § 2E1.3. — Also termed crime of violence.

visible crime. See street crime.

war crime. See WAR CRIME.

white-collar crime. See WHITE-COLLAR CRIME.

crime against humanity. Int'l law. A brutal crime that is not an isolated incident but that involves large and systematic actions, often cloaked with official authority, and that shocks the conscience of humankind. • Among the specific crimes that fall within this category are mass murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, and other inhumane acts perpetrated against a population, whether in wartime or not. See Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 3 (37 ILM 999).

crime against international law. See CRIME AGAINST THE LAW OF NATIONS.

crime against peace. Int'l law. An international crime in which the offenders plan, prepare, initiate, or wage a war of aggression or a war in violation of international peace treaties, agreements, or assurances.

crime against the law of nations. Int'l law. 1. A crime punishable under internationally prescribed criminal law or defined by an international convention and required to be made punishable under the criminal law of the member states. 2. A crime punishable under international law; an act that is internationally agreed to be of a criminal nature, such as genocide, piracy, or engaging in the slave trade. — Also termed crime against international law.

crime against the person. See CRIMES AGAINST PERSONS.

crime-fraud exception. (1973) The doctrine that neither the attorney-client privilege nor the attorney-work-product privilege protects attorney-client communications that are in furtherance of a current or planned crime or fraud. Clark v. United States, 289 U.S. 1, 53 S.Ct. 465 (1933); In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 731 F.2d 1032 (2d Cir. 1984). [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 627.5(6); Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1604(1); Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 35; Privileged Communications and Confidentiality ⇨ 154.]

crime insurance. See INSURANCE.

crime malum in se. See MALUM IN SE.

crimen (kri-mən), n. [Latin] 1. An accusation or charge of a crime. 2. A crime. Pl. crimina (krim-ə-nə).

crimen expilatae hereditatis (kri-mən eks-pə-lay-tee hæ-red-i-tay-tis). Roman law. A false claimant's willful spoliation of an inheritance.

crimen falsi (kri-mən fal-sī or fawl-sī). [Latin "the crime of falsifying"] 1. A crime in the nature of perjury. — Also termed falsum. 2. Any other offense that involves some element of dishonesty or false statement. See Fed. R. Evid. 609(a)(2). [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 337(12).]

"The starting point [for perjury] seems to have been the so-called crimen falsi, — crime of falsifying. In the beginning, perhaps, one convicted of perjury was deemed too untrustworthy to be permitted to testify in any other case, and the idea grew until the term 'crimen falsi' included any crime involving an element of deceit, fraud or corruption." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 26 (3d ed. 1982).

crimen feloniae imposuit (kri-mən fə-loh-nee-ee im-poz-yə-wit). To accuse or charge with a felony.

crimen furti (kri-mən fər-tī). [Latin "the crime of stealing"] See THEFT.

crimen incendii (kri-mən in-sen-dee-ī). [Latin "the crime of burning"] See ARSON.

crimen innominatum (kri-mən i-nom-ə-nay-təm). [Latin "the nameless crime"] See SODOMY.

crimen majestatis (kri-mən maj-ə-stay-tis). [Latin "crime against majesty"] Hist. High treason; any crime against the king's person or dignity; LESE MAJESTY. • Under Roman law, crimen majestatis denoted any enterprise by a Roman citizen or other person against the republic or the emperor. — Also termed crimen laesae majestatis. See LESE MAJESTY. Cf. PERDUELLIO.

crimen plagii (kri-mən play-jee-ī). [Latin] Roman law. See PLAGIUM.

crimen raptus (kri-mən rap-təs). [Latin "the crime of rape"] See RAPE.

crimen repetundarum (krɪ-mən rep-ə-tən-dair-əm). [Latin "accusation of (money) to be repaid"] Roman law. 1. A charge of extortion brought against a Roman provincial governor. 2. Any act of misgovernment or oppression on the part of a magistrate or official.

crimen roberiae (krɪ-mən rə-beer-ee-ee). [Latin "the crime of robbery"] ROBBERY.

crime of omission. See CRIME.

crime of passion. See CRIME.

crime of violence. See violent crime under CRIME.

crimes against persons. (1827) A category of criminal offenses in which the perpetrator uses or threatens to use force. • Examples include murder, rape, aggravated assault, and robbery. — Also termed crimes against the person. Cf. offense against the person under OFFENSE (1).

crimes against property. (1827) A category of criminal offenses in which the perpetrator seeks to derive an unlawful benefit from — or do damage to — another's property without the use or threat of force. • Examples include burglary, theft, and arson (even though arson may result in injury or death). — Also termed property crimes. Cf. offense against property under OFFENSE (1).

crime score. (1952) A number assigned from an established scale, indicating the relative seriousness of an offense based on the nature of the injury or the extent of property damage. • Prosecutors use crime scores and defendant scores to promote uniform treatment of similar cases and to assess which cases need extensive pretrial preparation. Cf. DEFENDANT SCORE.

crime statistics. Figures compiled by a governmental agency to show the incidence of various types of crime within a defined geographic area during a specified time.

crime without victims. See victimless crime under CRIME.

crimina extraordinaria (krim-ə-nə ek-stror-də-nair-ee-ə). [Latin] Roman law. Extraordinary crimes; crimes not brought before a quaestio perpetua. • These crimes carried no fixed penalty and were punished according to the judge's discretion.

criminal, adj. (15c) 1. Having the character of a crime; in the nature of a crime <criminal mischief>. 2. Connected with the administration of penal justice <the criminal courts>.

criminal, n. (17c) 1. One who has committed a criminal offense. 2. One who has been convicted of a crime.

career criminal. See RECIDIVIST.

dangerous criminal. (18c) A criminal who has either committed a violent crime or used force in trying to escape from custody.

episodic criminal. (1976) 1. A person who commits crimes sporadically. 2. A person who commits crimes only during periods of intense stress, as in the heat of passion.

state criminal. 1. A person who has committed a crime against the state (such as treason); a political criminal.

2. A person who has committed a crime under state law.

criminal conspiracy. See CONSPIRACY.

criminal contempt. See CONTEMPT.

criminal conversation. Archaic. A tort action for adultery, brought by a husband against a third party who engaged in sexual intercourse with his wife. • Criminal conversation has been abolished in most jurisdictions. — Abbr. crim. con. See HEARTBALM STATUTE. [Cases: Husband and Wife ⇨ 340–354.]

"An action (whether of trespass or case is uncertain, but probably trespass) formerly lay against one who had committed adultery with the wife of the plaintiff. It was known as an action for criminal conversation. The wife's consent was irrelevant. The action was distinct from that of enticement: one may commit adultery without enticing a wife away from her husband. The action was no doubt a necessity when divorce could only be obtained by Act of Parliament: as Parliament was not a tribunal suitable for trying allegations of adultery it was reasonable to require the petitioner to establish the truth of his allegations before a court of law. The action might also have been justified on the ground that the plaintiff is in substance complaining of the invasion of privacy of his marriage, and the insult thereby caused to his honour as a husband." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 358 (17th ed. 1977).

criminal-court judge. See JUDGE.

criminal damage to property. (1946) 1. Injury, destruction, or substantial impairment to the use of property (other than by fire or explosion) without the consent of a person having an interest in the property. [Cases: Malicious Mischief ⇨ 1.] 2. Injury, destruction, or substantial impairment to the use of property (other than by fire or explosion) with the intent to injure or defraud an insurer or lienholder. Cf. ARSON.

criminal defendant. One who is accused in a criminal proceeding.

criminal desertion. See DESERTION.

criminal forfeiture. See FORFEITURE.

criminal fraud. See FRAUD.

criminal homicide. See HOMICIDE.

criminal infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

criminal instrument. (1901) 1. Something made or adapted for criminal use. Model Penal Code § 5.06(1) (a). 2. Something commonly used for criminal purposes and possessed under circumstances showing an unlawful purpose. Model Penal Code § 5.06(1)(b). — Also termed instrument of crime.

criminal-instrumentality rule. (1942) The principle that when a criminal act is committed, that act — rather than the victim's negligence that made the crime possible — will be considered to be the crime's proximate cause.

criminal intent. 1. See INTENT (1). 2. MENS REA.

criminalism. 1. A pathological tendency toward criminality. 2. Archaic. The branch of psychiatry dealing with habitual criminals.

criminalist (krim-ə-nəl-ist). 1. A person who practices criminalistics as a profession. 2. Archaic. One versed in criminal law. 3. Archaic. A psychiatrist who treats criminals. 4. Archaic. A habitual criminal.

criminalistics (krim-ə-nəl-ist-iks), n. (1943) The science of crime detection, usu. involving the subjection of physical evidence to laboratory analysis, including ballistic testing, blood-fluid and tissue analysis, and other tests. Cf. CRIMINOLOGY. — criminalistic, adj.

criminaliter (krim-ə-nay-lə-tər), adv. [Latin] Criminally. Cf. CIVILITER (1).

criminality (krim-ə-nəl-ə-tee). (17c) 1. The state or quality of being criminal. 2. An act or practice that constitutes a crime. See DOUBLE CRIMINALITY.

criminalization (krim-ə-nəl-ə-zay-shən), n. (1945) 1. The act or an instance of making a previously lawful act criminal, usu. by passing a statute. Cf. DECRIMINALIZATION; CIVILIZATION. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 3.] 2. The process by which a person develops into a criminal.

criminalize (krim-ə-nəl-iz), vb. To make illegal; to outlaw.

criminal jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

criminal justice. (16c) 1. The methods by which a society deals with those who are accused of having committed crimes. See LAW ENFORCEMENT (1). Cf. CIVIL JUSTICE. 2. The field of study pursued by those seeking to enter law enforcement as a profession. • Many colleges offer degrees in criminal justice, typically after two to four years of study. — Also termed (in sense 2) police science; law enforcement.

criminal-justice system. (1929) The collective institutions through which an accused offender passes until the accusations have been disposed of or the assessed punishment concluded. • The system typically has three components: law enforcement (police, sheriffs, marshals), the judicial process (judges, prosecutors, defense lawyers), and corrections (prison officials, probation officers, and parole officers). — Also termed law-enforcement system.

criminal law. (18c) The body of law defining offenses against the community at large, regulating how suspects are investigated, charged, and tried, and establishing punishments for convicted offenders. — Also termed penal law.

"The criminal law represents the pathology of civilization." Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 70 (1961).

criminal lawyer. See LAWYER.

criminal letter. Scots law. A summons.

criminal libel. See LIBEL.

criminally negligent homicide. See negligent homicide under HOMICIDE.

criminal miscarriage. Hist. See ABORTION (1).

criminal mischief. See MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

criminal neglect of family. See NONSUPPORT.

criminal negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

criminal nonsupport. See NONSUPPORT.

criminal offense. See OFFENSE (1).

criminal operation. Hist. ABORTION (1).

criminal policy. (1893) The branch of criminal science concerned with protecting against crime. • It draws on information provided by criminology, and its subjects for investigation are (1) the appropriate measures of social organization for preventing harmful activities, and (2) the treatment to be accorded to those who have caused harm, i.e., whether the offenders should receive warnings, supervised probation, or medical treatment, or whether they should suffer serious deprivations of life or liberty such as imprisonment or capital punishment.

criminal possession. See POSSESSION.

criminal procedure. (18c) The rules governing the mechanisms under which crimes are investigated, prosecuted, adjudicated, and punished. • It includes the protection of accused persons' constitutional rights.

criminal proceeding. See PROCEEDING.

criminal process. See PROCESS.

criminal prosecution. See PROSECUTION (2).

criminal protector. (1978) An accessory after the fact to a felony; one who aids or harbors a wrongdoer after the criminal-referral form. A form once required by federal regulatory authorities (from 1988 to 1996) for reporting every instance when a bank employee or affiliate committed or aided in committing a crime such as credit-card fraud, employee theft, or check-kiting. • This form, like the suspicious-transaction report, has since been superseded by the suspicious-activity report. — Abbr. CRF. See SUSPICIOUS-ACTIVITY REPORT.

criminal responsibility. 1. See RESPONSIBILITY (2). 2. See RESPONSIBILITY (3).

criminal science. (1891) The study of crime with a view to discovering the causes of criminality, devising the most effective methods of reducing crime, and perfecting the means for dealing with those who have committed crimes. • The three main branches of criminal science are criminology, criminal policy, and criminal law.

criminal sexual conduct in the first degree. See FIRST-DEGREE SEXUAL CONDUCT.

criminal solicitation. See SOLICITATION (2).

criminal statute. See STATUTE.

criminal syndicalism. See SYNDICALISM.

criminal term. See TERM (5).

criminal trespass. See TRESPASS.

criminal wrong. See CRIME.

criminate, vb. See INCRIMINATE.

crimination (krim-ə-nay-shən), n. 1. INCRIMINATION. 2. An accusation or strong censure.

criminative (krim-ə-nay-tiv), adj. Of, relating to, or involving incrimination or accusation. Cf. INFIRMATIVE.

criminogenic (krim-ə-nə-jen-ik), adj. Tending to cause crime or criminality. — criminogenesis, n.

criminology (krim-ə-nol-ə-je), n. (1872) The study of crime and criminal punishment as social phenomena; the study of the causes of crime and the treatment of offenders, comprising (1) criminal biology, which examines causes that may be found in the mental and physical constitution of an offender (such as hereditary tendencies and physical defects), and (2) criminal sociology, which deals with inquiries into the effects of environment as a cause of criminality. — Also termed criminal anthropology. Cf. CRIMINALISTICS; PENOLOGY. — criminological (krim-ə-nə-loj-ə-kəl), adj. — criminologist, n.

comparative criminology. The scholarly study of the similarities and differences between the criminal-justice systems of different nations.

environmental criminology. The scholarly study of areas where crime occurs and of why offenders are active in those areas. — Also termed geography of crime; ecology of crime.

crimping. Hist. The offense of decoying and confining persons to force them into military service. Cf. IMPRESSMENT (3).

criss-cross agreement. See cross-purchase agreement under AGREEMENT.

crit. (1985) An adherent to the critical-legal-studies school of thought. — Also termed CLSer; Critic; critter.

fem-crit. A feminist adherent of critical legal studies.

critical evidence. See EVIDENCE.

critical limitation. Patents. A limitation essential either to the operativeness of an invention or to the patentability of a patent claim for the invention. [Cases: Patents ↷165(2).]

critical stage. (1962) Criminal procedure. A point in a criminal prosecution when the accused's rights or defenses might be affected by the absence of legal representation. • Under the Sixth Amendment, a critical stage triggers the accused's right to appointed counsel. Examples of critical stages include preliminary hearings, jury selection, and (of course) trial. Cf. ACCUSATORY STAGE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷1718.]

crop insurance. See INSURANCE.

crop rent. See RENT (1).

crops. Products that are grown, raised, and harvested. • Crops usu. are from the soil, but fruit grown on trees are also considered crops. [Cases: Crops ↷1.]

annual crops. 1. Crops that must be planted each year, such as cotton, wheat, barley, corn, carrots, potatoes, and melons. 2. Crops for which the produce in any single year is mainly the result of attention and care exerted in the same agricultural year, such as hops and sugar cane.

away-going crops. A tenant's crops that were sown and will not be ready to harvest before the tenancy expires. • The tenant retains the ownership of the crop after the tenancy expires. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨ 139(2).]

basic crops. Crops (such as wheat and corn) that are usu. subject to government-price supports.

growing crops. Crops that are in the process of growth. • Growing crops are goods under UCC § 2-105(1). Judicial decisions vary on the growth stage at which a crop becomes a growing crop and on whether pasture grass is a growing crop. Cf. FARM PRODUCT. [Cases: Crops ⇨ 1.]

standing crops. Crops that have not been harvested or otherwise severed from the land. [Cases: Crops ⇨ 2.]

cross, n. 1. CROSS-EXAMINATION. 2. A sale of a large amount of publicly traded stock between two private parties. • Although the transaction does not happen on the exchange floor, it typically requires exchange permission.

cross-action. 1. See ACTION (4). 2. See CROSS-CLAIM.

cross-bill. See BILL (2).

cross-claim, n. (1825) A claim asserted between codefendants or coplaintiffs in a case and that relates to the subject of the original claim or counterclaim. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(g). — Also termed cross-action; cross-suit. Cf. COUNTERCLAIM. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 786; Pleading ⇨ 147, 148, 149; Set-off and Counterclaim ⇨ 10.] — cross-claim, vb. — cross-claimant, n.

"The courts have not always distinguished clearly between a cross-claim and a counterclaim, and have used one name where the other is proper under the rules, perhaps because in some states, and in the old equity practice, the term cross-complaint or cross-bill is used for what the rules regard as a counterclaim. Under Rule 13 a counterclaim is a claim against an opposing party, while a cross-claim is against a co-party. Further there is not the same freedom in asserting cross-claims that the rules provide for counterclaims. An unrelated claim against an opposing party may be asserted as a permissive counterclaim, but only claims related to the subject matter of the original action, or property involved therein, are appropriate as cross-claims." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 80, at 574 (5th ed. 1994).

cross-collateral clause. (1965) An installment-contract provision allowing the seller, if the buyer defaults, to repossess not only the particular item sold but also every other item bought from the seller on which a balance remained due when the last purchase was made. — Also termed dragnet clause.

cross-collateralization. See cross-collateral under COLLATERAL.

cross-complaint. (1854) 1. A claim asserted by a defendant against another party to the action. — Also termed (in some jurisdictions) cross-petition. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 786; Pleading ⇨ 148, 149.] 2. A claim asserted by a defendant against a person not a party to the action for a matter relating to the subject of the action.

cross-default clause. (1979) A contractual provision under which default on one debt obligation triggers default on another obligation.

cross-defendant. The party against whom a cross-claim is asserted. Cf. CROSS-PLAINTIFF. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 786.]

cross-demand. See DEMAND (1).

crossed check. See CHECK.

cross-elasticity of demand. Antitrust. A relationship between two products, usu. substitutes for each other, in which a price change for one product affects the price of the other.

cross-examination, n. (18c) The questioning of a witness at a trial or hearing by the party opposed to the party who called the witness to testify. • The purpose of cross-examination is to discredit a witness before the fact-finder in any of several ways, as by bringing out contradictions and improbabilities in earlier testimony, by suggesting doubts to the witness, and by trapping the witness into admissions that weaken the testimony. The cross-examiner is typically allowed to ask leading questions but is traditionally limited to matters covered on direct examination and to credibility issues. — Also termed cross-interrogation. Cf. DIRECT EXAMINATION; RE-CROSS-EXAMINATION. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 266–284, 330.] — cross-examine, vb.

cross-interrogatory. See INTERROGATORY.

cross-license. See LICENSE.

cross-marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

cross-motion. See MOTION (1).

cross-offer, n. (1931) Contracts. An offer made to another in ignorance that the offeree has made the same offer to the offeror. — cross-offer, vb. — cross-offeror, n.

cross-petition. See CROSS-COMPLAINT.

cross-plaintiff. The party asserting a cross-claim. Cf. CROSS-DEFENDANT.

cross-purchase agreement. See AGREEMENT.

cross-purchase buy-sell agreement. 1. BUY-SELL AGREEMENT (1). 2. A partnership insurance plan in which each partner individually buys and maintains enough insurance on the life or lives of other partners to purchase a deceased or expelled partner's equity.

cross-question. See QUESTION (1).

cross-rate. The exchange rate between two currencies expressed as the ratio of two foreign exchange rates in terms of a common third currency (usu. the U.S. dollar). • Foreign-exchange-rate dealers use cross-rate tables to look for arbitrage opportunities. See ARBITRAGE.

cross-reference, n. An explicit citation to a related provision within the same or a closely related document; esp., in a patent application the explicit citation in a continuing patent application to all interrelated applications, back to the original filing. • A cross-reference alone does not incorporate the disclosure of the parent application. Cf. INCORPORATION BY REFERENCE (1), (2). — cross-reference, vb.

cross-remainder. See REMAINDER.

cross-stream guaranty. See GUARANTY.

cross-suit. See CROSS-CLAIM.

Crown. English law. The sovereign in his or her official capacity as a governing power. See KING; QUEEN (1).

"In modern times it has become usual to speak of the Crown rather than of the King, when we refer to the King in his public capacity as a body politic. We speak of the property of the Crown, when we mean the property which the King holds in right of his Crown. So we speak of the debts due by the Crown, of legal proceedings by and against the Crown, and so on. The usage is one of great convenience, because it avoids a difficulty which is inherent in all speech and thought concerning corporations sole, the difficulty, namely, of distinguishing adequately between the body politic and the human being by whom it is represented and whose name it bears." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 341-42 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

Crown case. English law. A criminal action.

Crown Court. An English court having jurisdiction over major criminal cases. • Crown Courts date from 1971, when they assumed the criminal jurisdiction of the Assize Courts and all the jurisdiction of the Courts of Quarter Sessions.

crown jewel. A company's most valuable asset, esp. as valued when the company is the subject of a hostile takeover. • A common antitakeover device is for the target company to sell its crown jewel to a third party so that the company will be less attractive to an unfriendly suitor.

crown-jewel defense. An antitakeover device in which the target company agrees to sell its most valuable assets to a third party if a hostile bid is tendered, so that the company will be less attractive to an unfriendly suitor. Cf. SCORCHED-EARTH DEFENSE; PAC-MAN DEFENSE.

Crown land. See LAND.

Crown loan. See LOAN.

CRS. abbr. See CONGRESSIONAL RESEARCH SERVICE.

CRT. abbr. 1. CRITICAL RACE THEORY. 2. See charitable-remainder trust under TRUST.

crucial evidence. See critical evidence under EVIDENCE.

cruel and abusive treatment. See ABUSE (2).

cruel and inhumane treatment. See extreme cruelty under CRUELTY.

cruel and unusual punishment. See PUNISHMENT.

cruelty. (13c) The intentional and malicious infliction of mental or physical suffering on a living creature, esp. a human; abusive treatment; outrage. Cf. ABUSE; INHUMAN TREATMENT; INDIGNITY.

"When William Blake opined that 'Cruelty has a human heart', he posited the physical and emotional forms which cruelty may take. But when is one party so cruel to the cruelty to animals. A malicious or criminally negligent act that causes an animal to suffer pain or death. [Cases: Animals ⇨ 3.5(5).]

extreme cruelty. (17c) As a ground for divorce, one spouse's physical violence toward the other spouse, or conduct that destroys or severely impairs the other spouse's mental health. — Also termed cruel and inhumane treatment. Cf. ABUSE (2). [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 27.]

legal cruelty. (18c) Cruelty that will justify granting a divorce to the injured party; specif. conduct by one spouse that endangers the life, person, or health of the other spouse, or creates a reasonable apprehension of bodily or mental harm. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 27.]

mental cruelty. (1898) As a ground for divorce, one spouse's course of conduct (not involving actual violence) that creates such anguish that it endangers the life, physical health, or mental health of the other spouse. See EMOTIONAL DISTRESS. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 27.]

physical cruelty. (1874) As a ground for divorce, actual personal violence committed by one spouse against the other. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 27(3, 6).]

cruelty to children. See child abuse under ABUSE.

Crummey power. The right of a beneficiary of a Crummey trust to withdraw gifts made to the trust up to a maximum amount (often the lesser of the annual exclusion or the value of the gift made to the trust) for a certain period after the gift is made. • The precise characteristics of a Crummey power are established by the settlor of a Crummey trust. Typically, the power is exercisable for 30 days after the gift is made and permits withdrawals up to $5,000 or 5% of the value of the trust. A beneficiary may allow the power to lapse without making any demand for distribution. See Crummey trust under TRUST; annual exclusion under EXCLUSION. [Cases: Trusts ⇨ 270.]

cry de pais (kri də pay). [Law French] Hist. The cry of the country. • The hue and cry after an offender, as raised by the country (i.e., the people). — Also spelled cri de pais. See HUE AND CRY (1).

cryer. See CRIER.

cui ante divortium (ki [or kwɪ or kweɪ] an-tee də-vor-shee-əm). [Law Latin “to whom before divorce”] Hist. A writ of entry enabling a divorced woman to recover land that she had held in fee but that her husband had sold without her permission during the marriage. • The name of this writ derives from the words within it: cui ipsa ante divortium inter eos celebratum, contradicere non potuit (“whom she, before the divorce between them, could not gainsay”). The writ was abolished in 1833. — Also termed sur cui ante divortium.

Cui bono? [Latin] For whose advantage?; Who benefits?.

cui in vita (ki [or kwɪ or kweɪ] in-vɪ-tə). [Law Latin “to whom in the life”] Hist. A writ of entry enabling a woman to recover land that she had held in fee but that her deceased husband had sold without her permission. • It is so called from the words of the writ: cui ipsa in vita sua contradicere non potuit (“whom she, in his lifetime, could not gainsay”). — Also termed sur cui in vita.

“Cui in vita, is a writ of entry, which a Widow hath against him, to whom her Husband alienated her Lands or Tenements in his life time, which must specifie, that During his life, she could not withstand it.” Thomas Blount, Nomollexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

cujus contrarium est verum (kɪjoo-jəs kən-traɪr-ee-əm est veer-əm). [Latin] Hist. The contrary of which is the truth.

cujus haeredibus maxime prospicitur (kɪjoo-jəs hə-red-i-bəs mak-sə-mee proh-spɪs-i-tər). [Latin] Hist. Whose heirs are chiefly regarded.

culpa (kəl-pə). [Latin] 1. Roman & civil law. Fault, neglect, or negligence; unintentional wrong. See NEGLIGENCE. Cf. DILIGENTIA; CASUS (1); DOLUS (1). 2. Roman law. Conduct that made a party to a contract, or quasi-contract, liable to the other party.

lata culpa (lay-tə kəl-pə). [Latin “grave fault”] Gross negligence amounting to bad faith (dolus). • This phrase occurs most commonly in bailment law and in the law of the transport of persons. — Also termed culpa lata. See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

levis culpa (lee-vis kəl-pə). [Latin “slight fault”] 1. Ordinary negligence. 2. Failure to act as the ideal paterfamilias should. — Also termed culpa levis; culpa levis in concreto. See ordinary negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

levissima culpa (lə-vis-ə-mə kəl-pə). [Latin “the slightest fault”] Slight negligence. — Also termed culpa levissima. See slight negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

culpabilis (kəl-pay-bə-lis), adj. [Latin] Hist. Guilty.

culpability (kəl-pə-bil-ə-tee), n. Blameworthiness; the quality of being culpable. • Except in cases of absolute liability, criminal culpability requires a showing that the person acted purposely, knowingly, recklessly, or negligently with respect to each material element of the offense. See Model Penal Code § 2.02. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻19.]

“The concept of culpability is used as a reference point to assess the defendant’s guilt and punishment even though, in the two contexts, culpability denotes different aspects of the defendant and the murder. At the guilt phase, culpability is most often used to refer to the state of mind that the defendant must possess. Also at the guilt phase, culpability may reflect a broader judgment about the defendant: when he is culpable for his conduct, it means that he is blameworthy and deserves punishment. At the punishment phase, the concept of culpability stands as the benchmark for when the death penalty is an appropriate punishment.” Phyllis L. Crocker, Concepts of Culpability and Deathworthiness, 66 Fordham L. Rev. 21, 35–36 (1997).

culpable (kəl-pə-bəl), adj. (14c) 1. Guilty; blameworthy. 2. Involving the breach of a duty.

culpable accident. See ACCIDENT.

culpable homicide. 1. See HOMICIDE. 2. See MANSLAUGHTER.

culpable intoxication. See voluntary intoxication under INTOXICATION.

culpable neglect. See NEGLECT.

culpable negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

culpa-in-contrahendo doctrine. [Law Latin “fault in contracting”] The principle that parties must act in good faith during preliminary contract negotiations; esp., the principle that a breach by the offeror after the offeree has begun performance of a unilateral contract and is stopped by the offeror before completion will give rise to liability in tort. [Cases: Torts ↻433.]

culpa lata. See lata culpa under CULPA.

culpa levis. See levis culpa under CULPA.

culpa levis in concreto. See levis culpa under CULPA.

culpa levissima. See levissima culpa under CULPA.

culprit. (17c) 1. A person accused or charged with the commission of a crime. 2. A person who is guilty of a crime. • Culprit may be a running together of cul, shortened from the Latin culpabilis ("guilty"), and prit, from Old French prest ("ready"), two words formerly used to orally plead at the outset of a criminal case.

"When the prisoner hath thus pleaded not guilty, non culpabilis . . . the clerk of the assise, or clerk of the arraigns, on behalf of the crown replies, that the prisoner is guilty, and that he is ready to prove him so. This is done by two monosyllables in the same spirit of abbreviation, 'cul. prit.' which signifies first that the prisoner is guilty, (cul. culpable, or culpabilis) and then that the king is ready to prove him so; prit, praesto sum, or paratus verificare. . . . How our courts came to express a matter of this importance in so odd and obscure a manner . . . can hardly be pronounced with certainty. It may perhaps, however, be accounted for by supposing that these were at first short notes, to help the memory of the clerk, and remind him what he was to reply; or else it was the short method of taking down in court, upon the minutes, the replication and averment; 'cul. prit.' which afterwards the ignorance of succeeding clerks adopted for the very words to be by them spoken. But however it may have arisen, the joining of issue . . . seems to be clearly the meaning of this obscure expression; which has puzzled our most ingenious etymologists, and is commonly understood as if the clerk of the arraigns, immediately on plea pleaded, had fixed an opprobrious name on the prisoner, by asking him, 'culprit, how wilt thou be tried?'" 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 333-34 (1769).

cultural agreement. Int'l law. A bilateral or multilateral agreement between nations for the purpose of furthering cultural or intellectual relations.

cultural defense. See DEFENSE (1).

cultural property. Int'l law. Movable and immovable property that has cultural significance, whether in the nature of antiquities and monuments of a classical age or important modern items of fine arts, decorative arts, and architecture. • Some writers prefer the term cultural heritage, which more broadly includes intangible cultural things such as folklore, crafts, and skills.

culvertage (kəl-vər-tij), n. Hist. 1. The status of villeinage. 2. The condition of being reduced to villeinage or serfdom by forfeiture and degradation.

cum astrictis multuris (kəm ə-strik-tis məl-t[y]oor-is). [Law Latin] Hist. With defined payments for grinding; with astricted multures. • The phrase appeared in reference to portions of grain that the landholder was bound to pay a certain mill in exchange for grinding the remainder of the grain. See MOLITURAE.

cum aucupationibus, venationibus, et piscationibus (kəm awk-yə-pay-shee-oh-nə-bəs, vi-nay-shee-oh-nə-bəs et pi-skay-shee-oh-nə-bəs). [Latin] Scots law. With fowlings, huntings, and fishings. • The phrase was part of a clause granting the legal right to hunt and fish on the conveyed land if the right was accompanied by actual possession of the land for a specific period.

cum beneficio inventarii. See BENEFICIUM INVENTARII.

cum communi pastura (kəm kə-myoo-ni pas-chər-ə). [Law Latin] Hist. With common pasturage. • This phrase granted a servitude of pasture, not a right of common, on property.

cum curiis earumque exitibus (kəm kyoor-ee-is ee-ə-rəm-kwee ek-sit-i-bəs). [Law Latin] Hist. With courts, and the results or profits of the same. • The phrase appeared in reference to the right of the Baron courts to any of those courts' profits, as distinguished from the obligation of the King's courts to turn over all profits to the King.

cum curiis et bloodwitis (kəm kyoor-ee-is et bləd-wit-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. With the power of holding courts and fining for blood. • Property disposed of cum curiis et bloodwitis entitled the purchaser of a barony to cumulative jurisdiction over barony matters.

cum decimis inclusis et nunquam antea separatis (kəm des-ə-mis in-kloo-sis et nəm-kwam an-tee-ə sep-ə-ray-tis). [Law Latin] Scots law. With the tithes included, and never before separated. • This phrase exempted conveyed land from the payment of tithes.

cum dividend. With dividend. • Stocks purchased cum dividend entitle the buyer to any pending declared dividends. Cf. EX DIVIDEND.

cum domibus, aedificiis (kəm dom-ə-bəs, ee-di-fish-ee-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. With houses, buildings. • These words in a conveyance included within the conveyance every structure erected on the conveyed land.

cum effectu (kəm i-fek-t[y]oo). [Latin] Hist. With effect; in effect.

"Prescription does not run against any one . . . unless he is able to act in defence of his right cum effectu Under the old feudal system the casualty of ward was not incurred except where the vassal alienated his lands cum effectu. Thus, if the vassal was interdicted and disposed without the consent of his interdictors, his conveyance being reducible was not effectual, and the casualty was not incurred." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 127-28 (4th ed. 1894).

cum excessu moderaminis (kəm ek-ses-[y]oo mod-ə-ray-mə-nis). [Law Latin] Scots law. In excess of the limits. • The phrase appeared in reference to the legal limits on the use of violence as a means of self-defense.

cum fabrilibus, brasinis, et brueriis (kəm fə-bril-ə-bəs, brə-si-nəs, et broo-er-ee-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. With forges, maltkilns, and breweries. • A tenant was restricted from building these structures on land unless the tenant first obtained the superior's permission.

cum fossa et furca (kəm fos-ə et fər-kə). [Law Latin] Hist. With pit and gallows. • In ancient charters, this phrase granted Baron courts the right to try capital offenses and to inflict capital punishment.

cum grano salis (kəm gray-noh say-lis or kuum grah-noh sah-lis). [Latin] With a grain of salt; with allowance for exaggeration; with reservations.

cum herezeldis (kəm her-ə-zel-dis). [Latin] Scots law. With herezelds; with the best things that move. • The phrase appeared in reference to a tenant's best horse, cow, or other animal, when the animal was customarily transferred to the landlord on the death of the tenant.

Cumis counsel. See COUNSEL.

cum libera et plena administratione (kəm lib-ər-ə et plee-nə ad-min-ə-stray-shee-oh-nee). [Law Latin] Scots law. With full and free power of administration. • The phrase appeared in reference to the powers that one could grant to certain agents, such as attorneys.

cum libero exitu et introitu (kəm lib-ər-ə ek-si-t[y]oo et in-troh-ə-t[y]oo). [Law Latin] Hist. With free exit and entry.

cum maritagio (kəm mar-ə-tay-jee-oh). [Law Latin] Scots law. With the marriage portion. • The phrase appeared in reference to the required payment to a superior upon the marriage of the superior's ward.

cum molendinis et multuris (kəm mə-len-di-nis et mäl-chər-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. With mills and multures. Cf. MOLTURAE.

cum nota (kəm noh-tə). [Latin] Scots law. With a distinguishing mark. • The phrase appeared in reference to otherwise inadmissible testimony that a judge could allow after considering the testimony's merit or believability.

cum omni causa (kəm ahm-ni kaw-zə). [Latin] Roman law. With every advantage derived from a given transaction, such as a sale.

cum onere (kəm on-ə-ree). [Latin] With the burden. • An item acquired cum onere is taken subject to existing burdens and charges.

cum onere debitorum defuncti (kəm on-ər-ee deb-i-tor-əm di-fəngk-ti). [Latin] Hist. With the burden of the decedent's debts. • The phrase appeared in reference to an heir's position after entering a succession.

cum pertinentiis (kəm pər-tə-nen-shee-is). [Latin] With the appurtenances. • In a conveyance of land, the conveyance included not only everything belonging to the land, but also rights incident to it.

cum piscariis (kəm pis-kair-ee-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. With fishings. • The phrase was used to convey an express grant of fishing rights without the necessity of also possessing the right for a prescribed period. Cf. CUM PISCATIONIBUS.

cum piscationibus (kəm pis-kay-shee-oh-nə-bəs). [Law Latin] Hist. With fishing or fisheries. • The phrase was used to convey the express grant of fishing rights only if the grant was accompanied by possession of the right for a prescribed period. Cf. CUM PISCARIIS.

cum rights. With rights. • A cum rights purchaser of stock is entitled to rights that have been declared but not distributed, such as the right to purchase additional shares at a stated price. — Also termed rights on.

cum satis furore ipso puniatur (kəm sat-is fyuu-ror-ree ip-soh pyoo-nee-ay-tər). [Latin] Hist. Since he is sufficiently punished by the insanity itself. • The phrase appeared in reference to the principle that an insane person is not criminally responsible for his or her acts. It was a forerunner to the modern insanity defense.

cum sua causa et labe (kəm s[y]oo-ə kaw-zə et lay-bee). [Latin] Hist. With its advantages and its defects.

cum suo onere (kəm s[y]oo-oh on-ər-ee). [Latin] Hist. With its burden. • The phrase appeared in reference to a vassal's land encumbrances that the superior was bound to accept upon the vassal's resignation.

cum testamento annexo (kəm tes-tə-men-toh ə-nek-soh). See administration cum testamento annexo under ADMINISTRATION.

cum titulo (kəm tich-[y]ə-loh). [Law Latin] Hist. With the title.

cumulatio criminum (kyoo-myə-lay-shee-oh krim-ə-nəm). [Law Latin] Hist. The accumulation of crimes; the charging of more than one crime in an indictment.

cumulative approach. See UNITY OF ART.

cumulative dividend. See DIVIDEND.

cumulative-effects doctrine. (1987) The rule that a transaction affecting interstate commerce in a trivial way may be taken together with other similar transactions to establish that the combined effect on interstate commerce is not trivial and can therefore be regulated under the Commerce Clause. [Cases: Commerce ◊ 7(2).] cumulative error. See ERROR (2).

cumulative-error analysis. Appellate scrutiny of whether all of the individual harmless errors made in a trial had the cumulative effect of prejudicing the outcome. • If they did, the harmless errors taken together may amount to reversible error. [Cases: Appeal and Error ◊ 1026; Federal Courts ◊ 891.]

cum virginitas vel castitas corrupta restitui non possit (kəm vər-jin-i-tas vel kas-ti-tas kə-rəp-tə-ri-stich-[y]oo-i). [Latin] Hist. & Scots law. Since virginity or chastity once violated cannot be restored. • The phrase was used to explain the basis for imposing severe punishment for rape.

CUPOS. abbr. A cohabiting unmarried person of the opposite sex. • Although this term is intended to be synonymous with "POSSLQ" (a person of the opposite sex sharing living quarters), it is more literally precise because it excludes married persons. See POSSLQ.

cura (kyoor-ə), n. [Latin] Roman law. A guardianship that protects the interests of minors who are between puberty and the age of 25, or incapacitated persons. Cf. TUTELA. Pl. curae.

"Cura was a form of guardianship indicated by the necessities of the case, with respect to persons who, though sui juris, were in need of protection. It was not regarded as a substitute for patria potestas as tutela was. . . . It extended to the person as well as the property, and in the latter respect is much the same as in the case of the tutela of infants." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 122 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

cura furiosi (kyoor-ə fyoor-ee-oh-sī). A guardianship for an insane person who was mentally incapacitated.

"The cura furiosi empowered and bound the curator to manage the property of the lunatic on the lunatic's behalf." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 492 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

cura minoris (kyoor-ə mi-nor-is). A form of guardianship for a minor under 25 whose capacity of action was complete, but whose judgment might be defective. Pl. cura minorum.

cura prodigi (kyoor-ə prah-də-jī). A form of guardianship for a spendthrift, usu. at the request of the person's agnatic family.

"The cura prodigi differed from the cura furiosi in that the prodigus, unlike the furiosus, was himself capable of performing any act by which he acquired a right or benefit. The appointment of a curator, however, precluded the prodigus from performing any act which operated to alienate property or to subject him to a liability; any such act, in order to be effectual, had to be concluded either by the curator on behalf of the prodigus or by the prodigus with the approval of the curator." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 492 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

cura animarum (kyoor-ə an-ə-mair-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. The cure of souls; the care of souls.

cur. adv. vult. abbr. CURIA ADVISARI VULT.

curate (kyuur-it). Eccles. law. 1. A person in charge of a parish; a pastor. 2. A member of the clergy who receives a stipend or salary to assist a vicar, rector, or pastor; an assistant to a parish priest. [Cases: Religious Societies ⇨ 27.]

curatio (kyə-ray-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin cura "care"] Roman law. 1. The power or duty of managing the interests of a youth or incapacitated person. 2. The office of a curator. See CURA. Pl. curationes (kyə-ray-shee-oh-nee-z).

curative admissibility. See ADMISSIBILITY.

curative-admissibility doctrine. (1975) The rule that otherwise inadmissible evidence will be admitted to rebut inadmissible evidence placed before the factfinder by the adverse party. • The doctrine applies when a motion to strike cannot cure the prejudice created by the adverse party. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 396; Evidence ⇨ 155.]

curative instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

curative statute. See STATUTE.

curator (kyuur-ə-tər or kyuur-ay-tər or kyuu-ray-tor), n.

1. Roman law. (ital). A person who manages the affairs of another; a guardian. Pl. curatores (kyər-ə-tor-ee-z). See CURA.

"Although the control of a Tutor ceased when the Pupillus had attained manhood and become invested with his political rights, it must have frequently happened that the youth would be involved in business which he would be incapable of regulating with advantage at that early age, and would, at all events, if wealthy, be open to fraud and imposition. Hence arose the practice of nominating a Curator, whose authority extended to the twenty-fifth year of the ward, but who did not necessarily, like a Tutor, exercise a general superintendence, being frequently nominated for one special purpose. . . . Curatores were appointed also to manage the affairs of persons beyond the age of twenty-five, who, in consequence of being insane, deaf and dumb, or affected with some incurable disease, were incapable of attending to their own concerns." William Ramsay, A Manual of Roman Antiquities 299-300 (Rodolfo Lanciani ed., 15th ed. 1894).

curator ad litem (kyuu-ray-tor ad li-təm). A curator appointed by a court to represent the interests of a youth, or an incapacitated or unborn person, during the proceedings before the court. [Cases: Infants ⇨ 76.]

curator bonis (kyuu-ray-tor boh-nis). [Latin "a guardian of property"] 1. Roman law. A guardian appointed to care for property, esp. for the benefit of creditors. 2. Scots law. A person appointed by a court to manage an estate, esp. of a minor or an insane person. — Also termed curator ad bona.

curator bonorum (kyuu-ray-tor bə-nor-əm). A person appointed by a court to administer the estate of an insolvent person.

2. A temporary guardian or conservator appointed by a court to care for the property or person of a minor or incapacitated person. [Cases: Guardian and Ward ⇨ 13(6).]

interim curator. Archaic. A person appointed by a justice of the peace to hold a felon's property until a royal administrator could be assigned the task.

3. Civil law. A guardian who manages the estate of a minor, an absent person, or an incapacitated person. Pl. curatores. [Cases: Absentees ⇨ 5; Guardian and Ward ⇨ 1.]

curator ad hoc (kyuu-ray-tor ad hok). A court-appointed curator who manages a single matter or

curator rei (kyuu-ray-tor ree-i). [Latin] Scots law. A guardian of an estate, as distinguished from a tutor, who is a guardian of a person. — Also termed curator datur rei.

4. Parliamentary law. An officer charged with custody of an organization's valuable property.

curator ad bona (kyuu-ray-tor ad boh-nə). See curator bonis under CURATOR (1).

curatorship. (16c) The office of a curator or guardian.

dative curatorship. See dative tutorship under TUTORSHIP.

curatory, n. Scots law. The management by a curator of the affairs of someone incapable, esp. consent to the legal acts of a minor to cure the minor's legal incapacity.

curatrix (kyuu-ray-triks). Archaic. A female curator.

curb. See TRADING CURB.

cure, n. 1. A seller's right under the UCC to correct a non-conforming delivery of goods, usu. within the contract period. [Cases: Sales ↷166(1).] 2. Maritime law. Restoration to health after disease or injury; medical attention and nursing care during a period of convalescence. See MAINTENANCE AND CURE; MAXIMUM CURE. [Cases: Seamen ↷11.] — curative, adj.

cure, vb. (14c) To remove legal defects or correct legal errors. • For example, curing title involves removing defects from title to unmarketable land so that title becomes marketable. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ↷144.]

curfew (kər-fyoo). 1. Hist. A law requiring that all fires be extinguished at a certain time in the evening, usu. announced by the ringing of a bell. 2. A regulation that forbids people (or certain classes of them, such as minors) from being outdoors or in vehicles during specified hours. [Cases: Infants ↷13.]

curia (kyoor-ee-ə), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. One of 30 divisions (three tribes of ten curiae) into which the Roman people were said to be divided by Romulus. See comitia curiata under COMITIA. 2. Roman law. A legislative gathering, esp. of the Roman Senate; the building used for the gathering. 3. Hist. A judicial tribunal held in the sovereign's palace; a royal court. — Abbr. cur. 4. Hist. A court. 5. The papal court, including its functionaries and officials.

"The word curia in classical Latin is used in a number of ways. Apparently, it meant at first a subdivision of the people. It was also used, by a transfer which is not too clear, for the building in which the Roman Senate met. By an almost inevitable development it became the word for the Senate itself and later the ordinary designation for the Council in municipalities of the later Empire. . . . How much of this was still recalled in Medieval times, we cannot tell, but . . . in the early Middle Ages, curia was a common word to describe both the groups of men who generally were found in attendance on pope, emperor, king or prince, and the groups which were summoned by him to give him counsel. The curia in the latter sense, however, was not really a casual group of persons, summoned spasmodically to advise the king or any other person. It had come to be in Feudal Europe the ordinary Latin word for the general meeting of the lord's vassals, which itself grew out of the Germanic mot or thing. . . . The Curia of the king was in theory a larger and more important example of the same kind of assemblage." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 46-48 (1936).

curia admiralitatis (kyoor-ee-ə ad-mə-ral-ə-tay-tis). [Law Latin] See HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

curia advisari vult (kyoor-ee-ə ad-və-sair-i vølt). [Latin] The court will be advised; the court will consider. • This phrase signaled a court's decision to delay judgment pending further consideration. In England, the phrase is still used in all Court of Appeal decisions when the judgment is reserved; that is, not delivered after the hearing. — Abbr. cur. adv. vult; c.a.v.

curia baronis (kyoor-ee-ə bə-roh-nis). [Law Latin] See COURT BARON.

curia burgi (kyoor-ee-ə bər-ji). See COURT OF HUSTINGS.

curia cancellaria. See CANCELLARIA.

curia Christianitatis (kyoor-ee-ə kris-tee-an-ə-tay-tis). [Law Latin "a court Christian"] Hist. An ecclesiastical court. See ecclesiastical court under COURT.

curia claudenda (kyoor-ee-ə klaw-den-də). See DE CURIA CLAUDENDA.

curia comitatus (kyoor-ee-ə kom-ə-tay-təs). [Law Latin] See COUNTY COURT.

curia domini (kyoor-ee-ə dom-ə-ni). [Law Latin "lord's court"] Hist. A lord's house or hall, used as a meeting place for tenants during court sessions.

curia magna (kyoor-ee-ə mag-nə). [Law Latin "great court"] Hist. An ancient name for Parliament.

curia palatii (kyoor-ee-ə pə-lay-shee-i). [Law Latin "court of the palace"] PALACE COURT.

Curia Regis (kyoor-ee-ə ree-jis). [Latin "king's court"] Hist. (sometimes not cap.) 1. The chief court in early Norman England, established by William the Conqueror, • The curia regis was a body of advisers who traveled with the king, advising him on political matters and acting as an appellate court in important or complicated cases. Over time the functions of the curia regis became exclusively judicial in nature. — Also termed King's Court; aula regis. — Abbr. C.R.

"[W]e are tempted to use terms which are more precise than those that were current in the twelfth century. In particular we are wont to speak of the Curia Regis without remembering that the definite article is not in our documents. Any court held in the king's name by the king's delegates is Curia Regis. Thus the institution of what in course of time will be a new tribunal, a Court of King's Bench or a Court of Common Pleas, may be found in some small rearrangement, some petty technical change, which at the moment passes unnoticed." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 153 (2d ed. 1898).

"[A small] body collects round the king, a body of administrators selected from the ranks of the baronage and of the clergy. At its head stands the chief-justiciar, the king's right-hand man, his viceroy when the king is, as often he is, in his foreign dominions. . . . This body when it sits for financial purposes constitutes the Exchequer (Scaccarium), so called from the chequered cloth which lies on the table, convenient for the counting of money. Also it forms a council and court of law for the king: it is a curia Regis, the king's court, and its members are justitiiarii, justiciars or justices of this court. Under Henry I they are sent into the counties to collect taxes and to hold pleas; they are then justitiiarii errantes, justitiiarii itinerantes. During the whole period the term curia Regis seems loosely used to cover both the sessions of this permanent body and the assembly of the tenants in chief; the former may perhaps be regarded as a standing committee of the latter." F.W. Maitland, The Constitutional History of England 63-64 (1908; repr. 1955).

"The focal point of royal government was the curia regis (king's court), the body of advisers and courtiers who attended the king and supervised the administration of the realm. It was not a specific court of law, any more than the eyre was, but rather was the descendant of the Anglo-Saxon witengemot (meeting with the witan, or royal advisers) and the ancestor of the king's council which later subdivided into parliament and the privy council." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 20 (3d ed. 1990).

2. The sessions of this court.

curing title. The act of removing defects from a land title to make it marketable.

currency. (17c) An item (such as a coin, government note, or banknote) that circulates as a medium of exchange. See LEGAL TENDER. [Cases: United States ↻34.]

blocked currency. Currency or bank deposits that, by government restriction, may be used only within the country where they are located.

fractional currency. Paper money worth less than one dollar; esp., the currency issued by the federal government from 1863 to 1876.

hard currency. Currency backed by reserves, esp. gold and silver reserves.

national currency. Currency approved by a national government and placed in circulation as a medium of exchange. See LEGAL TENDER. [Cases: United States ↻34.]

postal currency. Hist. A fractional currency bearing a facsimile of postage stamps. • The United States Post Office issued these miniature notes in the 19th century until 1876. They were exchangeable for postage stamps, accepted for payments to the government in amounts up to $5, and could be exchanged for federal currency in multiples of $5. They were also used as small change when people hoarded coins during the Civil War. — Also termed postage currency.

soft currency. Currency not backed by reserves and therefore subject to sharp fluctuations in value.

United States currency. Currency issued under the authority of the federal government.

currency arbitrage. See ARBITRAGE.

currency market. See foreign-exchange market under MARKET.

currency swap. See SWAP.

currency-transaction report. A deposit report that must be signed by a person who deposits $10,000 or more in a bank account. • The report is on blue paper, much like the skin color of the cartoon characters called Smurfs, so it is also termed (in slang) a smurf.

current account. See ACCOUNT.

current asset. See ASSET.

current-cost accounting. (1938) A method of measuring assets in terms of replacement cost. • This approach accounts for inflation by recognizing price changes in a company's assets and restating the assets in terms of their current cost.

currit quattuor pedibus (kār-it kwah-too-ər ped-ə-bəs). [Law Latin] It runs on four feet; it runs on all fours. See ON ALL FOURS.

cursor (kār-sə-tər). Hist. A chancery clerk responsible for making out original writs. • Cursor derives from the writs de cursu that the clerks wrote out.

cursor baron. Hist. An officer of the Court of Exchequer with administrative, but not judicial, duties. • Over time, as the Barons of the Exchequer took on more judicial rather than fiscal duties, the need for someone with financial experience became apparent. So in 1610 a cursor baron was appointed to sit alongside the judges. The office was abolished in 1856.

curtesy (kār-tə-see). (16c) At common law, a husband's right, upon his wife's death, to a life estate in the land that his wife owned during their marriage, assuming that a child was born alive to the couple. • This right has been largely abolished. Traditionally, the full phrase was estate by the curtesy of England (or Scotland). — Also spelled (esp. in Scots law) courtesy. — Also termed tenancy by the curtesy. Cf. DOWER. [Cases: Dower and Curtesy ↻1.] curtesy consummate (kār-tə-see kən-səm-it or kahn-sə-mit). The interest the husband has in his wife's estate after her death.

curtesy initiate (kər-tə-see i-nish-ee-it). The interest the husband has in his wife's estate after the birth of issue capable of inheriting, and before the death of the wife.

curtilage (kər-tə-lij). (14c) The land or yard adjoining a house, usu. within an enclosure. • Under the Fourth Amendment, the curtilage is an area usu. protected from warrantless searches. — Also termed (in Latin) curtillium. See OPEN-FIELDS DOCTRINE. Cf. MESSAGE. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨27.]

curtiles terrae (kər-tī-leez ter-ee). [Law Latin] See COURT LANDS.

custodes libertatis angliae auctoritate parlamenti (kə-stoh-deez lib-ər-tay-tis ang-lee-ee awk-tor-ə-tay-tee par-[y]ə-men-tī). [Latin] Hist. Guardians of the liberty of England by the authority of Parliament. • The style of all writs and judicial process that issued during the period between the execution of Charles I (January 1649) and the proclamation of Oliver Cromwell as Lord Protector (December 1653).

custodes pacis (kə-stoh-deez pay-sis). [Latin] Hist. Guardians (or conservators) of the peace. See PEACE OFFICER.

custodiae causa (kə-stoh-dee-ee kaw-zə). [Latin] Scots law. For keeping; for preserving. • The phrase described a bailment's purpose.

custodial account. See ACCOUNT.

custodia legis. See IN CUSTODIA LEGIS.

custodial interference. Family law. 1. The abduction of a child or the inducement of a minor child to leave the parent legally entitled to custody or not to return to the parent entitled to legal custody. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨57, 569, 969; Kidnapping ⇨23.] 2. Any hindrance to a parent's rightful access to a child. • The Restatement (Second) of Torts § 700 (1977) provides for an action in tort by the parent entitled to custody against one who, with knowledge that the parent does not consent, either takes the child or compels or induces the child to leave or not to return to the parent legally entitled to custody. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨969.] — Also termed custody interference.

custodial interrogation. See INTERROGATION.

custodial parent. See PARENT.

custodial responsibility. Family law. Physical child custody and supervision, usu. including overnight responsibility for the child. • This term encompasses visitation and sole, joint, and shared custody. Both parents share responsibility for the child regardless of the amount of time they spend with the child. See CUSTODY.

preventive custody. (1976) Custody intended to prevent further dangerous or criminal behavior.

protective custody. (1929) 1. The government's confinement of a person for that person's own security or well-being, such as a witness whose safety is in jeopardy or an incompetent person who may harm him- or herself or others. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨20.] 2. Family law. An arrangement intended to protect a child from abuse, neglect, or danger whereby the child is placed in the safety of a foster family after being removed from a home or from the custody of the person previously responsible for the child's care. [Cases: Infants ⇨226.] 3. An arrangement made by law-enforcement authorities to safeguard a person in a place other than the person's home because of criminal threats to harm the person.

2. Family law. The care, control, and maintenance of a child awarded by a court to a responsible adult. • Custody involves legal custody (decision-making authority) and physical custody (caregiving authority), and an award of custody usu. grants both rights. In a divorce or separation proceeding between the parents, the court usu. awards custody to one of them, unless both are found to be unfit, in which case the court may award custody to a third party, typically a relative. In a case involving parental dereliction, such as abuse or neglect, the court may award custody to the state for placing the child in foster care if no responsible relative or family friend is willing and able to care for the child. — Also termed child custody; legal custody; managing conservatorship; parental functions. See managing conservator (2) under CONSERVATOR; PARENTING PLAN. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨1.] divided custody. (1905) An arrangement by which each parent has exclusive physical custody and full control of and responsibility for the child part of the time, with visitation rights in the other parent.

• For example, a mother might have custody during the school year, and the father might have custody during the summer vacation. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨210.]

joint custody. (1870) An arrangement by which both parents share the responsibility for and authority over the child at all times, although one parent may exercise primary physical custody. • In most jurisdictions, there is a rebuttable presumption that joint custody is in the child's best interests. Joint-custody arrangements are favored unless there is so much animosity between the parents that the child or children will be adversely affected by a joint-custody arrangement. An award of joint custody does not necessarily mean an equal sharing of time; it does, however, mean that the parents will consult and share equally in the child's upbringing and in decision-making about upbringing. In a joint-custody arrangement, the rights, privileges, and responsibilities are shared, though not necessarily the physical custody. In a joint-custody arrangement, physical custody is usually given to one parent. In fact, awards of joint physical custody, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances, are usually found not to be in the best interests of the child. — Also termed shared custody; joint managing conservatorship. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨120–155.]

"The statutes, and the cases as well, differ over the definition of joint custody. It is most often defined as meaning only that both parents will share in the decisions concerning the child's care, education, religion, medical treatment and general welfare." Homer H. Clark Jr., The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States § 19.5, at 815 (2d ed. 1988).

legal custody. 1. CUSTODY (2). 2. CUSTODY (3). 3. The authority to make significant decisions on a child's behalf, including decisions about education, religious training, and healthcare. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨100–107.]

physical custody. 1. PHYSICAL CUSTODY (2). 2. PHYSICAL CUSTODY (3).

residential custody. See PHYSICAL CUSTODY (2).

shared custody. See joint custody.

sole custody. (1870) An arrangement by which one parent has full control and sole decision-making responsibility — to the exclusion of the other parent — on matters such as health, education, religion, and living arrangements. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨1, 100–107, 100–107, 27.]

split custody. An arrangement in which one parent has custody of one or more children, while the other parent has custody of the remaining children. • Split custody is fairly uncommon, since most jurisdictions favor keeping siblings together. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨27.]

3. The detention of a person by virtue of lawful process or authority. — Also termed legal custody. [Cases: Arrest ⇨68(3).] — custodial, adj.

custody decree. See DECREE.

custody determination. Family law. A court order determining custody and visitation rights. • The order typically does not include any instructions on child support or other monetary obligations. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨511, 530.]

custody evaluation. See HOME-STUDY REPORT.

custody hearing. See HEARING.

custody interference. See CUSTODIAL INTERFERENCE.

custody of the law. (17c) The condition of property or a person being under the control of legal authority (as a court or law officer). See IN CUSTODIA LEGIS.

custody proceeding. Family law. An action to determine who is entitled to legal or physical custody of a child. • Legal custody gives one the right to make significant decisions regarding the child, and physical custody gives one the right to physical care and control of the child. See CUSTODY; custody hearing under HEARING. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨401.]

custom, n. (13c) 1. A practice that by its common adoption and long, unvarying habit has come to have the force of law. See USAGE. [Cases: Customs and Usages ⇨1.] — customary, adj.

conventional custom. A custom that operates only indirectly through the medium of agreements, so that it is accepted and adopted in individual instances as conventional law between the parties to those agreements. — Also termed usage. See USAGE.

general custom. 1. A custom that prevails throughout a country and constitutes one of the sources of the law of the land. [Cases: Customs and Usages ⇨1–22.] 2. A custom that businesses recognize and follow. See trade usage under USAGE.

legal custom. A custom that operates as a binding rule of law, independently of any agreement on the part of those subject to it. — Often shortened to custom.

local custom. A custom that prevails in some defined locality only, such as a city or county, and constitutes a source of law for that place only. — Also termed particular custom; special custom. [Cases: Customs and Usages ⇨1–22.]

2. (pl.) Duties imposed on imports or exports. 3. (pl.) The agency or procedure for collecting such duties.

customal, n. See CUSTOMARY.

custom and usage. General rules and practices that have become the norm through unvarying habit and common use. Cf. CUSTOM (1); USAGE. [Cases: Customs and Usages ⇨1–22.]

customary, n. (16c) A record of all the established legal and quasi-legal practices within a community. — Also termed customal; customal.

customary court baron. See COURT BARON.

customary dispatch. See DISPATCH.

customary estate. See COPYHOLD.

customary freehold. See COPYHOLD.

customary international law. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

customary law. (16c) Law consisting of customs that are accepted as legal requirements or obligatory rules of conduct; practices and beliefs that are so vital and intrinsic a part of a social and economic system that they are treated as if they were laws. — Also termed consuetudinary law.

customary seisin. See quasi-seisin under SEISIN.

customary tenant. See TENANT.

customers' goods. See GOODS.

customer's man. See registered representative under REPRESENTATIVE.

customer's person. See registered representative under REPRESENTATIVE.

customhouse. A building or office, esp. at a port, where duties or customs are collected and where ships are cleared for entering or leaving the port. — Also spelled customshouse.

customhouse broker. See BROKER.

custom of York. See YORK, CUSTOM OF.

Customs and Patent Appeals, Court of. See COURT OF CUSTOMS AND PATENT APPEALS.

customs broker. See customhouse broker under BROKER.

Customs Cooperation Council. A specialized intergovernmental organization for the study of customs questions. • Established in 1952, the Council has its headquarters in Brussels. — Abbr. CCC.

Customs Court, U.S. See UNITED STATES CUSTOMS COURT.

customs duty. See DUTY (4).

customs frontier. Int'l law. The territorial boundary at which a country imposes customs duties.

customshouse. See CUSTOMHOUSE.

customs union. Int'l law. A combination of two or more countries within a single customs area with a common external tariff, though each participating country remains politically independent. • The effect is that tariffs originally levied on the traffic of goods between those countries are abolished or else successively dismantled according to an agreed-upon scheme, and that common tariffs are imposed on imports from nonmembers.

custos (kæs-tahs also kæs-tæs). [Latin] Hist. A keeper, protector, or guardian.

Custos Brevium (kæs-tahs bree-vee-əm). [Law Latin "keeper of the writs"] Hist. A clerk who receives and files the writs returnable to the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas. • The office was abolished in 1837. — Also termed Keeper of the Briefs.

custos maris (kæs-tahs mar-is). [Law Latin "warden of the sea"] Hist. A high-ranking naval officer; an admiral. — Also termed seaward; seward.

custos morum (kæs-tahs mor-əm). [Law Latin] Custodian of morals <H.L.A. Hart believed that courts should not be seen as the custos morum>. • This name was sometimes used in reference to the Court of King's Bench.

"[H]e [Viscount Simonds] approved the assertion of Lord Mansfield two centuries before that the Court of King's Bench was the custos morum of the people and had the superintendency of offences contra bonos mores." Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 88 (1968).

custos placitorum coronae (kæs-tahs plas-ə-tor-əm kə-roh-nee). [Law Latin] See CORONATOR.

Custos Rotulorum (kæs-tahs roch-yə-lor-əm or rot-yə-lor-əm). [Law Latin "keeper of the pleas of the Crown"] Hist. The principal justice of the peace in a county, responsible for the rolls of the county sessions of the peace. — Also termed Keeper of the Rolls.

Custos Sigilli. See KEEPER OF THE GREAT SEAL.

custos spiritualium (kæs-tahs spir-i-choo-ay-lee-əm or -tyoo-ay-lee-əm). [Law Latin "keeper of the spiritualities"] Eccles. law. A member of the clergy responsible for a diocese's spiritual jurisdiction during the vacancy of the see.

custos terrae (kæs-tahs ter-ee). [Law Latin "keeper of the land"] Hist. Guardian, warden, or keeper of the land.

custuma (kæs-chə-mə or kæs-tyə-mə). [French coustum "toll" or "tribute"] Hist. A duty or impost.

custumal, n. See CUSTOMARY.

cutoff date. See DATE.

cutpurse. Hist. A person who steals by cutting purses; a pickpocket.

CVA. abbr. United States Court of Veterans Appeals. See UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR VETERANS CLAIMS.

CVSG. abbr. A call for the view of the Solicitor General — an invitation from the U.S. Supreme Court for the Solicitor General's views on a pending petition for writ of certiorari in a case in which, though the government is not a party, governmental interests are involved.

Cwth. abbr. COMMONWEALTH (4).

CXT. abbr. See common external tariff under TARIFF (2).

cybercrime. See computer crime under CRIME.

cyberlaw (sɪ-bər-law). (1994) The field of law dealing with the Internet, encompassing cases, statutes, regulations, and disputes that affect people and businesses interacting through computers. • Cyberlaw addresses issues of online speech and business that arise because of the nature of the medium, including intellectual property rights, free speech, privacy, e-commerce, and safety, as well as questions of jurisdiction. — Also termed cyber-space law.

"Much of the hoopla about 'cyberspace law' relates more to climbing the steep learning curve of [the Internet's] technological complexities than to changes in fundamental legal principles. To the extent there was 'new' law, it was almost entirely case-by-case development, in accordance with accepted and well-understood basic legal principles, albeit applied to new technology and new circumstances." Jay Dratler Jr., Cyberlaw § 1.01, at 1-3 (2001).

cyberpatent. See business-method patent and Internet patent under PATENT (3).

cyberpayment. A transfer of money over the Internet, usu. through a payment service. — Also termed Internet payment.

cyberpiracy. Trademarks. The act of registering a well-known name or mark (or one that is confusingly similar) as a website's domain name, usu. for the purpose of deriving revenue. • One form of cyberpiracy is cybersquatting. Another is using a similar name or mark to mislead consumers. For example, a site called Nikee.com that sells Nikee branded athletic shoes and sporting goods would draw customers away from the famous Nike brand. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1490-1503.] — cyberpirate, n.

cybersquatting. (1997) The act of reserving a domain name on the Internet, esp. a name that would be associated with a company's trademark, and then seeking to profit by selling or licensing the name to the company that has an interest in being identified with it. • The practice was banned by federal law in 1999. See ANTI-CYBERSQUATTING CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT. [Cases: Telecommunications ⇨ 1333.]

cyberstalking. (1995) The act of threatening, harassing, or annoying someone through multiple e-mail messages, as through the Internet, esp. with the intent of placing the recipient in fear that an illegal act or an injury will be inflicted on the recipient or a member of the recipient's family or household.

cyberterrorism. See TERRORISM.

cybertheft. (1994) The act of using an online computer service, such as one on the Internet, to steal someone else's property or to interfere with someone else's use and enjoyment of property. • Examples of cybertheft are hacking into a bank's computer records to wrongfully credit one account and debit another, and interfering with a copyright by wrongfully sending protected material over the Internet. [Cases: Telecommunications ⇨ 461.15.]

cyclical (sɪ-klə-kəl or sɪk-lə-kəl), adj. (Of a stock or an industry) characterized by large price swings that occur because of government policy, economic conditions, and seasonal changes.

cy pres (see pray or st). [Law French "as near as"] (1885)

"The cy pres doctrine has been much discussed, if not a little severely criticised, and in many cases misunderstood. . . . The cy pres doctrine is one under which Courts of Chancery act, when a gift for charitable uses cannot be applied according to the exact intention of the donor. In such cases the courts will apply the gift, as nearly as possible (cy pres) in conformity with the presumed general intention of the donor; for it is an established maxim in the interpretation of wills, that a court is bound to carry the will into effect if it can see a general intention consistent with the rules of law, even if the particular mode or manner pointed out by the testator cannot be followed." George T. Bispham, The Principles of Equity § 104, at 113-14 (11th ed. 1931).

"Although the reason for the adoption of the cy pres rule by the English chancery court in the middle ages is not known, various hypotheses as to the motives of the court have been suggested. The most plausible theory is that the chancellors, being ecclesiastics and trained in Roman law, resurrected this civil law doctrine in order to save gifts made for religious purposes and thereby subject the property to church control. Justification for the use of the doctrine was laid on the shoulders of the donor, the idea being that since the object of the testator in donating the money to charity was to obtain an advantageous position in the kingdom of heaven, he ought not to be frustrated in this desire because of an unexpected or unforeseen failure." Edith L. Fisch, The Cy Pres Doctrine in the United States 4 (1950).

2. A statutory provision that allows a court to reform a will, deed, or other instrument to avoid violating the rule against perpetuities. See RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES. [Cases: Perpetuities ⇨ 4(22).]

cyrographum (sɪ-roh-rə-fəm). [Law Latin] See CHIROGRAPH (2).

D

D. abbr. 1. DISTRICT. 2. DEFENDANT. 3. DIGEST.

D.A. abbr. 1. DISTRICT ATTORNEY. 2. See deposit account under ACCOUNT.

dactylography (dak-tə-log-rə-fee), n. The scientific study of fingerprints as a method of identification. — Also termed dactyloscopy. — dactylographic (dak-til-ə-graf-ik), adj.

dactyloscopy. See DACTYLOGRAPHY.

DAF. abbr. DELIVERED AT FRONTIER.

dailia. See DALUS.

dailus. See DALUS.

daily balance. (1859) The final daily accounting for a day on which interest is to be accrued or paid.

average daily balance. The average amount of money in an account (such as a bank account or credit-card account) during a given period. • This amount serves as the basis for computing interest or a finance charge for the period.

daily newspaper. See NEWSPAPER.

daisy chain. A series of purchases and sales of the same stock by a small group of securities dealers attempting to drive up the stock's price to attract unsuspecting buyers' interest. • Once the buyers have invested (i.e., are caught up in the chain), the traders sell for a quick profit, leaving the buyers with overpriced stock. This practice is illegal.

dalus (day-ləs), n. [Law Latin "a dale"] Hist. 1. A dale; a ditch. 2. A measure of land being a thin strip of pasture between two plowed furrows. — Also termed dailus; dailia.

damage, adj. Of or relating to monetary compensation for loss or injury to a person or property  . — Also termed damages . Cf. DAMAGES.

damage, n. (14c) Loss or injury to person or property <actionable damage resulting from negligence>.

damage-cleer (dam-ij kleer), n. [fr. Latin damna clericorum "clerk's compensation"] Hist. A set fee payable by a plaintiff to the Court of the Common Pleas, King's Bench, or Exchequer before execution on an award of damages. • The fee — later abolished by statute — was originally a gratuity to the court clerks for preparing special pleadings. — Also spelled damage cleere. — Also termed damna clericorum.

"Damage cleere, damna clericorum, was assessed by the tenth part in the common pleas, and by the twentieth part in the king's bench and exchequer, of all damages, exceeding five marks, recovered either by verdict, confession, or judgment of the court, in all actions upon the case, covenant, trespass, battery, false imprisonment, dower, and all others, wherein the damages were uncertain, which the plaintiff was obliged to pay to the prothonotary, or chief officer of that court, wherein they were recovered before he could have execution for them. But this is taken away by 17 Car. 2, c. 6." Termes de la Ley 141 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

damage feasant (dam-ij fez-ənt or fee-zənt), n. [fr. French faisant dommage] Hist. Doing damage. • This phrase usu. refers to injury to a person's land caused by another person's animals trespassing on the property and eating the crops or treading the grass. By law, the owner of the damaged property could distrain and impound the animals until compensated by the animals' owner. But the impounder had to feed the animals and could not sell or harm them. The term was introduced during the reign of Edward III. — Also spelled damage faisant. — Also termed damnum facientes.

damage rule. See LEGAL-INJURY RULE.

damages, n. pl. (16c) Money claimed by, or ordered to be paid to, a person as compensation for loss or injury <the plaintiff seeks $8,000 in damages from the defendant>. — damage, adj.

"Damages are the sum of money which a person wronged is entitled to receive from the wrongdoer as compensation for the wrong." Frank Gahan, The Law of Damages 1 (1936).

accumulative damages. Statutory damages allowed in addition to amounts available under the common law. — Also termed enhanced damages.

actual damages. (18c) An amount awarded to a complainant to compensate for a proven injury or loss; damages that repay actual losses. — Also termed compensatory damages; tangible damages; real damages. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 15.]

added damages. See punitive damages.

additional damages. Damages usu. provided by statute in addition to direct damages. • Additional damages can include expenses resulting from the injury, consequential damages, or punitive damages.

benefit-of-the-bargain damages. (1955) Damages that a breaching party to a contract must pay to the aggrieved party, equal to the amounts that the aggrieved party would have received, including profits, if the contract had been fully performed. — Also termed loss-of-bargain damages. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 117; Fraud ⇨ 59(2).]

compensatory damages (kəm-pen-sə-tor-ee). (1817) 1. Damages sufficient in amount to indemnify the injured person for the loss suffered. — Often shortened to compensatories. 2. See actual damages. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 15.]

consequential damages. (17c) Losses that do not flow directly and immediately from an injurious act but that result indirectly from the act. — Also termed indirect damages. [Cases: Damages ↻15–25.]

contemptuous damages. See nominal damages.

continuing damages. 1. Ongoing damages arising from the same injury. 2. Damages arising from the repetition of similar acts within a definite period.

cosmetic damages. The amount awarded to compensate for personal disfigurement.

damages for lost expectations. See expectation damages.

damages ultra (al-træ). Additional damages claimed by a plaintiff who is not satisfied with the amounts the defendant paid into court.

direct damages. See general damages.

discretionary damages. Damages (such as mental anguish or pain and suffering) that are not precisely measurable but are determined by the subjective judgment of a jury. — Also termed indeterminate damages.

double damages. Damages that, by statute, are twice the amount that the fact-finder determines is owed or twice the amount of actual damages awarded. • In some cases, double damages are awarded in addition to actual damages, so the effect is the same as treble damages. [Cases: Damages ↻227.]

enhanced damages. 1. See accumulative damages. 2. Patents. Damages for patent infringement in an amount up to three times that of compensatory damages, at the discretion of the court, based on the egregiousness of the defendant's conduct, including the willfulness of the infringement. 35 USCA § 284. [Cases: Patents ↻319(3).] estimated damages. See liquidated damages.

excess damages. Damages awarded to an insured — beyond the coverage provided by an insurance policy — because the insurer did not settle the claim within policy limits. • If the insurer acted in bad faith in not settling, the insured may have a claim to recover the excess damages from the insurer. — Also termed excess-liability damages. [Cases: Insurance ↻3350.]

excessive damages. A jury award that grossly exceeds the amount warranted by law based on the facts and circumstances of the case; unreasonable or outrageous damages, which are subject to reduction by remittitur. See REMITTITUR. [Cases: Damages ↻127–140.]

exemplary damages. See punitive damages.

expectation damages. (1939) Compensation awarded for the loss of what a person reasonably anticipated from a transaction that was not completed. — Also termed expectancy damages; lost-expectation damages; damages for lost expectations. [Cases: Damages ↻23.]

fee damages. Damages awarded to the owner of property abutting an elevated railhist oad for injury caused by the railroad's construction and operation. • The term is used because the damage is to the property owner's easements of light, air, and access, which are parts of the fee.

foreseeable damages. Damages that a breaching party knew or should have known when the contract was made would be likely to result from a breach. [Cases: Damages ↻21.]

future damages. (17c) Money awarded to an injured party for an injury's residual or projected effects, such as those that reduce the person's ability to function. • Examples are expected pain and suffering, loss or impairment of earning capacity, and projected medical expenses. [Cases: Damages ↻25.]

general damages. (18c) Damages that the law presumes follow from the type of wrong complained of; specif., compensatory damages for harm that so frequently results from the tort for which a party has sued that the harm is reasonably expected and need not be alleged or proved. • General damages do not need to be specifically claimed. — Also termed direct damages; necessary damages. [Cases: Damages ↻5.]

gross damages. The total damages found before adjustments and offsets.

hedonic damages (hi-don-ik). (1985) Damages that attempt to compensate for the loss of the pleasure of being alive. • Such damages are not allowed in most jurisdictions. — Also termed (erroneously) hedonistic damages. [Cases: Damages ↻48–56.20.]

imaginary damages. See punitive damages.

inadequate damages. Damages insufficient to fully and fairly compensate the parties; damages bearing no reasonable relation to the plaintiff's injuries, indicating prejudice, mistake, or other fact to support setting aside a jury's verdict. [Cases: Damages ↻127.1–140.7.]

incidental damages. (18c) 1. Losses reasonably associated with or related to actual damages. 2. A seller's commercially reasonable expenses incurred in stopping delivery or in transporting and caring for goods after a buyer's breach. UCC § 2-710. [Cases: Sales ↻384(4).] 3. A buyer's expenses reasonably incurred in caring for goods after a seller's breach. UCC § 2-715(1). [Cases: Sales ↻418(19).]

indeterminate damages. See discretionary damages.

indirect damages. See consequential damages.

intervening damages. Continuing damages that accrue during the pendency and prosecution of an unsuccessful appeal. • A lower court may include intervening damages in an award.

irreparable damages (i-rep-ə-rə-bəl). Damages that cannot be easily ascertained because there is no fixed pecuniary standard of measurement, e.g., damages for a repeated public nuisance. — Also termed non-pecuniary damages.

land damages. See just compensation under COMPENSATION.

lawful damages. Those damages fixed by law and ascertained in a court of law.

liquidated damages. (18c) An amount contractually stipulated as a reasonable estimation of actual damages to be recovered by one party if the other party breaches. • If the parties to a contract have properly agreed on liquidated damages, the sum fixed is the measure of damages for a breach, whether it exceeds or falls short of the actual damages. — Also termed stipulated damages; estimated damages. See LIQUIDATED-DAMAGES CLAUSE. Cf. unliquidated damages; PENALTY CLAUSE. [Cases: Damages ☞ 74–84.]

"Where the terms of a contract specify a sum payable for non-performance, it is a question of construction whether this sum is to be treated as a penalty or as liquidated damages. The difference in effect is this: The amount recoverable in case of a penalty is not the sum named, but the damage actually incurred. The amount recoverable as liquidated damages is the sum named as such. In construing these terms a judge will not accept the phraseology of the parties; they may call the sum specified 'liquidated damages,' but if the judge finds it to be a penalty, he will treat it as such." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 470 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"The distinction between a penalty and genuine liquidated damages, as they are called, is not always easy to apply, but the Courts have made the task simpler by laying down certain guiding principles. In the first place, if the sum payable is so large as to be far in excess of the probable damage on breach, it is almost certainly a penalty. Secondly, if the same sum is expressed to be payable on any one of a number of different breaches of varying importance, it is again probably a penalty, because it is extremely unlikely that the same damage would be caused by these varying breaches. Thirdly, where a sum is expressed to be payable on a certain date, and a further sum in the event of default being made, this latter sum is prima facie a penalty, because mere delay in payment is unlikely to cause damage. Finally, it is to be noted that the mere use of the words 'liquidated damages' is not decisive, for it is the task of the Court and not of the parties to decide the true nature of the sum payable." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 316–17 (3d ed. 1981).

loss-of-bargain damages. See benefit-of-the-bargain damages.

lost-expectation damages. See expectation damages.

lost-profits damages. See LOST-PROFITS (1).

moratory damages (mor-ə-tor-ee or mahr-). Civil law. Damages for a delay in performing an obligation. La. Civ. Code arts. 1989, 1994. • There must be a default before these damages can be recovered, while compensatory damages are recoverable for both a failure of performance and for a defective performance.

multiple damages. Statutory damages (such as double or treble damages) that are a multiple of the amount that the fact-finder determines to be owed. — Also termed multiplied damages. See double damages; treble damages. [Cases: Damages ☞ 227.]

"[T]he statutory multiple damages differ from the common law punitive damages in that punitive damages involved no fixed sum or limit. The fixed limit of multiple damages not only reduces their threat to the defendant and the potential for abuse, it also reduces the possibility of a measured deterrence. Likewise, because the enhancement of the award is fixed by the statutory multiple, there is no occasion for introducing evidence of the defendant's wealth as there is in the case of common law punitive damages Perhaps a more important distinction is that multiple damages statutes may be enacted for entirely non-punitive purposes. Specifically, some double or treble damages statutes, and also specified 'civil penalties,' are intended to provide a kind of liquidated damages for actual losses that cannot be proved or that are otherwise unrecognized by the law." Dan B. Dobbs, Law of Remedies § 3.12, at 359 (2d ed. 1993).

necessary damages. See general damages.

nominal damages. (18c) 1. A trifling sum awarded when a legal injury is suffered but there is no substantial loss or injury to be compensated. 2. A small amount fixed as damages for breach of contract without regard to the amount of harm. — Also termed contemptuous damages. Cf. substantial damages. [Cases: Damages ☞ 8–14.]

"Nominal damages are damages awarded for the infraction of a legal right, where the extent of the loss is not shown, or where the right is one not dependent upon loss or damage, as in the case of rights of bodily immunity or rights to have one's material property undisturbed by direct invasion. The award of nominal damages is made as a judicial declaration that the plaintiff's right has been violated." Charles T. McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Damages § 20, at 85 (1935).

"Nominal damages are awarded if the plaintiff establishes a breach of contract or a tort of the kind that is said to be 'actionable per se' but fails to establish a loss caused by the wrong. In the case of tort not actionable per se as, for example, negligence, if the plaintiff fails to establish a loss, the action will be dismissed. The practical significance of a judgment for nominal damages is that the plaintiff thereby establishes a legal right. The judgment has the effect of a declaration of legal rights and may deter future infringements or may enable the plaintiff to obtain an injunction to restrain a repetition of the wrong. The obtaining of nominal damages will also, in many cases, entitle a plaintiff to costs [Also,] nominal damages might serve as a peg upon which to hang an award of exemplary damages." S.M. Waddams, The Law of Damages 477–78 (3d ed. 1997).

nonpecuniary damages. Damages that cannot be measured in money. See irreparable damages.

particular damages. See special damages.

pecuniary damages (pə-kyoo-nee-er-ee). (17c) Damages that can be estimated and monetarily compensated. • Although this phrase appears in many old cases, it is now widely considered a redundancy — since damages are always pecuniary.

permanent damages. Damages for past, present, and future harm that cannot be avoided or remedied. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 39, 98, 110, 216(6).] presumptive damages. See punitive damages.

prospective damages. Future damages that, based on the facts pleaded and proved by the plaintiff, can reasonably be expected to occur. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 25.]

proximate damages. Damages directly, immediately, and naturally flowing from the act complained of. Cf. speculative damages (1). [Cases: Damages ⇨ 18.]

punitive damages. (1848) Damages awarded in addition to actual damages when the defendant acted with recklessness, malice, or deceit; specif., damages assessed by way of penalizing the wrongdoer or making an example to others. • Punitive damages, which are intended to punish and thereby deter blameworthy conduct, are generally not recoverable for breach of contract. The Supreme Court has held that three guidelines help determine whether a punitive-damages award violates constitutional due process: (1) the reprehensibility of the conduct being punished; (2) the reasonableness of the relationship between the harm and the award; and (3) the difference between the award and the civil penalties authorized in comparable cases. BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589 (1996). — Also termed exemplary damages; vindictive damages; punitory damages; presumptive damages; added damages; aggravated damages; speculative damages; imaginary damages; smart money; punies. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 87–94.]

"Although compensatory damages and punitive damages are typically awarded at the same time by the same decisionmaker, they serve distinct purposes. The former are intended to redress the concrete loss that the plaintiff has suffered by reason of the defendant's wrongful conduct. The latter, which have been described as 'quasi-criminal,' operate as 'private fines' intended to punish the defendant and to deter future wrongdoing. A jury's assessment of the extent of a plaintiff's injuries is essentially a factual determination, whereas its imposition of punitive damages is an expression of its moral condemnation" Cooper Indus. v. Leatherman Tool, 532 U.S. 424, 432, 121 S.Ct. 1678, 1683 (2001) (per Stephens, J.). putative damages. Damages that are alleged; claimed but unproved damages.

reliance damages. (1938) Damages awarded for losses incurred by the plaintiff in reliance on the contract. • Reliance damages restore the plaintiff to the economic condition the plaintiff enjoyed before the contract was formed. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 22.]

"Reliance damages are . . . 'real' losses in a much more tangible way than losses of expectations. The distinction is nicely illustrated by McRae v. Commonwealth Disposals Commission . . . In this case, . . . the defendants sold a shipwrecked tanker which they advertised as lying on a certain reef in the Pacific, and the plaintiffs spent a substantial sum of money equipping a salvage expedition to go in search of the ship. The ship was wholly non-existent, and the plaintiffs were held entitled to damages. Here it was clear that the plaintiffs had incurred substantial expenses — real losses — in reliance on the contract, and the Australian High Court awarded these reliance damages to the plaintiffs." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 311 (3d ed. 1981).

reliance-loss damages. A reimbursement for losses or expenses that the plaintiff suffers in reliance on the defendant's contractual promise that has been breached.

remote damages. See speculative damages (1).

rescissory damages (ri-sis-ə-ree or ri-siz-). Damages awarded to restore a plaintiff to the position occupied before the defendant's wrongful acts.

restitution damages. (1939) Damages awarded to a plaintiff when the defendant has been unjustly enriched at the plaintiff's expense.

"Suppose A pays money to B in pursuance of a contract which turns out to be void, or perhaps is subsequently frustrated: clearly A cannot sue B for breach of contract. B's promise to perform his side of the bargain is vitiated by the mistake or the frustrating event, so A's lost expectations are losses which he must just put up with. But his claim to repayment of the money is evidently much stronger: for this money is a tangible loss to A and a tangible enrichment to B. So in this sort of case the money will often be recoverable, though English lawyers think of this as a quasi-contractual claim to recover money as on a total failure of consideration, and not a contractual claim to restitution damages. There is, however, no strong reason for refusing to call this a contractual action, any more than there is a reason for calling an action for damages quasi-contractual." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 312 (3d ed. 1981).

severance damages. In a condemnation case, damages awarded to a property owner for diminution in the fair market value of land as a result of severance from the land of the property actually condemned; compensation awarded to a landowner for the loss in value of the tract that remains after a partial taking of the land. [Cases: Eminent Domain ⇨ 95, 96, 138] special damages. Damages that are alleged to have been sustained in the circumstances of a particular wrong. • To be awardable, special damages must be specifically claimed and proved. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(g). — Often shortened to specials. — Also termed particular damages. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 5.]

speculative damages. (1804) 1. Damages that are so uncertain to occur that they will not be awarded. — Also termed remote damages. 2. See punitive damages.

statutory damages. Damages provided by statute (such as a wrongful death and survival statute), as distinguished from damages provided under the common law. [Cases: Death ⇨ 80.]

stipulated damages. See liquidated damages.

substantial damages. A considerable sum awarded to compensate for a significant loss or injury. Cf. nominal damages. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 6, 10.]

"Substantial damages . . . are the result of an effort at measured compensation, and are to be contrasted with nominal damages which are in no sense compensatory, but merely symbolic." Charles T. McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Damages § 20, at 85 (1935).

tangible damages. See actual damages.

temperate damages. Rare. Reasonable damages.

temporary damages. Damages allowed for an intermittent or occasional wrong, such as a real-property injury whose cause can be removed or abated. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 39, 109.]

treble damages. (18c) Damages that, by statute, are three times the amount of actual damages that the fact-finder determines is owed. — Also termed triple damages. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 227.]

uncertain damages. Damages that are not clearly the result of a wrong. • The rule against allowing recovery of uncertain damages refers to these damages, not damages that are uncertain only in amount. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 6.]

unliquidated damages. (18c) Damages that cannot be determined by a fixed formula and must be established by a judge or jury. Cf. liquidated damages. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 1, 6, 194.]

vindictive damages. See punitive damages.

damages, mitigation of. See MITIGATION-OF-DAMAGES DOCTRINE.

damages clause. See SURFACE-DAMAGE CLAUSE.

damages for detention. See noncontract demurrage under DEMURRAGE.

dame. 1. The legal title of the wife of a knight or baronet. 2. The female equivalent of a knight. 3. A form of address to a woman of high rank. 4. A matron. 5. Slang. A woman. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 2) domina.

damna (dam-nə), n. [fr. Latin damnum "damage; loss"] Hist. 1. Damages, exclusive of costs. 2. Damages, inclusive of costs. 3. The abbreviation of damna clericorum, the Latin equivalent to damage-cleer, being a portion of damages constituting the clerk's fee. See DAMAGE-CLEER.

damna clericorum (dam-nə kler-ə-kor-əm), n. See DAMAGE-CLEER.

damnatus (dam-nay-təs), n. [fr. Latin damnare "to condemn"] 1. Roman law. A person condemned, esp. in a capital case. 2. Hist. Something prohibited by law; something that is unlawful, as in damnatus coitus ("unlawful sexual connection").

damn-fool doctrine. Insurance. The principle that an insurer may deny (esp. liability) coverage when an insured engages in behavior that is so ill-conceived that the insurer should not be compelled to bear the loss resulting from the insured's actions. — Also termed damned-fool doctrine.

"The 'damn foolish acts' concept is not a perfect predictor of judicial decisions, both because of its own imprecision and because other considerations, such as a desire to assure an innocent third party a source of indemnification, may influence a court. However, especially when . . . the insured who acted foolishly has sufficient resources to provide compensation to the injured persons, analysis of a coverage issue on the basis of a 'damn fool' doctrine is frequently a very effective approach both to predicting and to understanding outcomes." Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law: A Guide to Fundamental Principles, Legal Doctrines, and Commercial Practices § 5.4, at 541 (1988).

damnification, n. Something that causes damage <damnification in the form of a penalty>.

damnify, vb. To cause loss or damage to; to injure <the surety was damnified by the judgment obtained against it>.

damni injuria actio (dam-ni in-joor-ee-ee ak-shee-oh). [Latin "an action for wrongful damage"] See actio damni injuria under ACTIO.

damnosa aut lucrosa (dam-noh-sə awt loo-kroh-sə). [Latin] Hist. Disadvantageous or advantageous. • The heir to a succession had to determine whether it was hurtful or advantageous to him to take up the estate before actually doing so. See ANNUS DELIBERANDI.

damnosa hereditas (dam-noh-sə hə-red-i-tas), n. [Latin "an injurious inheritance"] 1. Roman & civil law. An inheritance more onerous than beneficial, esp. because it is burdened with debt. 2. English law. A bankrupt debtor's property that creditors will disclaim under the bankruptcy laws because debt on the property will exceed revenues. 3. Generally, anything that is acquired but turns out to be disadvantageous. — Also spelled damnosa haereditas.

damnous (dam-nəs), adj. Causing loss or damage.

damno vitando. 1. See CERTANS DE DAMNO VITANDO. 2. See IN DAMNO VITANDO.

damnum (dam-nəm), n. [Latin] (1828) A loss; damage suffered. See AD DAMNUM. Pl. damna.

damnum emergens (dam-nəm i-mər-jenz). [Latin "damage arising"] Hist. An actual realized loss (such as a decline in the value of property) as opposed to an expected future loss (such as loss of profit); consequential loss.

"These kinds of damage are distinguished by the commentators as damnum emergens and lucrum cessans, which may be rendered 'positive damage' and 'loss of profit.' The first may be immediate (e.g., my slave is killed or has lost an eye), or consequential (I have lost his services — I have incurred medical expenses — he was one of a troupe of singers and the whole troupe is less valuable in consequence of his death or injury). Where there is no pecuniary loss there is no action. An action does not lie . . . for striking a slave if his value to me has not been depreciated by the blow nor for trespass to land unattended by damage." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 394 (4th ed. 1956).

damnum et interesse (dam-nəm et in-tər-es-ee). [Latin] Scots law. The loss and damage sustained.

"Damnum et interesse. — The loss and interest; or, as the words may also be translated, damage, and its issues or consequences. The words are used by Erskine in treating of the liability of cautioners who become bound to see a specific act performed. Failing performance, the cautioners are liable to the creditors for the damnum et interesse — that is, the actual and consequential damage suffered through non-performance on the part of the debtor." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 134 (4th ed. 1894).

damnum facientes (dam-nəm fay-shee-en-teez), n. See DAMAGE FEASANT.

damnum fatale (dam-nəm fə-tay-lee). [Latin "unavoidable damage"] Roman law. Damage caused by an unavoidable circumstance, such as a storm or a shipwreck, for which bailees or others will not be held liable. • But an exception was made for damages resulting from theft.

"The liability of innkeepers, carriers, and stable keepers, at Roman law, was provided for in the praetor's edict. They were under an obligation to restore all goods which the guests or passengers had with them, or left in their charge, and they could not defend themselves by showing the utmost degree of diligence. Unavoidable accident, which no human prudence would avert or provide against, damnum fatale, or overwhelming force, vis maior, were, however, an adequate defense . . . It was particularly noted that theft by a third person would not be permitted as a defense and the reason assigned was the fact that travelers have scarcely any chance to protect themselves against collusion between the innkeeper and the thief." Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 254 (1927).

damnum infectum (dam-nəm in-fek-təm). [Latin "damage not done"] Roman law. Loss not yet suffered but threatened or apprehended, as when a neighbor's building is likely to collapse onto one's property.

damnum injuria datum (dam-nəm in-joor-ee-ə day-təm). [Latin "damage causing injury"] Roman law. Willful or negligent damage to corporeal property; damage for which compensation was given under the Aquilian law. • In this phrase, the word damnum refers to economic loss, not the physical damage (if any). See actio legis Aquiliae under ACTIO.

damnum sine injuria (dam-nəm si-nee in-joor-ee-ə or sin-ay). [Latin "damage without wrongful act"] Loss or harm that is incurred from something other than a wrongful act and occasions no legal remedy. • An example is a loss from fair trade competition. — Also termed damnum absque injuria; absque injuria damnum; absque injuria. Cf. INJURIA ABSQUE DAMNO. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 3.]

"There are cases in which the law will suffer a man knowingly and wilfully to inflict harm upon another, and will not hold him accountable for it. Harm of this description — mischief that is not wrongful because it does not fulfil even the material conditions of responsibility — is called damnum sine injuria, the term injuria being here used in its true sense of an act contrary to law (in jus), not in its modern and corrupt sense of harm." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 372–73 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"There are many forms of harm of which the law takes no account. Damage so done and suffered is called damnum sine injuria, and the reasons for its permission by the law are various and not capable of exhaustive statement. For example, the harm done may be caused by some person who is merely exercising his own rights; as in the case of the loss inflicted on individual traders by competition in trade, or where the damage is done by a man acting under necessity to prevent a greater evil." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 13 (17th ed. 1977).

Dan (dan), n. [fr. Latin dominus] Archaic. In England, an honorable title for a man; the English equivalent to the Spanish Don. • The term was replaced by the terms Master, Mister, and Sir.

D&O liability insurance. See directors' and officers' liability insurance under INSURANCE.

danelaw (dayn-law). Hist. 1. A system of rules, introduced by the Danes during their invasions of England primarily in the ninth century and maintained principally in the midland and eastern counties where the invasions occurred. • Danelaw was the prevailing law in these regions from the reign of King Edgar to Edward the Confessor, who compiled a uniform law that included some Danelaw components. 2. The counties in England where the Danish law was enforced primarily in the ninth and tenth centuries — Also termed danelage; lex Danorum; denelage.

"The Danish invasions of the ninth century subjected the eastern parts of the island to new Scandinavian influences. Where the Danes conquered, their 'Danelaw' prevailed. The very word 'law' is believed to have been given to the English language by the Danes." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 3 (3d ed. 1990).

danger. (13c) 1. Peril; exposure to harm, loss, pain, or other negative result. 2. A cause of peril; a menace.

apparent danger. (16c) 1. Obvious danger; real danger. — Also termed patent danger. 2. Criminal law. The perceived danger in one person's actions toward another, as a result of which it seems necessary for the threatened person to use force in self-defense. See SELF-DEFENSE. [Cases: Assault and Battery ⇨ 67; Homicide ⇨ 787.]

deterrent danger. (1959) An obvious danger that an occupier of land creates to discourage trespassers, such as a barbed-wire fence or spikes on the top of a wall.

imminent danger. (16c) 1. An immediate, real threat to one's safety that justifies the use of force in self-defense. 2. Criminal law. The danger resulting from an immediate threatened injury sufficient to cause a reasonable and prudent person to defend himself or herself. [Cases: Assault and Battery ⇨ 67; Homicide ⇨ 789.]

patent danger. See apparent danger (1).

retributive danger. A concealed danger that an occupier of land creates to injure trespassers. • A retributive danger is lawful only to the extent that it could be justified if the occupier had inflicted the injury personally or directly to the trespasser. Thus, a spring gun or a land mine is an unlawful means of defending land against a trespasser.

seeming danger. Danger that a reasonable person would perceive to be real, even if it is not.

unavoidable danger. (16c) 1. Inescapable danger. 2. A danger that is unpreventable, esp. by a person operating a vessel.

danger-creation doctrine. (2000) The theory that if a state's affirmative conduct places a person in jeopardy, then the state may be liable for the harm inflicted on that person by a third party. • This is an exception to the general principle that the state is not liable for an injury that a third party inflicts on a member of the public. — Also termed danger-creation exception. Cf. SPECIAL-RELATIONSHIP DOCTRINE. [Cases: States ↷ 112.2(1).]

dangeria, n. Hist. Payment by forest tenants to the lord so that they can plow and sow in the same season as pannage. See PANNAGE.

danger-invites-rescue doctrine. See RESCUE DOCTRINE.

danger of navigation. See PERIL OF THE SEA.

danger of river. See PERIL OF THE SEA.

danger of the sea. See PERIL OF THE SEA.

dangerous, adj. (15c) 1. (Of a condition, situation, etc.) perilous; hazardous; unsafe . 2. (Of a person, an object, etc.) likely to cause serious bodily harm  .

imminently dangerous. (1834) (Of a person, behavior, activity, or thing) reasonably certain to place life and limb in peril. • This term is relevant in several legal contexts. For example, if a mental condition renders a person imminently dangerous to self or others, he or she may be committed to a mental hospital. And the imminently dangerous behavior of pointing a gun at someone's head could subject the actor to criminal and tort liability. Further, the manufacturer of an imminently dangerous product may be held to a strict-liability standard in tort. [Cases: Mental Health ↷ 36; Products Liability ↷ 8, 21.]

inherently dangerous. (1887) (Of an activity or thing) requiring special precautions at all times to avoid injury; dangerous per se. See DANGEROUS INSTRUMENTALITY; INHERENTLY DANGEROUS ACTIVITY.

dangerous animal. See ANIMAL.

dangerous condition. See CONDITION (5).

dangerous conduct. See unreasonably dangerous conduct under CONDUCT.

dangerous criminal. See CRIMINAL.

dangerous drug. See DRUG.

dangerous exposure. See EXPOSURE.

dangerous instrumentality. (1857) An instrument, substance, or condition so inherently dangerous that it may cause serious bodily injury or death without human use or interference. • It may serve as the basis for strict liability. See ATTRACTIVE-NUISANCE DOCTRINE. Cf. deadly weapon under WEAPON. [Cases: Negligence ↷ 305–307, 1172–1178.]

dangerous lunatic. See LUNATIC.

dangerous occupation. See OCCUPATION.

dangerous-propensity test. See DANGEROUS-TENDENCY TEST.

dangerous-proximity test. (1973) Criminal law. A common-law test for the crime of attempt, focusing on whether the defendant is dangerously close to completing the offense. • Factors include the gravity of the potential crime, the apprehension of the victim, and the uncertainty of the crime's occurrence. See ATTEMPT (2). [Cases: Criminal Law ↷ 44.]

dangerous situation. (1898) Under the last-clear-chance doctrine, the circumstance in which a plaintiff operating a motor vehicle has reached a position (as on the path of an oncoming train) that cannot be escaped by the exercise of ordinary care. — Also termed situation of danger. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Automobiles ↷ 227.]

dangerous-tendency test. (1938) A propensity of a person or animal to inflict injury. • The test is used, esp. in dog-bite cases, to determine whether an owner will be held liable for injuries caused by the owner's animal. — Also termed dangerous-propensity test. [Cases: Animals ↷ 66.2, 66.5(2).]

dangerous weapon. See WEAPON.

danger-utility test. See RISK-UTILITY TEST.

danism (dan-iz-əm), n. [fr. Greek daneismos "a loan"] Hist. The lending of money on usury.

Darden hearing. (1979) Criminal procedure. An ex parte proceeding to determine whether disclosure of an informant's identity is pertinent to establishing probable cause when there is otherwise insufficient evidence to establish probable cause apart from the arresting officer's testimony about an informant's communications. • The defense attorney may be excluded from the hearing but can usu. submit questions to be used by the judge in the examination. People v. Darden, 313 N.E.2d 49 (N.Y. 1974). [Cases: Criminal Law ↷ 627.10.] dare (dair-ee), vb. [Latin "to give"] Roman law. 1. To give; to transfer (something, esp. property). • The transfer can be made to discharge a debt, to create an obligation, or to make a gift. 2. To appoint a representative.

dare ad remanentiam (dair-ee ad rem-ə-nen-shee-əm), vb. [Latin "to give in fee or forever"] To transfer (esp. a remainder) in fee or forever.

DARPA. abbr. DEFENSE ADVANCED RESEARCH PROJECTS AGENCY.

darraign (də-rayn), vb. [fr. Latin derationare; fr. French disrener] Hist. 1. To displace; to disarrange. 2. To respond to an accusation; to settle a dispute. — Also spelled deraign; dereyne.

darrein (dar-ayn), adj. [fr. French dernier "the last"] The last, as in darrein presentment ("the last presentment"). See DARREIN CONTINUANCE; assize of darrein presentment under ASSIZE (8).

darrein continuance (dar-ayn kən-tin-yoo-ənts), n. [fr. French dernier continuance "the last continuance"] Hist. Every plea of a new matter after the last entry of a plea on the record. • Every entry of a pleading after the first pleading on the record was called a continuance. — Also spelled dareyne continuance.

darrein presentment (dar-ayn pri-zent-mənt), n. See ASSIZE OF DARREIN PRESENTMENT.

darrein seisin (dar-ayn see-zin), n. [French “last seisin”] Hist. A tenant’s plea in a writ of right. See SEISIN.

database. A compilation of information arranged in a systematic way and offering a means of finding specific elements it contains, often today by electronic means.

• Unless the information itself is original, a database is not protected by U.S. copyright law. Elsewhere, it may be protected as a distinct class of “literary works,” or it may be the subject of sui generis intellectual-property laws. See SWEAT-OF-THE-BROW DOCTRINE. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨12(3).]

Database Directive. See DIRECTIVE ON THE LEGAL PROTECTION OF DATABASES.

data protection. Any method of securing information, esp. information stored on a computer, from being either physically lost or seen by an unauthorized person.

date. 1. The day when an event happened or will happen <date of trial>. 2. A period of time in general <at a later date>. 3. An appointment at a specified time <no dates are available>.

answer date. See answer day under DAY.

appearance date. See answer day under DAY.

cutoff date. A deadline; esp., in the sale of a note or other interest-paying asset, the last date on which the seller is entitled to any interest due on the note or asset.

date of bankruptcy. (1809) Bankruptcy. The date when a court declares a person to be bankrupt; the date of bankruptcy adjudication. • This date may coincide with the voluntary-filing date. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨2202.]

date of cleavage. Bankruptcy. The filing date of a voluntary-bankruptcy petition. • With a few exceptions, only the debts existing at this time are dischargeable.

date of injury. (1831) Torts. The inception date of an injury; the date of an accident causing an injury.

date of invention. Patents. For purposes of a patent application, the date when the creation was reduced to practice. • If the invention has not been built, the date of invention is the date when the patent application is filed, since that is a constructive reduction to practice. [Cases: Patents ⇨90(5).]

date of issue. 1. Commercial law. An arbitrary date (for notes, bonds, and other documents in a series) fixed as the beginning of the term for which they run; the date that a stock or bond bears on its face, not the date on which it is actually signed, delivered, or put into circulation. • When a bond is delivered to a purchaser, it is considered “issued.” But this concept is distinguishable from the “date of issue,” which remains fixed, regardless of the date of sale or delivery. 2. Insurance. The date specified in the policy as the “date of issue,” not the date on which the policy

date of maturity. Commercial law. The date when a debt falls due, such as a debt on a promissory note or bond. — Also termed maturity date. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨129.]

date of record. See record date (1).

declaration date. Corporations. The date when corporate directors declare a dividend. Cf. DIVIDEND DATE; EX-DIVIDEND DATE. [Cases: Corporations ⇨155(4).]

dividend date. See DIVIDEND DATE.

effective filing date. Patents. The date that a patent application is considered to have been filed. • The actual filing date may be later, as for a continuing application. But under the doctrine of continuity, the child application is usu. entitled to the filing date of the parent application to prove priority. — Also termed parent filing date. See DOCTRINE OF CONTINUITY. [Cases: Patents ⇨110.]

filing date. 1. Generally, the date when any document is delivered to the appropriate authority. 2. Patents. The date when a patent application is filed. • The filing date closes the door on prior art; starts the clock on the period of eligibility to file in other countries; sets the priority date for public use, disclosure, or sale; and (absent other evidence) establishes the date of constructive reduction to practice. [Cases: Patents ⇨90(5).] 3. Trademarks. The date when a trademark application is filed. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨1367.]

parent filing date. See effective filing date.

payable date. Corporations. The official date on which shareholder dividends or distributions become payable. — Also termed record date.

payment date. Corporations. The date on which stock dividends or interest checks are paid to shareholders.

priority date. Patents. The date that will determine which applicant will get a patent in an interference proceeding. • The priority date is also the cut-off date for prior art. In the United States the priority date is the date of invention; in the rest of the world it is the date the patent application was filed. Cf. FIRST-TO-FILE, FIRST-TO-INVENT. [Cases: Patents ⇨90(1).]

record date. Corporations. 1. The date on which a stockholder must own shares to be entitled to vote or receive a dividend. — Also termed date of record. See EX-DIVIDEND DATE. 2. See payable date. [Cases: Corporations ⇨155(2), 155(4), 194, 197.]

settlement date. Securities. 1. The date on which an investor must pay the broker for securities purchased. 2. The date on which a seller must deliver negotiable certificates for securities sold. 3. The date on which a real-estate purchaser pays for and takes title to the

submission date. 1. The date that a case is to be submitted to a court for determination. 2. The date on which an investor must pay the broker for securities purchased. 3. The date on which a seller must deliver negotiable certificates for securities sold.

Daubert hearing (dah-bərt or doh-behr). A hearing conducted by federal district courts, usu. before trial, to determine whether proposed expert testimony meets the federal requirements for relevance and reliability, as clarified by the Supreme Court in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786 (1993). [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨472, 481, 486; Evidence ⇨508, 546, 555.]

Daubert test. (1993) Evidence. A method that federal district courts use to determine whether expert testimony is admissible under Federal Rule of Evidence 702, which generally requires that expert testimony consist of scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge that will assist the fact-finder in understanding the evidence or determining a fact in issue. • In its role as “gatekeeper” of the evidence, the trial court must decide whether the proposed expert testimony meets the requirements of relevance and reliability. The court applies the test outside the jury’s presence, usu. during a pretrial Daubert hearing. At the hearing, the proponent must show that the expert’s underlying reasoning or methodology, and its application to the facts, are scientifically valid. In ruling on admissibility, the court considers a flexible list of factors, including (1) whether the theory can be or has been tested, (2) whether the theory has been subjected to peer review or publication, (3) the theory’s known or potential rate of error and whether there are standards that control its operation, and (4) the degree to which the relevant scientific community has accepted the theory. Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786 (1993). Similar scrutiny must be applied to nonscientific expert testimony. Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 119 S.Ct. 1167 (1999). Variations of the Daubert test are applied in the trial courts of most states. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨472, 481, 486; Evidence ⇨508, 546, 555.]

days in bank. Particular days set aside by the Court of Common Pleas for specific matters, including the appearance of parties and service of process. — Also termed dies in banco.

"There are in each of these terms stated days called days in bank, dies in banco; that is, days of appearance in the court of common pleas. They are generally at the distance of about a week from each other, and regulated by some festival of the church. On some one of these days in bank all original writs must be made returnable . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 277 (1768).

daysman (dayz-mən). Hist. 1. An arbitrator; an elected judge; an umpire. 2. A day laborer. — Also spelled deiesman.

days of grace. 1. GRACE PERIOD (1). 2. Int'l law. A timed exemption from prize law that is granted to enemy merchant ships when they are caught unawares by the outbreak of war.

daytime. 1. See DAY (2). 2. See DAY (3). 3. See DAY (4).

day trading. See TRADING.

daywork. 1. Short-term employment that is intended to last only for a day, or for a few days. 2. Hist. In England, a measure of land being the amount of arable land that can be plowed in a day. — Also termed daywere.

daywork drilling contract. Oil & gas. A contract under which the lease operator hires a drilling rig and oilfield workers, pays an amount based on the time spent in drilling operations, and retains the right to direct drilling operations. • This type of contract gives the lease operator broad control over the drilling contractor, so courts in turn impose broad liability on the lease operator for any damages that result from the drilling. Cf. FOOTAGE DRILLING CONTRACT; TURNKEY DRILLING CONTRACT.

day writ. English law. A Queen's Bench writ allowing a prisoner to leave prison to conduct business (such as attending trial at the Court of Assizes), as long as the prisoner returns by 9:00 p.m. — Also termed day rule.

D.B. abbr. DOMESDAY BOOK.

d/b/a. abbr. Doing business as. • The abbreviation usu. precedes a person's or business's assumed name <Paul Smith d/b/a Paul's Dry Cleaners>. It signals that the business may be licensed or incorporated under a different name. Cf. TRADENAME.

de (də or duu). [French] Of; about. • This is a French preposition often used to show the genitive case, as in breve de droit ("writ of right").

de (dee or day). [Latin] Of; about; concerning; respecting; by; from; out of; affecting. • This preposition is used in the titles of English statutes, of original and judicial writs, and of court proceedings.

deacon. Eccles. law. 1. In certain churches, a member of the clerical order who assists the priest in various duties, including the presentation of the sacrament. • It is the third order below bishops and priests. A deacon is not allowed to consecrate the Holy Communion or pronounce absolution but can perform most of the other priestly duties. 2. An elected or appointed officer of a church who assists a minister or priest in various duties.

dead-and-buried company. See COMPANY.

dead asset. See ASSET.

deadbeat. (1863) Slang. A person who does not pay debts or financial obligations (such as child-support payments, fines, and legal judgments), usu. with the suggestion that the person is also adept or experienced at evading creditors.

deadbeat dad. (1983) Slang. A father who has not paid or who is behind in making child-support payments. [Cases: Child Support ⇨ 650, 653.]

deadbeat mom. (1987) Slang. 1. A mother who has not paid or who is behind in making child-support payments. • This term is used far less frequently than either deadbeat dad or deadbeat parent, probably because nearly ten times as many men as women fail to support (or are ordered to support) their children financially after divorce. 2. An able-bodied mother whose income is derived from welfare payments, not from gainful employment. [Cases: Child Support ⇨ 650, 653.]

Deadbeat Parents Punishment Act. A 1998 federal statute that makes it a felony, punishable by up to two

dead corporation. See dissolved corporation under CORPORATION.

dead freight. See FREIGHT.

dead letter. 1. A law or practice that, although not formally abolished, is no longer used, observed, or enforced. 2. A piece of mail that can be neither delivered nor returned because it lacks correct addresses for both the intended recipient and the sender. [Cases: Postal Service ⇨24.]

deadly weapon per se. See WEAPON.

dead man's part. Archaic. 1. Archaic. By custom in certain places, the portion of a dead man's estate set aside for mass services; later, that portion set aside as payment for the administrator. • That portion ranged from one-third (if the deceased had a wife and children) to the entire estate (if the deceased had no wife or children).

"If the deceased leaves a widow and children, his substance . . . is divided into three parts, one of which belongs to the widow, another to the children, and the third to the administrator: if only a widow, or only children, they shall respectively, in either case, take one moiety, and the administrator the other: if neither widow nor child, the administrator shall have the whole. And this portion, or dead man's part, the administrator was wont to apply to his own use, till the statute 1 Jac. II. c. 17 declared that the same should be subject to the statute of distributions." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 518 (1766).

"If a testator leaves neither wife nor child, he can give away the whole of his movable goods. If the testator leaves wife but no child, or child but no wife, his goods must, after his debts have been paid, be divided into two halves; one of these can be disposed of by his will, it is 'the dead's part,' the other belongs to the widow, or (as the case may be) to the child or children." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 349 (2d ed. 1899).

2. Scots law. The part of the movable estate that may be disposed of by will in any way the testator wishes; specif., the part of a dead man's personal estate not legally reserved for his spouse or children and capable of being bequeathed by will or falling upon intestacy to his next-of-kin. — Also termed dead's part.

dead man's statute. (1879) A law prohibiting the admission of a decedent's statement as evidence in certain circumstances, as when an opposing party or witness seeks to use the statement to support a claim against the decedent's estate. — Also termed dead person's statute. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨125.]

dead marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

de admensuratione dotis (dee ad-men-s[y]uu-ray-sheeh-oh-nee doh-tis), n. [Law Latin "of the admeasurement of dower"] See admeasurement of dower under ADMEASUREMENT.

de alode parentum (dee al-ə-dee pə-ren-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. From freehold of one’s parents.

“De alode parentum. — Lands descending by inheritance from parents were said to be so acquired, in contradistinction to lands held in feu . . . and to those acquired by a singular title. Subsequently the phrase acquired a more comprehensive signification, as all lands were, in process of time, termed allodial, in which the holder had a right of absolute property, without rendering any service therefor, or recognising any superior therein, and of which he had an unlimited power of disposal.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 137 (4th ed. 1894).

de alto et basso (dee al-toh et bas-oh), n. [Law Latin “of high and low”] Hist. The total submission of all differences — great or small — to arbitration.

de ambitu (dee am-bi-tyoo). [Latin “of going around”] Of devious methods of securing a position, as through bribery. • Several Roman laws (such as the Lex Julia de Ambitu) dealt with these methods, such as prohibiting electoral bribery.

de ampliori gratia (dee am-plt-or-i gray-shee-ə). [Latin] Of more abundant or more full grace.

dean. 1. Eccles. law. An officer who leads a chapter, parish, or other subdivision of a diocese, usu. upon a bishop’s request or appointment.

“A dean and chapter are the council of the bishop, to assist him with their advice in affairs of religion, and also in the temporal concerns of his see . . . All ancient deans are elected by the chapter, by conge d’eslire from the king, and letters missive of recommendation; in the same manner as bishops: but in those chapters, that were founded by Henry VIII out of the spoils of the dissolved monasteries, the deanery is donative . . . The chapter, consisting of canons or prebendaries, are sometimes appointed by the king, sometimes by the bishop, and sometimes elected by each other.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 370–71 (1765).

2. In a school, college, or university, the administrative or academic head. • In larger schools, there may be several kinds of deans, such as a dean of admissions and a dean of student affairs. Within a university, there may be deans of specific schools. [Cases: Colleges and Universities ⇨ 7.] 3. The head or commander of a group of ten, such as ten soldiers or ten monks.

de anno bissextili (dee an-oh bis-sek-sti-li), n. [Law Latin “of the bissextile year”] Hist. A law of Henry III advising the justices of the bench that in a case requiring something to be done within a year, the leap-year day and the day before should be counted as one day.

de annua pensione (dee an-yoo-ə pen-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin “of annual pension”] Hist. A royal writ demanding payment from an abbey or prior, of a yearly pension for the king’s chaplain named in the writ.

de annuo reditu (dee an-yoo-oh red-i-tyoo), n. [Law Latin “for a yearly rent”] Hist. A writ to recover an annuity payable in goods or money.

Dean of Guild. Scot’s law. In certain burghs, the head of the Guild or Merchant Company, with jurisdiction in maritime and mercantile disputes.

Dean of Guild Court. Scots law. The court presided over by the Dean of Guild. • In modern times the court dealt with municipal affairs, esp. building regulations. All such courts were abolished in 1975.

de assisa proroganda (dee ə-sɪ-zə proh-rə-gan-də), n. [Law Latin “of the proroguing of an assize”] Hist. A writ ordering justices to postpone an assize because a party is busy in the Crown’s service.

death. (bef. 12c) The ending of life; the cessation of all vital functions and signs. — Also termed decease; demise.

accidental death. A death that results from an unusual event, one that was not voluntary, intended, expected, or foreseeable. — Also termed death by misadventure.

brain death. (1964) The bodily condition of showing no response to external stimuli, no spontaneous movements, no breathing, no reflexes, and a flat reading (usu. for a full day) on a machine that measures the brain’s electrical activity. • In 1971, Kansas became the first state to enact a statutory definition of the term. Before that, heart transplants raised the question of when — and whether — death had occurred. Early cases dealing with this problem include a tort case (wrongful death), Tucker v. Lower, No. 2831 (Richmond, Va., L. & Eq. Ct., May 23, 1972) (jury accepted the defendants’ definition of brain death); a criminal case (vehicular homicide), People v. Flores, No. 20190 (Sonoma Co. Mun. Ct. Dec. 19, 1973), No. N746-C (Sonoma Co. Super. Ct. July 23, 1974) (defendant acquitted because no statute defined brain death); and a criminal case (murder), People v. Lyons, 15 Crim. L. Rep. 2240, No. 56072 (Alameda Co. Super. Ct. May 21, 1974) (court accepted prosecutor’s definition of brain death and convicted defendant). [Cases: Death ⇨1.] — Also termed legal death.

civil death. 1. Archaic. At common law, the loss of rights — such as the rights to vote, make contracts, inherit, and sue — by a person who has been outlawed or convicted of a serious crime, or who is considered to have left the temporal world for the spiritual by entering a monastery. Cf. DE CATALIS FELONUM. [Cases: Convicts ⇨1.]

“In one large department of law the fiction [civil death] is elegantly maintained. A monk or nun can not acquire or have any proprietary rights. When a man becomes ‘professed in religion,’ his heir at once inherits from him any land that he has, and, if he has made a will, it takes effect at once as though he were naturally dead.” 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, History of English Law 434 (2d ed. 1898).

“Civil death arises from outlawry; it seems doubtful whether there are any other circumstances to which the phrase is now applicable.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 193 n.(b) (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

2. In some states, the loss of rights — such as the rights to vote and hold public office — by a person serving a life sentence. Cf. civil disability under DISABILITY (3). [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ⇨31.] 3. The state of a corporation that has formally dissolved or become bankrupt, leaving an estate to be administered for the benefit of shareholders and creditors. — Also termed (in senses 2 & 3) legal death. [Cases: Corporations ⇨617(1).]

compensable death. Workers’ compensation. A death that, because it occurred in the course of employment, entitles the employee’s heirs to compensation. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation ⇨408–510.]

immediate death. (16c) 1. See instantaneous death. 2. A death occurring within a short time after an injury or seizure, but not instantaneously.

“A distinction has been made between ‘instantaneous’ and ‘immediate’ death As an example of ‘immediate’ rather than ‘instantaneous’ death . . . the situation in which a blow on the head produces unconsciousness and renders the victim incapable of intelligent thought, speech, or action for several minutes until he dies.” 22A Am. Jur. 2d Death § 43, at 159 (1988).

instantaneous death. (18c) Death occurring in an instant or within an extremely short time after an injury or seizure. • It is a factor in determining an award of damages for the victim’s pain and suffering. — Sometimes also termed immediate death.

legal death. 1. See brain death. 2. See civil death (2). 3. See civil death (3).

natural death. (15c) 1. Bodily death, as opposed to civil death. 2. Death from causes other than accident or violence; death from natural causes. — Also termed mors naturalis. See NATURAL-DEATH ACT. Cf. violent death.

presumptive death. (1856) Death inferred from proof of the person's long, unexplained absence, usu. after seven years. See ENOCH ARDEN LAW. [Cases: Death ⇨1, 2.]

simultaneous death. (1878) The death of two or more persons in the same mishap, under circumstances that make it impossible to determine who died first. See UNIFORM SIMULTANEOUS DEATH ACT; COMMON DISASTER; COMMORIENTES.

violent death. (16c) Death accelerated by human intervention and resulting from a sharp blow, explosion, gunfire, or the like. Cf. natural death.

death, contemplation of. See CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH.

death action. See WRONGFUL-DEATH ACTION.

deathbed declaration. See dying declaration under DECLARATION (6).

deathbed deed. See DEED.

death benefit. See BENEFIT.

death-benefit-only plan. See survivor's income benefit plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

death by misadventure. 1. See ACCIDENTAL KILLING. 2. See accidental death under DEATH. 3. Archaic. A defense to a murder charge on the ground that the defendant lacked the requisite mental state for murder. • The defense was abolished as redundant because the prosecution had to prove state of mind anyway as an essential element of murder.

death case. (1907) 1. A criminal case in which the death penalty may be or has been imposed. 2. WRONGFUL-DEATH ACTION.

death certificate. (1888) An official document issued by a public registry verifying that a person has died, with information such as the date and time of death, the cause of death, and the signature of the attending or examining physician. [Cases: Health ⇨398.]

death-damage statute. Archaic. See WRONGFUL-DEATH STATUTE.

death duty. 1. See DUTY (4). 2. See estate tax under TAX.

death-knell doctrine. (1972) A rule allowing an interlocutory appeal if precluding an appeal until final judgment would moot the issue on appeal and irreparably injure the appellant's rights. • Once recognized as an exception to the final-judgment rule, the doctrine was limited by the U.S. Supreme Court in Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 98 S.Ct. 2454 (1978). There, the Court held that the death-knell doctrine does not permit an immediate appeal of an order denying class certification. But the doctrine still applies in some contexts. For example, the doctrine allows an immediate appeal of the denial of a temporary restraining order when the lack of an appeal would leave nothing to be considered in the trial court. Woratzek v. Arizona Bd. of Executive Clemency, 117 F.3d 400 (9th Cir. 1997). — Also termed death-knell exception. Cf. FINAL-JUDGMENT RULE. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨68, 73(2); Federal Courts ⇨572.1.]

Death on the High Seas Act. A federal law, enacted in 1920, permitting a wrongful-death action to be filed in U.S. district court for a death occurring on the high seas. 46 USCA app. §§ 761–67. — Abbr. DOHSA. [Cases: Death ⇨7, 13.]

death penalty. (1848) 1. CAPITAL PUNISHMENT. 2. A penalty that makes a person or entity ineligible to participate in an activity that the person or entity previously participated in. • The penalty is usu. imposed because of some type of gross misconduct. 3. See death-penalty sanction under SANCTION.

death-penalty sanction. See SANCTION.

death-qualified jury. See JURY.

death row. (1950) The area of a prison where those who have been sentenced to death are confined.

death sentence. See SENTENCE.

deathsmán. An executioner; a hangman.

death-spiral deal. A convertible security for which the conversion price depends on the market price less a percentage discount on the date of conversion. — Also termed toxic convert.

death statute. (1910) A law that protects the interests of a decedent's family and other dependents, who may recover in damages what they would reasonably have received from the decedent if the death had not occurred. Cf. SURVIVAL STATUTE. [Cases: Death ⇨7, 10.]

death tax. 1. See estate tax under TAX. 2. See inheritance tax under TAX.

death trap. (1835) 1. A structure or situation involving an imminent risk of death. 2. A situation that, although seemingly safe, is actually quite dangerous.

death warrant. See WARRANT (1).

de attornato recipiendo (dee a-tor-nay-toh ri-sip-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin “of receipt of an attorney”] Hist. A writ requiring a court to receive and admit an attorney for a party.

de audiendo et terminando (dee aw-dee-end-doh et tar-mi-nan-doh), n. [Law Latin “for hearing and determining”] Hist. A writ or commission directing certain justices to hear and resolve particular cases resulting from a riot, including those involving heinous misdemeanors, breaches of the peace, and trespass. Cf. COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER.

de averiis captis in withernamium (dee ə-veer-ee-is kap-tis in with-ər-nay-mee-əm), n. [Law Latin “for taking cattle in withernam”] Hist. A writ directing a sheriff to detain a defendant's cattle because the defendant had unlawfully taken the plaintiff's cattle out of the county. • The defendant's cattle would be detained until the sheriff could replevy the plaintiff's cattle.

de averiis replegiandis (dee ə-veer-ee-is ri-plee-jee-an-dis), n. [Law Latin "of replevying beasts"] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to replevy someone's beasts or chattels that had been unlawfully taken and detained. • This is the old writ of replevin.

de banco (dee or də bang-koh). [Law Latin] Of the bench. • In England, the term applied to justices of the Court of Common Pleas.

debarment, n. The act of precluding someone from having or doing something; exclusion or hindrance. — debar, vb.

debasement. (17c) 1. The act of reducing the value, quality, or purity of something; esp., the act of lowering the value of coins by either reducing the weight of gold and silver in the coins or increasing the coins' alloy amounts. 2. Degradation. 3. The state of being degraded.

debate. Parliamentary law. Formal consideration of a motion's merits in the form of speeches for, against, or otherwise addressing the motion. See CONSIDERATION (2). — debatable, adj. — debatability, n.

controlled debate. Debate in which designated managers, usu. a partisan leader, lead each side and allot time for speeches. — Also termed controlled time.

floor debate. (1884) The legislative process of debating a proposed bill before an entire chamber rather than before a committee. [Cases: States ⇨32.]

pro-con debate. A debate that adheres to the parliamentary principle that speeches should alternate between opposing viewpoints. • Sometimes those seeking the floor on one side outnumber those on the other side, in which case the chair may allow two (or more) speeches in a row on the same side of the question.

debauch (di-bawch), vb. 1. Archaic. To draw (a person) away from duty; to lead (a person) astray. 2. To corrupt (a person) with lewdness; to seduce (someone). 3. To mar or spoil (a person or thing).

debauchery (di-bawch-ə-ree), n. Excessive indulgence in sensual pleasures; sexual immorality or excesses. — debauch, vb.

debellatio (deb-ə-lay-shee-oh). [Latin] Int'l law. A means of ending a war and acquiring territory when one of the belligerent countries has been so soundly defeated that its adversary is able to decide alone the fate of the defeated country's territory; conquest followed by annexation. — Also termed subjugation.

"[There are] three possible alternative meanings of debellatio in international law. The first is that debellatio denotes the change wrought by the conquest and total subjugation of a State together with that State's annexation by the conqueror. The second view is that debellatio corresponds to the total defeat of an enemy State, its occupation, and the elimination of a vital component of Statehood; in this view, debellatio implies the extinction of the old State, but it leaves open the legal future of the occupied territory (annexation or the founding of one or more new States). The third view is that debellatio only describes a factual situation and that even the elimination of all the State organs combined with the occupation of the territory does not exclude the continuing existence of that State. It is mainly the second and the third meanings of debellatio which have been advocated for the situation of Germany since the end of World War II." Karl-Ulrich Meyn, "Debellatio," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 166 (1992).

de bene esse (dee bee-nee es-ee also day ben-ay es-ay), adv. [Law Latin "of well-being"] (17c) As conditionally allowed for the present; in anticipation of a future need <Willis's deposition was taken de bene esse>. [Cases: Pretrial Procedure ⇨63.] — Abbr. d.b.e. — de bene esse, adj.

debenture (di-ben-chər). [fr. L. debentur "there are owed"] (15c) 1. A debt secured only by the debtor's earning power, not by a lien on any specific asset. • Originally, this was the first word of a deed detailing sums acknowledged to be owed. 2. An instrument acknowledging such a debt. 3. A bond that is backed only by the general credit and financial reputation of the corporate issuer, not by a lien on corporate assets. — Also termed debenture bond; unsecured bond; naked debenture; plain bond. Cf. BOND (3). [Cases: Corporations ⇨470.]

"The word 'debenture' in its archaic sense was applied to a form given under seal as an acknowledgment for goods supplied to the Royal Household, and as such probably meant a charge on Public Funds. The term was further applied to drawback certificates issued for repayment, on the exportation of goods, of duty which had already been paid upon them, and this term is still so used by H.M. Customs. . . . The word is now, however, generally used to indicate an acknowledgment of indebtedness given under seal by an incorporated company, containing a charge on assets of the company, and carrying an agreed rate of interest until payment, but the variety of the forms which a debenture may take makes it difficult to find a good general definition in any reported case." Thomas Froude & Eric V.E. White, The Practice Relating to Debentures 1 (1935).

convertible debenture. (1908) A debenture that the holder may change or convert into some other security, such as stock. [Cases: Corporations ⇨473.]

convertible subordinated debenture. (1961) A debenture that is subordinate to another debt but can be converted into a different security.

sinking-fund debenture. (1893) A debenture that is secured by periodic payments into a fund established to retire long-term debt.

subordinate debenture. (1929) A debenture that is subject to the prior payment of ordinary debentures and other indebtedness.

4. English law. A company's security for a monetary loan. • The security usu. creates a charge on company stock or property. 5. A customhouse certificate providing for a refund of the duties on imported goods when the importer reexports the goods rather than selling them in the country where they were imported.

debenture bond. See DEBENTURE (3).

debenture indenture. See INDENTURE.

debenture stock. 1. Stock that is issued under a contract providing for periodic, fixed payments. [Cases: Corporations ↻470.] 2. English law. A type of bond representing money borrowed by a company using its property or other fixed assets as security.

debet et detinet (dee-bet or deb-et et det-i-net or det-ə-nət). [Law Latin] Hist. He owes and detains. • This phrase was used in declarations in actions for debt when the original creditor sued the original debtor. The declaration stated that the defendant "owes to" as well as "detains from" the plaintiff the debt or thing in question; thus, the action was said to be "in the debet et detinet." But if the action was brought against someone other than the original debtor (such as an executor, for a debt due from the testator), then the action was said to be "in the detinet alone." Cf. DETINET.

debet sine breve (dee-bet or deb-et si-nee breev or bree-vee), n. [Law Latin "debt without a writ"] 1. An action for debt commenced under a bill rather than a writ. 2. A debt confessed by judgment. — Abbr. d.s.b. — Also termed debitum sine breve; debit sans breve. See CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.

de bien et de mal (də byen ay də mal). [Law French]. See DE BONO ET MALO (1).

de biens le mort (də beenz lə mɔr[t]). [Law French] Hist. Of the goods of the deceased.

de bigamis (dee big-ə-mis), n. [Law Latin "concerning men twice married"] Hist. The statute of 4 Edw. I. st. 3, so called from the opening words of the fifth chapter. See BIGAMUS.

debit. (15c) 1. A sum charged as due or owing. 2. In bookkeeping, an entry made on the left side of a ledger or account, noting an increase in assets or a decrease in liabilities. 3. An account balance showing that something remains due to the holder of the account. Cf. CREDIT (6).

debita fundi (deb-i-təm fən-dī). [Law Latin] Scots law. Debts attaching to the soil; debts affecting the land.

debita laicorum (deb-i-tə lay-ə-kor-əm), n. [Law Latin "debts of laity"] Hist. The debts recoverable in civil courts.

debit card. A card used to pay for purchases by electronic transfer from the purchaser's bank account. Cf. CREDIT CARD.

debiti et crediti contributio (deb-i-ti et kred-i-ti kon-tri-byoo-shee-oh). [Law Latin] Civil law. A balancing of debit and credit. • The phrase appeared in reference to setoff.

debitor (deb-i-tor), n. Roman law. Someone who has a legal obligation to someone else. Cf. CREDITOR (1). Pl. debitores.

debitorem locupletem esse (deb-i-tor-əm lok-yoo-plee-təm es-ee). [Latin] Hist. That the debtor is solvent. • In assigning a debt, a creditor might sometimes warrant that the debtor had the money to pay it.

debitor non praesumitur donare (deb-i-tor non pri-zyoo-mi-tur doh-nair-ee), n. [Law Latin "a debtor is not presumed to make a gift"] Hist. The presumption that any payment from a debtor is intended to satisfy the debt, unless the disposition clearly shows the debtor's intent to make a donation.

debito tempore (deb-i-toh tem-pə-ree). [Latin] Hist. In due time.

debitrix (deb-ə-triks), n. [Latin] Archaic. Civil law. A female debtor.

debit sans breve. See DEBET SINE BREVE.

debitum (deb-i-təm), n. [Latin "a debt"] Roman law. Money or other thing that is actually owed, where there is both a duty and liability to repay; an actionable debt. Cf. INDEBITUM.

debitum fructuum (deb-i-təm frək-choo-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. A debt upon the fruits; that is, a debt from the fruit of the land, not from the land itself. • Tithes, for example, were usu. payable debitum fructuum.

debitum in diem (deb-i-təm in dī-əm). [Latin "a debt to a date"] Hist. A debt payable at a future date. • The phrase appeared in reference to a debt that is due but for which the time for payment had not yet arrived. See UBI DIES CESSIT, LICET NONDUM VENERIT.

debitum in praesenti solvendum in futuro (deb-i-təm in pri-zen-ti sol-ven-dəm in fyoo-t[y]oor-oh). [Latin] A present debt (or obligation) to be paid at a future time; a debt or obligation complete when contracted, but of which the performance cannot be required until some future period.

debitum reale (deb-i-təm ree-ay-lee). [Law Latin] Hist. A real debt; a debt on land, as distinguished from a personal obligation.

debitum sine breve. See DEBET SINE BREVE.

debitum subesse (deb-i-təm səb-es-ee). [Latin] Hist. That the debt is due.

de bonis asportatis (dee boh-nis as-pər-tay-tis). See trespass de bonis asportatis under TRESPASS.

de bonis non (dee boh-nis non). See administration de bonis non under ADMINISTRATION.

de bonis non administratis (dee boh-nis non ad-min-ə-stray-tis). [Law Latin] Hist. Of the goods not administered. • When the first administrator of an intestate estate dies or is removed, the second administrator is called an administrator bonis non, who administers the goods not administered by the previous executor.

de bonis non amovendis (dee boh-nis non ay-moh-ven-dis), n. [Latin “of goods not to be moved”] Hist. A writ directing the sheriffs of London to make sure that a defendant’s goods are not removed while the defendant’s writ of error on a judgment is pending.

de bonis propriis (dee boh-nis proh-ree-is), n. [Law Latin “of his own goods”] Hist. A judgment allowing execution on an administrator’s individual property rather than the property of an estate, as when the administrator mismanages the estate. Cf. DE BONIS TESTATORIS.

de bonis testatoris (dee boh-nis tes-tə-tor-is), n. [Law Latin “of the goods of the testator”] Hist. A judgment awarding execution on a testator’s property, rather than the individual property of an administrator. Cf. DE BONIS PROPRIIS.

de bonis testatoris ac si (dee boh-nis tes-tə-tor-is ak si). [Law Latin “from the goods of the testator if he has any, and if not, from those of the executor”]. Hist. A judgment holding an executor responsible if the testator’s estate is insufficient or if the executor falsifies a pleading as a release.

de bonne memoire (də bawn mem-wahr). [Law French] Of sound mind; of good memory. — Also spelled de bone memorie. See MIND AND MEMORY; COMPOSITIONIS.

de bono et malo (dee boh-noh et mal-oh), n. [Law Latin “for good and evil”] Hist. 1. For good and evil. • A criminal defendant indicated full submission to the jury’s verdict by placing himself or herself at the jury’s mercy de bono et malo. — Also termed de bien et de mal. 2. A special writ of jail delivery issued by the justices of assize to enable them to try all criminal defendants who were in jail where the court traveled. • Formerly, the judges were required to issue a separate writ for every prisoner. This was replaced by a general commission of jail delivery.

[T]hey have . . . a commission of general gaol delivery, which empowers them to try and deliver every prisoner, who shall be in the gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whenever indicted, or for whatever crime committed. It was anciently the course to issue special writs of gaol delivery for each particular prisoner, which were called the writs de bono et malo: but, these being found inconvenient and oppressive, a general commission for all the prisoners has long been established in their stead. So that, one way or other, the gaols are cleared, and all offenders tried, punished, or delivered, twice in every year: a constitution of singular use and excellence.” 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 267 (1769).

debt. (13c) 1. Liability on a claim; a specific sum of money due by agreement or otherwise <the debt amounted to $2,500>. 2. The aggregate of all existing claims against a person, entity, or state <the bank denied the loan application after analyzing the applicant’s outstanding debt>. 3. A nonmonetary thing that one person owes another, such as goods or services <her debt was to supply him with 20 international first-class tickets on the airline of his choice>. 4. A common-law writ by which a court adjudicates claims involving fixed sums of money <he brought suit in debt>. — Also termed (in sense 4) writ of debt. [Cases: Debt, Action of ⇨ 1.]

active debt. Civil law. A debt due to another person.

ancestral debt. An ancestor’s debt that an heir can be compelled to pay.

antecedent debt. 1. Contracts. An old debt that may serve as consideration for a new promise if the statute of limitations has run on the old debt. See PREEXISTING-DUTY RULE. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 67.] 2. Bankruptcy. A debtor’s prepetition obligation that existed before a debtor’s transfer of an interest in property. • For a transfer to be preferential, it must be for or on account of an antecedent debt. See PREFERENTIAL TRANSFER. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 2612.]

bad debt. A debt that is uncollectible and that may be deductible for tax purposes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3420.]

bonded debt. A debt secured by a bond; a business or government debt represented by issued bonds.

community debt. A debt that is chargeable to the community of husband and wife. See COMMUNITY PROPERTY. [Cases: Husband and Wife ⇨ 268.]

consumer debt. A debt incurred by someone primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 2021.1.]

“What are ‘consumer’ debts? Section 101(8) defines a consumer debt as follows: ‘consumer debt means debt incurred by an individual primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose.’ The touchstone is the debtor’s use of the money. The nature of the collateral, the business of the creditor and the form of the loan are all irrelevant. A loan of $25,000 from a Credit Union to pay for a child’s education is a consumer debt, but the same loan used to finance the opening of an accounting business is not a consumer debt. This is so irrespective of the nature of the collateral put up for the debt.” David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 7-45, at 579 (1993).

contingent debt. A debt that is not presently fixed but that may become fixed in the future with the occurrence of some event.

convertible debt. A debt whose security may be changed by a creditor into another form of security.

debt by simple contract. See simple-contract debt.

debt by special contract. See special-contract debt.

debt by specialty contract. See special-contract debt.

debt of record. A debt evidenced by a court record, such as a judgment.

desperate debt. 1. Uncollectable debt. 2. A debt taken on by one who is either insolvent or on the verge of insolvency.

distressed debt. A debt instrument issued by a company that is financially troubled and in danger of defaulting on the debt, or in bankruptcy, or likely to default or declare bankruptcy in the near future.

exigible debt. A liquidated and demandable debt; a matured claim.

fixed debt. Generally, a permanent form of debt commonly evidenced by a bond or debenture; long-term debt. — Also termed fixed liability.

floating debt. Short-term debt that is continuously renewed to finance the ongoing operations of a business or government.

fraudulent debt. A debt created by fraudulent practices.

funded debt. 1. A state or municipal debt to be paid out of an accumulation of money or by future taxation. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨951.] 2. Secured long-term corporate debt meant to replace short-term, floating, or unsecured debt.

general debt. A governmental body's debt that is legally payable from general revenues and is backed by the full faith and credit of the governmental body. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨894.]

hypothecary debt. A lien on an estate.

individual debt. (usu. pl.) Debt personally owed by a partner, rather than by the partnership. [Cases: Partnership ⇨144.]

installment debt. A debt that is to be repaid in a series of payments at regular times over a specified period.

judgment debt. A debt that is evidenced by a legal judgment or brought about by a successful lawsuit against the debtor.

junior debt. See subordinate debt.

legal debt. A debt recoverable in a court of law.

liquidated debt. A debt whose amount has been determined by agreement of the parties or by operation of law.

liquid debt. A debt that is due immediately and unconditionally.

long-term debt. Generally, a debt that will not come due within the next year.

mutual debts. Cross-debts of the same kind and quality between two persons. Cf. SETOFF (2).

national debt. See NATIONAL DEBT.

nondischargeable debt. (1908) A debt (such as one for delinquent taxes) that is not released through bankruptcy. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨3341–3378.]

passive debt. A debt that, by agreement between the debtor and creditor, is interest-free.

preferential debt. A debt that is legally payable before others, such as an employee's wages.

privileged debt. A debt that has priority over other debts if a debtor becomes insolvent; a secured debt.

public debt. A debt owed by a municipal, state, or national government. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨869.]

pure debt. See pure obligation under OBLIGATION.

secured debt. A debt backed by collateral.

senior debt. A debt that takes priority over other debts. • Senior debts are often secured by collateral.

short-term debt. Collectively, all debts and other liabilities that are payable within one year. — Also termed current liability.

simple-contract debt. A debt that is either oral or written but is not of record and not under seal. — Also termed debt by simple contract.

special-contract debt. A debt due, or acknowledged to be due, by an instrument under seal, such as a deed of covenant or sale, a lease reserving rent, or a bond. — Also termed debt by special contract; debt by specialty contract; specialty debt.

"Any contract in short whereby a determinate sum of money becomes due to any person, and is not paid but remains in action merely, is a contract of debt. And, taken in this light, it comprehends a great variety of acquisition; being usually divided into debts of record, debts by special, and debts by simple contract." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 464 (1766).

subordinate debt. A debt that is junior or inferior to other types or classes of debt. • Subordinate debt may be unsecured or have a low-priority claim against property secured by other debt instruments. — Also termed junior debt.

unliquidated debt. A debt that has not been reduced to a specific amount, and about which there may be a dispute.

unsecured debt. A debt not supported by collateral or other security.

debt adjustment. See DEBT POOLING.

debt capital. See CAPITAL.

debt consolidation. 1. See DEBT POOLING. 2. The replacement of multiple loans from one or more lenders with a single loan from one lender, usu. with a lower monthly payment and a longer repayment period.

debtee. Archaic. See CREDITOR (1).

debt-equity ratio. See DEBT-TO-EQUITY RATIO.

debt financing. See FINANCING.

debt instrument. (1953) A written promise to repay a debt, such as a promissory note, bill, bond, or commercial paper. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨28.]

debt limitation. A ceiling placed on borrowing by an individual, business, or government. • The constitutions of many states prohibit the states from incurring debt in excess of a stated amount. Other state constitutions allow states to incur debt above a stated amount only through a vote of the people. — Also termed limitation on indebtedness. [Cases: States ⇨ 115.]

debt of record. See DEBT.

debtor. (13c) 1. One who owes an obligation to another, esp. an obligation to pay money. 2. Bankruptcy. A person who files a voluntary petition or against whom an involuntary petition is filed. — Also termed bankrupt. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 2221.]

“Section 101 [of the Bankruptcy Code] also introduces us to the language of modern bankruptcy practice. It tells us, for instance, that the person whom a bankruptcy case concerns is a debtor. A person or a firm in bankruptcy is no longer called a bankrupt. Although that word retains some currency among lay people, among bankruptcy lawyers it sounds old-fashioned and precious.” Douglas G. Baird, Elements of Bankruptcy 6 (2001).

3. Secured transactions. A person who either (1) has a property interest — other than a security interest or other lien — in collateral, even if the person is not an obligor, or (2) is a seller of accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes. UCC § 9-102(a)(28). — Abbr. Dr. Cf. CREDITOR. [Cases: Secured Transactions ⇨ 12, 21.]

absconding debtor. (18c) A debtor who flees from creditors to avoid having to pay a debt. • Absconding from a debt was formerly considered an act of bankruptcy. See ACT OF BANKRUPTCY.

absent debtor. A debtor who lacks the intent to defraud creditors but is beyond the geographic reach of ordinary service of process.

account debtor. A person obligated on an account, chattel paper, or general intangible. • The UCC exempts from the definition of account debtor a person obligated to pay a negotiable instrument, even if the instrument constitutes chattel paper. UCC § 9-102(a)(3).

common debtor. Scots law. A debtor whose property has been arrested by more than one creditor.

concealed debtor. A debtor who hides from creditors, usu. with the intent to defraud the creditors or to avoid service of process, but does not leave the community or move out of state.

joint debtor. One of two or more debtors jointly liable for the same debt.

judgment debtor. See JUDGMENT DEBTOR.

new debtor. (18c) Secured transactions. A person who becomes bound as debtor under a security agreement previously entered into by another person. UCC §§ 9-102(a)(56), 9-203(c).

solvent debtor. A debtor who owns enough property to cover all outstanding debts and against whom a creditor can enforce a judgment.

debtor-in-possession. (1806) Bankruptcy. A Chapter 11 or 12 debtor that continues to operate its business as a fiduciary to the bankruptcy estate. • With certain exceptions, the debtor-in-possession has all the rights, powers, and duties of a Chapter 11 trustee. — Abbr. DIP. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3622, 3672.]

debtor rehabilitation. See REHABILITATION (3).

Debtor's Act of 1869. An English statute that, among other things, (1) abolished imprisonment for debt except in certain cases, as when a debtor owed a debt to the Crown or a debtor had money but refused to pay a debt, (2) abolished arrest by mesne process, that is, by compelling the defendant to appear and give bail unless it was believed that the defendant would leave the country, (3) made it a misdemeanor to obtain credit under false pretenses or to defraud creditors, and (4) defined how warrants and judgment orders would be executed.

debtor's examination. Bankruptcy. A meeting between a debtor and his or her creditors during which the creditors ask the debtor questions designed to uncover information about the location and extent of the debtor's assets and the dischargeability of debts. • The examination may be conducted under § 343 of the Bankruptcy Code or Rule 2004 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure. The bankruptcy trustee may be present and preside over the initial § 343 examination, which is held shortly after the bankruptcy filing. But the party (usu. a creditor) who requests a Rule 2004 examination presides over the meeting, which can be held at any time. See 11 USCA § 343; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3040.1–3048.] debtor's petition. See voluntary petition under PETITION.

debtor's property. See PROPERTY OF THE DEBTOR.

debt pooling. (1957) 1. Bankruptcy. An arrangement by which a person's debts are consolidated and creditors agree to accept lower monthly payments or to take less money. — Also termed debt consolidation; debt adjustment. 2. An arrangement under which a debtor agrees to pay (1) a sum of money periodically or otherwise to a third person who will then distribute the money among certain specified creditors in accordance with a plan, and (2) a fee to the third person for his or her services as distributor. • Debt-pooling in this manner is generally illegal if the arrangement is not made with a bank, attorney, judicial officer, retail-merchants' association, or nonprofit organization that provides debt-counseling services.

debt ratio. (1932) A corporation's total long-term and short-term liabilities divided by the firm's total assets. • A low debt ratio indicates conservative financing and thus usu. an enhanced ability to borrow in the future. — Also termed debt-to-total-assets ratio.

debt retirement. (1928) Repayment of debt; RETIREMENT (3).

debt security. See SECURITY.

debt service. (1930) 1. The funds needed to meet a long-term debt's annual interest expenses, principal payments, and sinking-fund contributions. 2. Payments due on a debt, including interest and principal.

debt-to-equity ratio. (1954) A corporation's long-term debt divided by its owners' equity, calculated to assess its capitalization. — Also termed debt-equity ratio; debt-to-net-worth ratio.

debt-to-total-assets ratio. See DEBT RATIO.

DeCA. abbr. DEFENSE COMMISSARY AGENCY.

de calceto reparando (dee kal-sə-toh rep-ə-ran-doh), n. [Law Latin "for repairing a causeway"] Hist. A writ directing a sheriff to distrain residents of a place to repair a road.

decalvatio (dee-kal-vay-shee-oh). Hist. The act of cutting off a person's hair to symbolize a total loss of honor. • Although some early legal historians interpreted this Germanic practice as scalping, a leading historian of the early 20th century insisted that it referred only to the cutting of hair. See Munroe Smith, The Development of European Law 99 (1928).

decanatus (dek-ə-nay-təs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A group of ten people; a decenary. See DECANUS.

decania (di-kay-nee-ə), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A dean's office; a dean's territory.

decanus (di-kay-nəs), n. [fr. Greek dekanos "a dean"] 1. Roman law. An officer commanding ten soldiers. 2. Eccles. & Civil law. A leader of ten people, as in decanus monasticus ("dean of ten monks"). 3. The dean of a cathedral.

de capitalibus dominis feodi (dee kap-ə-tay-lə-bəs dom-ə-nəs fee-ə-dī). [Law Latin] Hist. From the highest lord of the fee. • This term was primarily used in old charters to state that the tenure of an estate was to be held of the chief lord of the fee, rather than of the immediate grantor.

decapitation (dee-kap-ə-tay-shən). Hist. The act of cutting off a head; a beheading. • This was once a common method of capital punishment.

de capite minutis (dee kap-ə-tec mi-n[y]oo-tis). [Latin "of those who have lost their status"] Roman law. A title in the Digest, referring to people who lost their civil status. See CAPITIS DEMINUTIO.

decarceration. See DISIMPRISONMENT.

de cartis reddendis (dee kahr-tis ri-den-dis), n. [Law Latin "for restoring charters"] Hist. A writ ordering redelivery of a charter or deed; a writ of detinue. See DETINUE.

De Catalis Felonum. Hist. A 1326 statute providing that a felon forfeited his or her personal property and also lost all rights and means of acquiring property. • This statute is one of the earliest written laws imposing civil death. Cf. civil death (1) under DEATH.

de catalis reddendis (dee kə-tal-is ri-den-dis), n. [Law Latin "of chattels to be restored"] Hist. A writ ordering a bailee to deliver chattels kept from the owner. • This was replaced by the writ of detinue. See DETINUE.

de cautione admittenda (dee kaw-shee-oh-nee ad-mi-ten-də), n. [Law Latin "of security to be taken"] Hist. A writ commanding a bishop who had ordered an excommunicated person held for contempt, even though the prisoner had offered bail and promised to obey the church in the future, to take the offered security and order the prisoner's release.

decease, n. See DEATH.

decease, vb. To die; to depart from life.

deceased, n. See DECEDENT.

decendent (di-see-dənt), n. (16c) A dead person, esp. one who has died recently. • This term is little used outside law. It typically appears in legal proceedings or administrative inquiries. — Also termed deceased.

nonresident decendent. A decendent who was domiciled outside the jurisdiction in question (such as probate jurisdiction) at the time of death.

decem tales (des-em tay-leez), n. [Law Latin "ten such people"] Hist. A writ directing a sheriff to summon ten people for a jury panel when a sufficient number have not already appeared.

decemviri litibus judicandis (di-sem-və-rī li-ti-bās joo-də-kan-dis). [Latin "ten persons to decide lawsuits"] Roman law. A group of five senators and five knights who assisted the elected magistrate in deciding legal disputes concerning liberty. — Also spelled decemviri silitibus judicandis.

decenary. [fr. Latin decena "a tithing"] Hist. A town or district consisting of ten freeholding families. • A freeholder of the decenary (a decennarius) was bound by frankpledge to produce any wrongdoer living in the decenary. — Also spelled (incorrectly) decenary. — Also termed decenna; tithing. Cf. FRANKPLEDGE.

"The civil division of the territory of England is into counties, of those counties into hundreds, of those hundreds into tithings or towns. Which division, as it now stands, seems to owe its original to king Alfred; who, to prevent the rapines and disorders which formerly prevailed in the realm, instituted tithings; so called from the Saxon, because ten freeholders, with their families, composed one. These all dwelt together, and were sureties or free pledges to the king for the good behavior of each other; and, if any offence was committed in their district, they were bound to have the offender forthcoming. And therefore anciently no man was suffered to abide in England above forty days, unless he were enrolled in some tithing or decenary." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 110 (1765).

decency. The state of being proper, as in speech or dress; the quality of being seemly.

decenna (di-sen-ə), n. [fr. Latin decem "ten"] See DECENARY.

decennarius (des-ə-nair-ee-əs), n. [Law Latin "a deciner"] One of ten families of freeholders comprising a decenary. See DECENARY.

decenary. See DECENARY.

deceptive act. (1939) As defined by the Federal Trade Commission and most state statutes, conduct that is likely to deceive a consumer acting reasonably under similar circumstances. — Also termed deceptive practice; deceptive sales practice. [Cases: Consumer Protection ⇨4; Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⇨136.]

deceptive advertising. See FALSE ADVERTISING.

deceptive practice. See DECEPTIVE ACT.

deceptive sales practice. See DECEPTIVE ACT.

deceptive warranty. See WARRANTY (2).

decern (di-sərn), vb. Scots law. To decree; to give final judgment.

"Before the judgment or interlocutor of any court in Scotland can be extracted, to the effect of warranting execution, it must import a decree. Hence, all extractable judgments close with the word 'decern.'" William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 287 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

de certificando (dee sər-ti-fi-kan-doh), n. [Law Latin "about something to be certified"] A writ requiring something to be certified, similar to certiorari. See CERTIFICANDO DE RECOGNITIONE STAPULAE.

decertify, vb. (1918) 1. To revoke the certification of. 2. To remove the official status of (a labor union) by withdrawing the right to act as a collective-bargaining agent. [Cases: Labor Relations ⇨216.] 3. (Of a court) to overrule a previous order that created a class for purposes of a class action; to officially undo (a class). [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨1232.] Cf. CERTIFY. — decertification, n.

de certiorando (dee sər-shee-ə-ran-doh), n. [Law Latin "about certification"] A writ ordering a sheriff to certify a fact.

decessus (di-ses-əs), n. [fr. Latin decedere "to depart"] 1. Roman law. A death. 2. A departure. • This term has been used in both the civil and common law, esp. in reference to the desertion of a ground in a previous pleading in favor of another. See DEPARTURE.

de cetero. See DE CAETERO.

de champertia (dee kam-pər-shee-ə), n. [Law Latin "about champerty"] Hist. A writ ordering justices of the bench to enforce the champerty laws. See CHAMPERTOR; CHAMPERTY.

de char et de sank (də shahr ay də sangk). [Law French] Hist. Of flesh and blood.

de chimino (dee kim-ə-noh), n. [Law Latin "writ of way"] Hist. A writ to enforce a right-of-way.

de cibariis utendis (dee si-bair-ee-əs yoo-ten-dis), n. [Law Latin "of victuals to be used"] Hist. The statute of 10 Edw. 3 ch. 3 restraining entertainment expenses. • This was one of several statutes limiting luxury spending.

decies tantum (desh-ee-eez or dee-shee-eez tan-təm), n. [Law Latin "ten times as much"] Hist. A writ ordering a juror who accepted a bribe for a verdict to pay ten times the bribery amount, half to the suing party and half to the Crown.

"Decies tantum is a writ that lies where a juror in any inquest takes money of the one part or other, to give his verdict; then he shall pay ten times as much as he hath received: and every one that will sue may have this action, and shall have the one half, and the king the other And the same law is of all other actions popular, where one part is to the king, the other to the party that sues. Also the embracers, who procure such inquests, shall be punished in the same manner, and they shall have imprisonment a year. But no justice shall inquire thereof ex officio, but only at the suit of the party." Termes de la Ley 145 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

decimae (des-ə-mee), n. [fr. Latin decem "ten"] Eccles. law. 1. The tenth part of the annual profits of a benefice originally payable to the Pope, and later to the Crown by 26 Hen. 8, ch. 3.

"The tenths, or decimae, were the tenth part of the annual profit of each living . . . which was also claimed by the holy see But this claim of the pope met with a vigorous resistance from the English parliament; and a variety of acts were passed to prevent and restrain it But the popish clergy, blindly devoted to the will of a foreign master, still kept it on foot; sometimes more secretly, sometimes more openly and avowedly And, as the clergy expressed this willingness to contribute so much of their income to the head of the church, it was thought proper (when in the same reign the papal power was abolished, and the king was declared the head of the church of England) to annex this revenue to the crown" 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 274 (1765).

2. Tithes paid to the church, often in grain or wool.

decimae garbales (des-i-mee gahr-bay-leez). [Law Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. Tithe sheaves; grain tithes. • The parish rector was entitled to each tenth sheaf of the cut grain as a tithe.

decimae rectoriae (des-i-mee rek-tor-ee-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. Parsonage tithes; that is, fixed tithes payable to the parson of a parish. • The right to levy such tithes could not be lost by prescription.

decimae vicariae (des-i-mee vi-kair-ee-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. Vicarage tithes. • Vicars received tithes from various sources (such as from wool or eggs) according to need or custom. The right to levy them could not be lost by prescription.

decimation (des-ə-may-shən). 1. A major destruction of people; a great loss of life. 2. Hist. A tithing; a payment of the tenth part. 3. Hist. A punishment, esp. by death, of every tenth person by lot. • Under Roman law, decimatio referred to the punishment by lot of every tenth soldier in a legion for mutiny or cowardice.

decision, n. (16c) 1. A judicial or agency determination after consideration of the facts and the law; esp., a ruling, order, or judgment pronounced by a court when considering or disposing of a case. See JUDGMENT (1); OPINION (1). — decisional, adj.

appealable decision. (1870) A decree or order that is sufficiently final to receive appellate review (such as an order granting summary judgment), or an interlocutory decree or order that is immediately appealable, usu. by statute (such as an order denying immunity to a police officer in a civil-rights suit). — Also termed reviewable issue. See COLLATERAL-ORDER DOCTRINE. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨24–135.]

final decision. See final judgment under JUDGMENT.

interlocutory decision. See interlocutory order under ORDER (2).

unreasonable decision. (1962) An administrative agency's decision that is so obviously wrong that there can be no difference of opinion among reasonable minds about its erroneous nature. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨763.]

2. Parliamentary law. VOTE (4). 3. Parliamentary law. The chair's ruling on a point of order. See appeal from the decision of the chair under APPEAL.

decisional law. See CASELAW.

decision-making responsibility. The authority to come to a binding resolution of an issue. • For example, in child-rearing, decision-making responsibility involves the authority to make significant decisions on a child's behalf, including decisions about education, religious training, and healthcare.

decision on the merits. See judgment on the merits under JUDGMENT.

decisive oath. See OATH.

decisory oath. See decisive oath under OATH.

Decker test. See SUBJECT-MATTER TEST.

declarant (di-klair-ənt), n. (17c) 1. One who has made a statement <in accordance with the rules of evidence, the statement was offered to prove the declarant's state of mind>. 2. One who has signed a declaration, esp. one stating an intent to become a U.S. citizen <the declarant grew up in Italy>. — declarant, adj.

declaration, n. (15c) 1. A formal statement, proclamation, or announcement, esp. one embodied in an instrument. Cf. AFFIDAVIT.

declaration of alienage. A declaration by a person with dual citizenship of a wish to renounce the citizenship of one state. • For the declaration to be effective, the person making it must be of full age and not under any disability.

declaration of default. A creditor's notice to a debtor regarding the debtor's failure to perform an obligation, such as making a payment.

declaration of dividend. (1837) A company's setting aside of a portion of its earnings or profits for distribution to its shareholders. See DIVIDEND. [Cases: Corporations ⇨152.]

declaration of homestead. (1856) A statement required to be filed with a state or local authority to prove property ownership in order to claim homestead-exemption rights. See HOMESTEAD. [Cases: Homestead ⇨41.]

declaration of intention. (1812) An alien's formal statement resolving to become a U.S. citizen and to renounce allegiance to any other government or country. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ⇨718.]

declaration of legitimacy. (1861) A formal or legal pronouncement that a child is legitimate. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock ⇨1, 8.]

declaration of trust. (17c) 1. The act by which the person who holds legal title to property or an estate acknowledges that the property is being held in trust for another person or for certain specified purposes. [Cases: Trusts ⇨1.] 2. The instrument that creates a trust. — Also termed (in sense 2) trust instrument; trust deed; trust agreement. [Cases: Trusts ⇨19.]

judicial declaration. Hist. Scots law. 1. A party's statement, made in court and transcribed, about a case's material facts. 2. An accused's statement, made after an arrest and taken down in writing.

2. Int'l law. The part of a treaty containing the stipulations under which the parties agree to conduct their actions; TREATY (1). 3. Int'l law. A country's unilateral pronouncement that affects the rights and duties of other countries.

declaration of war. A country's announcement that it is officially engaged in war against another country. [Cases: War and National Emergency ⇨7.]

4. A document that governs legal rights to certain types of real property, such as a condominium or a residential subdivision. [Cases: Condominium ⇨3.] 5. A listing of the merchandise that a person intends to bring into the United States. • This listing is given to U.S. Customs when one enters the country. [Cases: Customs Duties ⇨65.] 6. Evidence. An unsworn statement made by someone having knowledge of facts relating

declaration against interest. (1940) A statement by a person who is not a party to a suit and is not available to testify at trial, discussing a matter that is within the declarant's personal knowledge and is adverse to the declarant's interest. • Such a statement is admissible into evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(3). — Also termed self-disserving declaration. See admission against interest under ADMISSION (1). [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨417(15); Evidence ⇨272.]

declaration of pain. (1891) A person's exclamation of present pain, which operates as an exception to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 803(3). [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨419(2.20); Evidence ⇨268.]

declaration of state of mind. (1843) A person's state-of-mind statement that operates as an exception to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 803(3). [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨419(2.20); Evidence ⇨268.]

dying declaration. (18c) A statement by a person who believes that death is imminent, relating to the cause or circumstances of the person's impending death. • The statement is admissible in evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule. — Also termed deathbed declaration; ante mortem statement. [Cases: Evidence ⇨275.5; Homicide ⇨1075.]

"[A] rule peculiar to criminal cases is the exception to the rule respecting hearsay evidence which renders dying declarations as to the cause of death admissible in trials for murder or manslaughter. . . . The earliest emphatic statement of it . . . is to be found in Woodcock's case, decided in 1789 This case refers to a decision in 1720 . . . and to the case of R. v Reason and Tranter, decided in 1722. That case, however, says nothing as to any limitation on the rule. A series of cases from 1678 to 1765 show that during that period declarations of deceased persons as to the cause of their death were admitted even though the declarants had hopes of recovery when they were made."
1 James Fitzjames Stephen, A History of the Criminal Law of England 447-48 (1883).

self-disserving declaration. See declaration against interest.

self-serving declaration. (1881) An out-of-court statement made to benefit one's own interest. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨413; Evidence ⇨271.]

7. Common-law pleading. The plaintiff's first pleading in a civil action. • It is an amplification of the original writ on which the action is founded, with the additional circumstances of the time and place of injury. In a real action, the declaration is called a count. Today the equivalent term in English law is statement of claim; in most American jurisdictions, it is called a petition or complaint. — Also termed narratio. See COUNT (2), (3). Cf. PLEA (2). [Cases: Pleading ⇨41.]

"The declaration is a statement of all material facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action in a methodical and legal form. It consists of the following parts: (a) Statement of title of court. (b) Statement of venue in the margin. (c) declaration in chief. A declaration for the principal cause of action.

The commencement. (d) The body, or statement of the cause of action. (e) The conclusion." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 76, at 192 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

8. A formal, written statement — resembling an affidavit but not notarized or sworn to — that attests, under penalty of perjury, to facts known by the declarant. • Such a declaration, if properly prepared, is admissible in federal court with the same effect as an affidavit. 28 USCA § 1746. — Also termed declaration under penalty of perjury; unsworn declaration under penalty of perjury. Cf. AFFIDAVIT; sworn statement under STATEMENT. 9. Int'l law. An oral or written statement, unilaterally made, by which a state expresses its will, intent, or opinion when acting in the field of international relations. 10. See declaratory judgment under JUDGMENT. 11. DECLARATION OF RIGHTS. — declare, vb. — declaratory, adj.

declaration after final rejection. See affidavit after final rejection under AFFIDAVIT.

declaration date. See DATE.

declaration of a desire for a natural death. See LIVING WILL.

declaration of alienage. See DECLARATION (1).

declaration of estimated tax. (1946) A required IRS filing by certain individuals and businesses of current estimated tax owed, accompanied by periodic payments of that amount. • The requirement ensures current collection of taxes from taxpayers (such as self-employed persons) whose incomes are not fully taxed by payroll withholding. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 6315, 6654. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨4832, 5219.40.]

Declaration of Independence. The formal proclamation of July 4, 1776, in the name of the people of the American colonies, asserting their independence from the British Crown and announcing themselves to the world as an independent nation.

declaration of legitimacy. See DECLARATION (1).

declaration of pain. See DECLARATION (6).

Declaration of Paris. An international agreement, signed by Great Britain, France, Turkey, Sardinia, Austria, Prussia, and Russia in 1856 (at the end of the Crimean War), providing that (1) privateering is illegal, (2) with the exception of contraband, a neutral flag covers an enemy's goods, (3) with the exception of contraband, neutral goods cannot be confiscated under a hostile flag, and (4) a blockade must work to be binding. • The agreement was later adopted by most other maritime powers, except the United States and a few others.

"The Declaration of Paris is one of the greatest triumphs won by commercial interests over the strict rules of maritime warfare. Its importance resides in its first three articles. Article 4 did no more than formulate a principle acknowledged for more than a century. Construed strictly it requires an impossibility; for no blockade, however strict, can always 'prevent access to the coast of the enemy.' But it is clear that the words were meant to be understood in a reasonable sense as merely prohibitory of ineffective or 'paper' blockades. . . . Article 1 struck at a most objectionable practice. The current of opinion had long been running strongly against the use of privateers. . . . Article 2 . . . has provoked an enormous amount of controversy. Together with Article 3 it amounted to a new departure in the law of maritime capture. Up to 1856 the great naval powers had been divided between the old principle that the liability of goods to capture should be determined by the character of their owner, and the more modern principle . . . that the character of the ship in which the goods were laden should settle their fate." 1 R.H. Inglis Palgrave, Palgrave's Dictionary of Political Economy 520-21 (Henry Higgs ed., 2d ed. 1925).

declaration of restrictions. Property. A statement of all the covenants, conditions, and restrictions affecting a parcel of land, usu. imposed and recorded by a developer of a subdivision. • The restrictions usu. promote a general plan of development by requiring all lot owners to comply with the specified standards, esp. for buildings. The restrictions run with the land. — Sometimes also written declarations of restrictions. [Cases: Covenants ◊69.]

declaration of rights. 1. An action in which a litigant requests a court's assistance not because any rights have been violated but because those rights are uncertain. • Examples include suits for a declaration of legitimacy, for declaration of nullity of marriage, and for the authoritative interpretation of a will. 2. See declaratory judgment under JUDGMENT. — Often shortened to declaration.

declaration of state of mind. See DECLARATION (6).

Declaration of Taking Act. The federal law regulating the government's taking of private property for public use under eminent domain. 40 USCA § 3114 et seq. • Fair compensation must be paid for the property. [Cases: Eminent Domain ◊122, 167.]

declaration of trust. See DECLARATION (1).

declaration of use. Trademarks. A sworn statement submitted by a registered mark's owner averring that the registered mark is currently in use in commerce, and providing a specimen or facsimile of the mark's use. • The § 8 affidavit must be filed (1) between the fifth and sixth year following registration, and (2) within the year before the end of every ten-year period after the date of registration. If a registered mark's owner fails to file a § 8 affidavit within the required time, the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office may cancel the registration. The term comes from § 8 of the Lanham Act. — Also termed affidavit of continued use; affidavit of use; affidavit under § 8; declaration of continued use; declaration under § 8; Section 8 declaration; statement of use. Cf. INCONTESTABILITY STATUS; CANCELLATION. [Cases: Trademarks ◊1254, 1304.] declarator of trust (di-klar-ə-tər or di-klair-ə-tər or -tor). A common-law action against a trustee who holds property under a title ex facie for the trustee's own benefit.

declaratory (di-klar-ə-tor-ee or di-klair-), adj. 1. Clear; manifest . 2. Explanatory .

declaratory, n. See action of declarator under ACTION.

declaratory act. See declaratory statute under STATUTE.

declaratory decree. See declaratory judgment under JUDGMENT.

declaratory judgment. See JUDGMENT.

declaratory-judgment act. (1921) A federal or state law permitting parties to bring an action to determine their legal rights and positions regarding a controversy not yet ripe for adjudication, as when an insurance company seeks a determination of coverage before deciding whether to cover a claim. 28 USCA §§ 2201, 2202. See declaratory judgment under JUDGMENT. [Cases: Declaratory Judgment ◊21.] declaratory part of a law. A portion of a law clearly defining rights to be observed or wrongs to be avoided.

declaratory precedent. See PRECEDENT.

declaratory relief. See RELIEF.

declaratory statute. See STATUTE.

declaratory theory. (1895) The belief that judges' decisions never make law but instead merely constitute evidence of what the law is. • This antiquated view — held by such figures as Coke and Blackstone — is no longer accepted.

"There are . . . at least three good reasons why the declaratory theory should have persisted for some time after the modern English doctrine [of precedent] had begun to take shape. In the first place, it appealed to believers in the separation of powers, to whom anything in the nature of judicial legislation would have been anathema. Secondly, it concealed a fact which Bentham was anxious to expose, namely, that judge-made law is retrospective in its effect.

If in December a court adjudges that someone is liable, in consequence of his conduct during the previous January, it would certainly appear to be legislating retrospectively, unless the liability is based on an earlier Act of Parliament, or unless the court is simply following a previous decision. A way of disguising the retrospective character of such a judgment would be to maintain the doctrine that the court really was doing no more than state a rule which anyone could have deduced from well-known principles or common usage, for the conduct in question would then have been prohibited by the law as it stood in January. The third reason for the persistence of the declaratory theory may be thought to justify its retention in a revised form today. When confronted with a novel point, judges always tend to speak as though the answer is provided by the common law." Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 30 (4th ed. 1991).

declared trust. See express trust under TRUST.

de claro die (dee klair-oh di-ee). [Law Latin "by clear day"] By daylight.

de clauso fracto (dee klaw-zoh frak-toh). [Law Latin] Of a breach of close. See CLAUSUM FREGIT.

de clerico admittendo (dee kler-ə-koh ad-mi-ten-doh), n. [Law Latin "for admitting a clerk"] Hist. A writ of execution commanding a bishop to accept a nominee for a vacant benefice. • A benefice's patron could enforce the right to fill a vacancy (the right of presentation) in the Court of Common Pleas by writ of quare impedit. — Also termed admittendo clerico; ad admittendum clericum. Cf. ADVOWSON; PRESENTATION; QUARE IMPEDIT.

de clero (dee kleer-oh), n. [Law Latin "concerning the clergy"] The statute of 25 Edw. 3 addressing clerical matters, including presentations and indictments.

declination (dek-lə-nay-shən). (14c) 1. A deviation from proper course <declination of duty>. 2. An act of refusal <declination of a gift>. 3. A document filed by a fiduciary who chooses not to serve. 4. At common law, a plea to the court's jurisdiction by reason of the judge's personal interest in the lawsuit. — Also termed (esp. in sense 2) declinature.

declinatory exception (di-klīn-ə-tor-ee). See EXCEPTION (1).

declinatory plea. Hist. A pretrial plea claiming benefit of clergy. — Also termed plea of sanctuary. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

declining-balance depreciation method. See DEPRECIATION METHOD.

decoctor (di-kok-tər or -tor), n. [fr. Latin deciquere "to waste"] Roman law. A bankrupt; a defaulting debtor.

de coelo usque ad inferos (dee see-loh əs-kwee ad in-fər-ohs). [Latin] From heaven to the center of the earth. • This phrase expressed a common-law maxim about the extent of a real-property owner's ownership interest in the property.

decollatio (dee-kah-lay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin de "off" + collum "neck"] Hist. In England and Scotland, an act of beheading. See DECAPITATION.

decolonization. Int'l law. The process by which a colonial power divests itself of sovereignty over a colony — whether a territory, a protectorate, or a trust territory — so that the colony is granted autonomy and eventually attains independence.

de communi dividundo. See actio de communi dividundo under ACTIO.

de comon droit (də kah-mən droyt). [Law French] Hist. By the common law; of common right. See COMMON LAW.

de computo (dee kom-pyə-toh), n. [Law Latin "of account"] Hist. A writ ordering a defendant to either give a reasonable accounting to the plaintiff or explain why such an accounting should not be required. • This was the foundation for an action of account. See ACCOUNT (3).

de concilio curiae (dee kən-sil-ee-oh kyoor-ee-ee). [Law Latin] By the advice of the court; by the direction of the court. — Also spelled de consillio curiae.

De Conflictu Legum (dee kən-flik-too lee-gəm), n. [Latin] Concerning the conflict of laws. • This is a title to several works on the conflict of laws.

De Coniunctim Feoffatis (dee kən-jəŋk-təm fee-fay-tis), n. [Law Latin "concerning persons jointly enfeoffed"] Hist. The title of the statute of Edward I preventing delays caused by tenants pleading, in novel disseisins or other actions, that someone else was jointly seised with them.

de consanguineo (dee kon-sang-gwin-ee-oh), n. See COSINAGE.

de consanguinitate (dee kon-sang-gwin-i-tay-tee), n. See COSINAGE.

de consilio (dee kən-sil-ee-oh). [Law Latin] Of counsel. • This term often referred to the advice or counsel to commit a crime.

de continuando assisam (dee kən-tin-yoo-an-doh ə-si-zəm), n. [Law Latin “for continuing an assize”] A writ to continue an assize.

de contumace capiendo (dee kon-tyə-may-see kap-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin “for arresting a contumacious person”] Hist. A writ issuing out of the Court of Chancery at the request of an ecclesiastical court that has found a person to be in contempt. • This writ came into use after the Ecclesiastical Courts Act of 1813 removed ecclesiastical courts’ power to excommunicate litigants who failed to comply with a court order. Cf. EXCOMMUNICATO CAPIENDO.

“In 1812, the case of Mary Ann Dix — a woman not of age, who was imprisoned for two years on a writ de excommunicato capiendo for not paying costs in a suit for defamation — aroused the Legislature. In the following year it was enacted that excommunication should cease to exist as part of the process of the ecclesiastical courts to enforce appearance, and as a punishment for contempt. . . . [F]or the writ de excommunicato capiendo was substituted the writ de contumace capiendo; and the rules applying to the older writ were made applicable to the new.” 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 632 (7th ed. 1956).

de copia libelli deliberanda (dee koh-pee-ə li-bel-i di-lib-ə-ran-də), n. [Law Latin “for delivering a copy of a libel”] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ ordering an ecclesiastical-court judge (such as the Dean of Arches) to provide the defendant with a copy of the plaintiff’s complaint.

de coronatore eligendo (dee kor-ə-nə-tor-ee el-i-jen-doh), n. [Law Latin “for electing a coroner”] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to call an election of a coroner to fill a vacant office. See CORONER (2).

de coronatore exonerando (dee kor-ə-nə-tor-ee eg-zon-ə-ran-doh), n. [Law Latin “for removing a coroner”] A writ ordering the sheriff to remove a coroner from office for a reason stated in the writ. See CORONER (2).

de corpore comitatus (dee kor-pə-ree kom-ə-tay-təs). [Law Latin] From the body of the county. • This term was esp. used to distinguish a body of the county at large from a smaller area or de vicineto (“from a neighborhood”).

decree, n. (14c) 1. Traditionally, a judicial decision in a court of equity, admiralty, divorce, or probate — similar to a judgment of a court of law <the judge’s decree in favor of the will’s beneficiary>. 2. A court’s final judgment. 3. Any court order, but esp. one in a matrimonial case <divorce decree>. See JUDGMENT; ORDER (2); DECISION. [Cases: Divorce ⇨152.]

“The chief differences between decrees in equity and judgments at common law are as follows: The former are pronounced by courts of equity; the latter, by courts of law. The former result from an investigation and determination of the rights of the parties by the means provided and according to the principles recognized in equity jurisprudence; the latter result from an investigation and determination made by the more limited means and more inflexible rules of the common law. The former may be adjusted to all the varieties of interest and of circumstance, and may contain such directions as are needed to carry them into effect, both in letter and in spirit; the latter are in an invariable form, general in terms, and absolute for plaintiff or defendant. And the former often enforce rights not recognized by the common law The term ‘judgment’ is frequently used in a broad sense to include decrees in equity.” 1 A.C. Freeman, A Treatise of the Law of Judgments § 12, at 23–24 (Edward W. Tuttle ed., 5th ed. 1925).

agreed decree. A final judgment, the terms of which are agreed to by the parties. [Cases: Judgment ⇨71, 91.]

consent decree. (1831) A court decree that all parties agree to. — Also termed consent order. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2397; Judgment ⇨87.]

custody decree. A decree awarding or modifying child custody. • The decree may be included in the decree for a related proceeding — such as a divorce — or it may be a separate order. [Cases: Child Custody ⇨521.]

decree absolute. (1826) A ripened decree nisi; a court’s decree that has become unconditional because the time specified in the decree nisi has passed. — Also termed order absolute; rule absolute.

decree absolutor (ab-zol-vi-tər or -tor), n. Scots law. A judgment for a defendant, either by a dismissal of a claim or by an acquittal. — Also termed decret absolutor.

decree of valuation. Scots law. A decree of the Teind Court determining the extent and value of a heritor's teinds.

decree pro confesso (proh kən-fes-oh). (1821) Equity practice. A decree entered in favor of the plaintiff as a result of the defendant's failure to timely respond to the allegations in the plaintiff's bill; esp., a decree entered when the defendant has defaulted by not appearing in court at the prescribed time. — Also termed decree taken pro confesso. [Cases: Equity ⇨ 417–420.]

"A decree pro confesso in equity is similar to a default judgment in an action at law. If a defendant in an equity suit fails to answer the plaintiff's petition within the prescribed time period, the bill will be taken pro confesso, and a decree entered in favor of the plaintiff. . . . However, whereas a default judgment in an action at law effects an admission of pleaded facts and conclusions of law . . . a decree pro confesso in an equity action admits only the material and well pleaded facts in the petition and does not admit the legal claims upon which the plaintiff seeks relief." 27A Am. Jur. 2d Equity § 249, at 733–34 (1996).

deficiency decree. See deficiency judgment under JUDGMENT.

divorce decree. A final judgment in a suit for divorce. ● A divorce decree dissolves the marriage and usu. resolves all matters concerning property and children. decrepit (di-krep-it), adj. (15c) (Of a person) disabled; physically or mentally incompetent to such an extent that the individual would be helpless in a personal conflict with a person of ordinary health and strength.

decreta (di-kree-tə), n. [Latin "decisions"] Roman law. Judgments of magistrates; esp., sentences pronounced by the emperor as the supreme judge. See DECRETUM.

"Decreta. In Roman law decisions of magistrates given after investigation of a case by cognitio . . . and in particular, decisions of the emperor as judge of first instance after trial by cognitio, or as a judge of appeal. As the highest authority in the State the emperor could interpret the law freely and even introduce new principles. Consequently imperial decisions were authoritative interpretations of the law or even innovative and regarded as statements binding for the future, and as such quoted by the jurists. They were not only communicated to the parties but recorded in the records of the imperial court and private persons might obtain copies of them." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 343 (1980).

decretal (di-kree-təl), adj. Of or relating to a decree.

decretal child support. See CHILD SUPPORT.

decretal interdict. See INTERDICT (1).

decretal order. See ORDER (2).

decretals (di-kree-təlz), n. Eccles. law. Canonical epistles written either by the Pope or by the Pope and his cardinals to settle controversial matters; esp., the second part of the Corpus Juris Canonici, canonical epistles consisting mainly of: (1) Decretales Gregorii Noni, a collection by Raymundus Barcinus, chaplain to Gregory IX, dating from about 1227; (2) Decretales Bonifacii Octavi, a collection by Boniface VIII in the year 1298; (3) Clementinae, a collection of Clement V, published in the year 1308; and (4) the Extravagantes, a collection by John XXII and other bishops. — Also termed (in Law Latin) Decretales. See CANON LAW.

decretist (di-kree-tist), n. In medieval universities, a law student; esp., a student or commentator on Gratian's Decretum.

decretum (di-kree-təm), n. [Latin "a decision having mandatory force"] 1. Roman law. A decision of a magistrate, esp. a judgment by the emperor at first instance or on appeal. • A decretum of the emperor was a type of imperial constitution. 2. Eccles. law. An ecclesiastical law, as distinguished from a secular law. dedication day. See DAY.

de die in diem (dee di-ee in di-əm). [Law Latin] From day to day; daily.

dedi et concessi (dee-di et kən-ses-i). [Law Latin] I have given and conveyed. • These were the words generally used to convey a gift.

dedimus et concessimus (ded-ə-məs et kən-ses-i-məs). [Law Latin] We have given and granted. • These words were used in a conveyance when there was more than one grantor or when the grant was from the Crown.

dedimus potestatem (ded-ə-məs poh-tes-tay-təm). [Law Latin “we have given power”] 1. A commission issuing from the court before which a case is pending, authorizing a person named in the commission to compel the attendance of certain witnesses, to take their testimony on the written interrogatories and cross-interrogatories attached to the commission, to reduce the answers to writing, and to send it sealed to the court issuing the commission. 2. In England, a chancery writ commissioning the persons named in the writ to take certain actions, including administering oaths to defendants and justices of the peace. • The writ was formerly used to commission a person to take action such as acknowledging a fine and appointing an attorney for representation in court. Before the Statute of Westminster (1285), an attorney could not appear on behalf of a party without this writ. — Also termed dedimus potestatem de attorno faciendo.

dediticii (ded-i-tish-ee-i or dee-di-ti-shee-i), n. pl. [Latin “those who have surrendered”] Roman law. The lowest class of freemen whose members were ineligible for Roman citizenship, including enemies granted freedom in exchange for surrender, or, under the Lex Aelia Sentia, manumitted slaves convicted of a crime in a court, or branded or put in chains by their former owners. • Dediticii who were formerly slaves were not allowed to live within 100 miles of Rome. Justinian abolished this status. — Also spelled dedititii. — Sing. dediticius, dedititius.

“Dediticii . . . were not reduced to slavery, but to a condition quite analogous. They were not allowed to make a will, or to take under one; they never obtained Roman citizenship, and they could not come within one hundred miles of the city of Rome.” Andrew Stephenson, A History of Roman Law § 119, at 324 (1912).

“Slaves who before manumission had been subjected to degrading punishment (e.g. had been branded or made to fight in the arena) were given, on manumission, a special status, viz. that of enemies surrendered at discretion (dediticii). A dediticius, though free and not a slave, had none of the rights of a citizen, could never under any circumstances better his position (e.g. become a citizen), and was not allowed to live within 100 miles of Rome.” R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 67 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1942).

dedition (di-dish-ən), n. [fr. Latin deditio “give up”] (16c) A surrender of something, such as property.

de diversis regulis juris antiqui (dee di-vər-sis reg-yə-lis joor-is an-ti-kwi). [Latin “of various rules of ancient law”] Roman law. The last title in the Digest, containing 211 maxims. See DIGEST (2).

de dolo malo (dee doh-loh mal-oh). [Latin] Of or based on fraud. See ACTIO DE DOLO MALO.

de domo reparanda (dee doh-moh rep-ə-ran-də), n. [Law Latin “to repair a house”] Hist. A writ ordering a cotenant to contribute to the expenses of maintaining common property.

De Donis Conditionalibus (dee doh-nis kən-dish-ee-ə-nal-i-bəs). An English statute, enacted in 1285, that gave rise to the ability to create a fee tail. — Often shortened to De Donis. — Sometimes written de donis conditionalibus.

“[T]he statute de donis of 13 Edw. I. . . . was intended to check the judicial construction, that had, in a great degree, discharged the conditional fee from the limitation imposed by the grant. Under that statute, fees conditional were changed into estates tail . . .” 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *444 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

“[A]fter De Donis, the formula ‘to A and the heirs of his body’ gave to A an estate known as an estate in fee tail. Because A had no power to transfer an estate in fee simple absolute, it became theoretically possible for persons like O to tie up the ownership of land in a single family for hundreds of years. We say theoretically possible because by 1472 a way would be found for the tenant in tail (as A was called) to transfer an estate in fee simple absolute despite De Donis.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 29 (2d ed. 1984).

de dote assignanda (dee doh-tee as-ig-nan-də), n. [Law Latin “for assigning dower”] Hist. A writ ordering a royal escheater to provide dower to a widow of a tenant holding an estate directly from the Crown.

de dote unde nil habet (dee doh-tee ən-dee nil hay-bet), n. [Law Latin “of dower whereof she has none”] A writ ordering a tenant interfering with a widow's right to dower to provide a reasonable dower. — Also termed writ of dower. Cf. UNDE NIHIL HABET.

“DE DOTE UNDE NIL HABET. This is a writ of right in its nature . . . It must be brought by the widow as demandant, against the tenant of the freehold, that is, the heir or his alienee, and its effect is to enable the former to recover from the latter the seisin of a third part of the tenements in demand, to be set forth to her in severalty by metes and bounds, together with damages and costs." 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 433 (2d ed. 1867).

deductible, adj. Capable of being subtracted, esp. from taxable income. See DEDUCTION (2).

deductible, n. (1929) 1. Under an insurance policy, the portion of the loss to be borne by the insured before the insurer becomes liable for payment. Cf. SELF-INSURED RETENTION. [Cases: Insurance ↷2106, 2523.]

straight deductible. A deductible that is a specified, fixed amount.

2. The insurance-policy clause specifying the amount of this portion.

deduction, n. (15c) 1. The act or process of subtracting or taking away. 2. Tax. An amount subtracted from gross income when calculating adjusted gross income, or from adjusted gross income when calculating taxable income. — Also termed tax deduction. Cf. EXEMPTION (3); TAX CREDIT. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3270–3516; Taxation ↷3501–3523.]

additional standard deduction. (1956) The sum of the additional amounts that a taxpayer who turns 65 or becomes blind before the close of the taxable year is entitled to deduct. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3295; Taxation ↷3501.]

charitable deduction. (1925) A deduction for a contribution to a charitable enterprise that has qualified for tax-exempt status in accordance with IRC (26 USCA) § 501(c)(3) and is entitled to be deducted in full by the donor from the taxable estate or from gross income. See CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTION (2); CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3337; Taxation ↷3501.]

deduction in respect of a decedent. (1949) A deduction that accrues to the point of death but is not recognizable on the decedent's final income-tax return because of the accounting method used, such as an accrued-interest expense of a cash-basis debtor.

itemized deduction. (1943) An expense (such as a medical expense, home-mortgage interest, or a charitable contribution) that can be subtracted from adjusted gross income to determine taxable income.

marital deduction. (1949) A federal tax deduction allowed for lifetime and testamentary transfers from one spouse to another. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2056, 2523. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4169.]

miscellaneous itemized deduction. (1955) Generally, an itemized deduction of job or investment expenses; a deduction other than those allowable in computing adjusted gross income, those enumerated in IRC (26 USCA) § 67(b), and personal exemptions. • This type of deduction is allowed only to an itemizing taxpayer whose total miscellaneous itemized deductions exceed a statutory percentage of adjusted gross income.

standard deduction. (1944) A specified dollar amount that a taxpayer can deduct from adjusted gross income, instead of itemizing deductions, to determine taxable income. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3295; Taxation ↷3501.]

3. The portion of a succession to which an heir is entitled before a partition. 4. The act or process of reasoning from general propositions to a specific application or conclusion. Cf. INDUCTION (2). — deduct (for senses 1–3), vb. — deduce (for sense 4), vb.

deduction for new. See NEW-FOR-OLD (1).

deduction in respect of a decedent. See DEDUCTION.

deductis debitis (di-dək-tis deb-i-tis). [Latin] Hist. The debts being deducted. • Before an estate could be ascertained, the debts had to be deducted.

de ea re ita censuere (dee ee-ə ree i-tə sen-s[y]oo-ə-ree). [Latin] Concerning that matter they have so decreed. • This phrase was used to record decrees of the Roman senate. — Abbr. d.e.r.i.c.

deed, n. (bef. 12c) 1. Something that is done or carried out; an act or action. 2. A written instrument by which land is conveyed. 3. At common law, any written instrument that is signed, sealed, and delivered and that conveys some interest in property. See special contract & contract under seal under CONTRACT. — Also termed (in senses 2 & 3) evidence of title. Cf. CONVEYANCE; BILL OF SALE. — deed, vb.

"A deed is a writing sealed and delivered. For if either a parchment without writing be delivered as one's deed, yet it is not his deed, though an obligation be afterwards written in it: or if it be a writing but not sealed at the time of the delivery of it as his deed, it is a scrole and not his deed. Or if I make and seal a deed, and the party take it without my delivery, I may plead it is not my deed." Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 108 (1759).

"What then is a deed? Unfortunately the word is not free from ambiguity. In the original and technical sense a deed is a written instrument under the seal of the party executing it. Because, however, of the wide use of such instruments in the conveyance of real estate, it has come to mean in popular acceptance any formal conveyance for the transfer of land or of an interest therein. The dual use of the term has crept into the language of courts and law writers, so that in the reading of cases it is difficult to determine whether the word is used in the first and original sense, or whether it connotes a formal instrument of the type ordinarily employed for the conveyance of land." Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property § 46, at 118–19 (2d ed. 1955).

"All deeds are documents, but not all documents are deeds. For instance, a legend chalked on a brick wall, or a writing tattooed on a sailor's back may be documents but they are not deeds. A deed is, therefore, a particular kind of document. It must be a writing and a writing on paper or its like, e.g., vellum or parchment. Any instrument under seal is a deed if made between private persons. It must be signed, sealed, and delivered. A deed must either (a) effect the transference of an interest, right or property, or (b) create an obligation binding on some person or persons, or (c) confirm some act whereby an interest, right, or property has already passed." Gerald Dworkin, Odgers' Construction of Deeds and Statutes 1 (5th ed. 1967).

absolute deed. (17c) A deed that conveys title without condition or encumbrance. — Also termed deed absolute.

administrator's deed. A document that conveys property owned by a person who has died intestate.

bargain-and-sale deed. (1972) A deed that conveys property to a buyer for valuable consideration but that lacks any guarantee from the seller about the validity of the title. See BARGAIN AND SALE. [Cases: Deeds ↻22.]

composition deed. A deed reflecting the terms of an agreement between a debtor and a creditor to discharge or adjust a debt. [Cases: Debtor and Creditor ↻10.]

counterdeed. A secret deed, executed either before a notary or under a private seal, that voids, invalidates, or alters a public deed.

deathbed deed. Rare. A deed executed by a grantor shortly before death. • The grantor need not be aware that he or she is near death when the deed is executed. [Cases: Deeds ↻68(3), 70(7), 72(2).] deed absolute. See absolute deed.

deed in fee. (18c) A deed conveying the title to land in fee simple, usu. with covenants.

deed in lieu of foreclosure. (1934) A deed by which a borrower conveys fee-simple title to a lender in satisfaction of a mortgage debt and as a substitute for foreclosure. • This deed is often referred to simply as “deed in lieu.” [Cases: Mortgages ↻293.]

deed of covenant. (17c) A deed to do something, such as a document providing for periodic payments by one party to another (usu. a charity) for tax-saving purposes. • The transferor can deduct taxes from the payment and, in some cases, the recipient can reclaim the deducted tax.

deed of distribution. A fiduciary’s deed conveying a decedent’s real estate.

deed of gift. (16c) A deed executed and delivered without consideration. — Also termed gratuitous deed.

deed of inspectorship. Hist. An instrument reflecting an agreement between a debtor and a creditor to appoint a receiver to oversee the winding up of the debtor’s affairs on behalf of the creditor.

deed of partition. (18c) A deed that divides land held by joint tenants, tenants in common, or coparceners. [Cases: Partition ↻96.]

deed of reconveyance. A deed conveying title to real property from a trustee to a grantor when a loan is repaid. Cf. deed of trust.

deed of release. A deed that surrenders full title to a piece of property upon payment or performance of specified conditions.

deed of separation. An instrument governing a spouse’s separation and maintenance. [Cases: Husband and Wife ↻278.] deed of settlement. 1. A deed to settle something, such as the distribution of property in a marriage. 2. English law. A deed formerly used to form a joint-stock company.

deed of trust. (17c) A deed conveying title to real property to a trustee as security until the grantor repays a loan. • This type of deed resembles a mortgage. — Also termed trust deed; trust indenture; indemnity mortgage; common-law mortgage. Cf. deed of reconveyance. [Cases: Mortgages ↻8.]

deed poll. (16c) A deed made by and binding on only one party, or on two or more parties having similar interests. • It is so called because, traditionally, the parchment was “polled” (that is, shaved) so that it would be even at the top (unlike an indenture). — Also spelled deed-poll. Cf. INDENTURE.

deed to lead uses. A common-law deed prepared before an action for a fine or common recovery to show the object of those actions.

deed without covenants. See quitclaim deed.

defeasible deed. (1802) A deed containing a condition subsequent causing title to the property to revert to the grantor or pass to a third party.

disentailing deed. Hist. A tenant-in-tail’s assurance that the estate tail will be barred and converted into an estate in fee. • The Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4 ch. 74) introduced this way of barring an entail. It authorized nearly every tenant in tail, if certain conditions were met, to dispose of the land in fee simple absolute and thus to defeat the rights of all persons claiming under the tenant.

donation deed. A deed granted by the government to a person who either satisfies the statutory conditions in a donation act or redeems a bounty-land warrant. See DONATION ACT; BOUNTY-LAND WARRANT. [Cases: Public Lands ↻42.]

full-covenant-and-warranty deed. See warranty deed.

general warranty deed. See warranty deed.

gift deed. (1864) A deed given for a nominal sum or for love and affection.

good deed. A deed that conveys good title as opposed to a deed that is merely good in form. — Also termed lawful deed.

grant deed. (1891) A deed containing, or having implied by law, some but not all of the usual covenants of title; esp., a deed in which the grantor warrants that he or she (1) has not previously conveyed the estate being granted, (2) has not encumbered the property except as noted in the deed, and (3) will convey to the grantee any title to the property acquired after the date of the deed.

gratuitous deed. See deed of gift.

inclusive deed. See inclusive grant under GRANT.

indented deed. See INDENTURE (2).

latent deed. A deed kept in a strongbox or other secret place, usu. for 20 years or more.

lawful deed. See good deed.

mineral deed. A conveyance of an interest in the minerals in or under the land. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷55.]

mortgage deed. The instrument creating a mortgage. • A mortgage deed typically must contain (1) the name of the mortgagor, (2) words of grant or conveyance, (3) the name of the mortgagee, (4) a property description sufficient to identify the mortgaged premises, (5) the mortgagor's signature, and (6) an acknowledgment. To be effective and binding, a mortgage deed must also be delivered. [Cases: Mortgages ↷42.]

onerous deed. Scots law. A deed given in exchange for a valuable consideration, often as part of a marriage settlement.

quitclaim deed. (18c) A deed that conveys a grantor's complete interest or claim in certain real property but that neither warrants nor professes that the title is valid. — Often shortened to quitclaim. — Also termed deed without covenants. Cf. warranty deed. [Cases: Deeds ↷25, 121.]

release deed. A deed that is issued once a mortgage has been discharged, explicitly releasing and reconveying to the mortgagor the entire interest conveyed by an earlier deed of trust. — Also termed reconveyance; satisfaction; release. [Cases: Mortgages ↷309.]

sheriff's deed. A deed that gives ownership rights in property bought at a sheriff's sale. [Cases: Execution ↷303.]

special warranty deed. (1808) 1. A deed in which the grantor covenants to defend the title against only those claims and demands of the grantor and those claiming by and under the grantor. [Cases: Covenants ↷48, 67.] 2. In a few jurisdictions, a quitclaim deed. Cf. warranty deed. [Cases: Deeds ↷25, 121.]

statutory deed. (1832) A warranty-deed form prescribed by state law and containing certain warranties and covenants even though they are not included in the printed form.

support deed. A deed by which a person (usu. a parent) conveys land to another (usu. a son or daughter) with the understanding that the grantee will support the grantor for life. • Support deeds often result in litigation.

tax deed. A deed showing the transfer of title to real property sold for the nonpayment of taxes. See office grant under GRANT; tax sale under SALE. Cf. TAX CERTIFICATE. [Cases: Taxation ↷3086.]

trust deed. See deed of trust.

warranty deed. (1802) A deed containing one or more covenants of title; esp., a deed that expressly guarantees the grantor's good, clear title and that contains covenants concerning the quality of title, including warranties of seisin, quiet enjoyment, right to convey, freedom from encumbrances, and defense of title against all claims. — Also termed general warranty deed; full-covenant-and-warranty deed. See WARRANTY (1). Cf. quitclaim deed; special warranty deed. [Cases: Covenants ↷46–48, 67.]

wild deed. (1914) A recorded deed that is not in the chain of title, usu. because a previous instrument connected to the chain of title has not been recorded.

deed box. Archaic. A box in which deeds of land title are traditionally kept. • Such a box is considered an heirloom in the strict sense. See HEIRLOOM (1).

deed of agency. A revocable, voluntary trust for payment of a debt.

deed of crime. See ACTUS REUS.

deed of feoffment. See FEOFFMENT (3).

deep of inspectorship. See DEED.

deed of reconveyance. See DEED.

deed of trust. See DEED.

de ejectione custodiae (dee ee-jek-shee-oh-nee kās-toh-dee-ee). [Latin "ejection of a ward"] Hist. A writ available to a guardian after being ejected from the ward's land during the ward's minority. • The writ lay to recover the land or person of the ward, or both. The French equivalent was ejection de garde.

de ejectione firmæ (dee ee-jek-shee-oh-nee fār-mee). [Latin "ejection of farm"] Hist. A writ or action of trespass to obtain the return of lands or tenements to a lessee for a term of years that had been ousted by the lessor or by a reversioner, remainderman, or stranger. • The lessee was then entitled to a writ of ejection to recover, at first, damages for the trespass only, but later the term itself, or the remainder of it, with damages. This action is the foundation of the modern action of ejection. See EJECTION.

"A writ then of ejectione firmæ, or action of trespass in ejection, lieth, where lands or tenements are let for a term of years; and afterwards the lessor, reversioner, remainderman, or any stranger, doth eject or oust the lessee of his term. In this case he shall have his writ of ejection, to call the defendant to answer for entering on the lands so demised to the plaintiff for a term that is not yet expired, and ejecting him. And by this writ the plaintiff shall recover back his term, or the remainder of it, with damages." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 199 (1768).

deem, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To treat (something) as if (1) it were really something else, or (2) it has qualities that it does not have <although the document was not in fact signed until April 21, it explicitly states that it must be deemed to have been signed on April 14>. 2. To consider, think, or judge <she deemed it necessary>.

deemed transferor. (1988) Tax. A person who holds an interest in a generation-skipping trust on behalf of a beneficiary, and whose death will trigger the imposition of a generation-skipping transfer tax. • A deemed transferor is often a child of the settlor. For example, a grandfather could establish a trust with income payable for life to his son (who, because he is only one generation away from his father, is also known as a nonskip person) with the remainder to his grandson, a beneficiary also known as the skip person. When the son dies, the trust will be included in his gross estate for determining the generation-skipping transfer tax. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2601–2663. See GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER; generation-skipping transfer tax under TAX; generation-skipping trust under TRUST; SKIP PERSON; NONSKIP PERSON.

deep link. Intellectual property. A Web-page hyperlink that, when clicked, opens a page on another website other than that site’s home page. • Some plaintiffs have argued, with mixed success, that bypassing their home page in this manner deprives them of advertising revenue. Deep linking does not violate copyright if the portal provided does not copy any of the linked page’s content. And if there is no confusion about the source of the information, deep linking does not constitute unfair competition.

deep pocket. (1975) 1. (pl.) Substantial wealth and resources <the plaintiff nonsuited the individuals and targeted the corporation with deep pockets>. 2. A person or entity with substantial wealth and resources against which a claim may be made or a judgment may be taken <that national insurance company is a favorite deep pocket among plaintiff’s lawyers>.

Deep Rock doctrine. Bankruptcy. The principle by which unfair or inequitable claims presented by controlling shareholders of bankrupt corporations may be subordinated to claims of general or trade creditors. • The doctrine is named for a corporation that made fraudulent transfers to its parent corporation in Taylor v. Standard Gas & Elec. Co., 306 U.S. 307, 59 S.Ct. 543 (1939). [Cases: Bankruptcy ◊ 2968.]

de escaeta (dee es-kee-tə), n. [Law Latin “of escheat”] Hist. A writ authorizing a lord to recover land when the lord’s tenant died without an heir. See ESCHEAT.

de-escalation clause. A contractual provision to decrease the price of something if specified costs decrease. Cf. ESCALATOR CLAUSE (1).

de escambio monetae (dee es-kam-bee-oh mə-nee-tee), n. [Law Latin “of exchange of money”] Hist. A writ authorizing a merchant to prepare a bill of exchange.

de essendo quietum de theolonio (dee e-sen-doh kwī-ee-təm dee thee-ə-loh-nee-oh), n. [Law Latin “of being quit of toll”] Hist. A writ authorizing a person who is exempt from paying a toll to enforce the exemption without harassment. — Also spelled de essendo quietum de tonio.

de essentia (dee e-sen-shee-ə). [Law Latin] Hist. Of the essence; essential.

de essonio de malo lecti (dee e-soh-nee-oh dee mal-oh lek-tī), n. [Law Latin “of essoins of malum lecti (sickness of bed)”] Hist. A writ ordering a determination whether a person is truly sick after the person has issued an essoins claiming sickness as an excuse for not appearing in court.

de estoveriis habendis (dee es-tə-veer-ee-is hə-ben-dis), n. [Law Latin “for having estovers”] Hist. A writ allowing a wife divorced a mensa et thoro (“from bed and board”) to recover alimony or estovers. — Often shorted to estoveriis habendis.

“In case of divorce a mensa et thoro, the law allows alimony to the wife which is that allowance, which is made to a woman for her support out of her husband’s estate; being settled at the discretion of the ecclesiastical judge, on consideration of all the circumstances of the case. This is sometimes called her estovers for which, if he refuses payment, there is; (besides the ordinary process of excommunication) a writ at common law de estoveriis habendis, in order to recover it. . . . It is generally proportioned to the rank and quality of the parties. But in case of elopement, and living with an adulterer, the law allows her no alimony.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 429 (1765).

de estrepamento (dee e-strep-ə-men-toh), n. [Law Latin “of entrapment”] Hist. A writ to prevent waste by a tenant while a suit to recover the land is pending against the tenant. • Because this writ was only auxiliary to a real action to recover land, and because equity afforded the same relief by injunction, the writ fell into disuse and was abolished by 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 27. — Also termed writ of estrepement. See ESTREPEMENT.

de eu et trene (də yoo ay trayn). [French] Hist. Of water and whip of three cords. • This term referred to a neife who, as a servant, could be corporally punished. See NEIFE.

de eve et de treve (də ev ay də trev). [Law French] Hist. From grandfather and great-grandfather’s great-grandfather. • This phrase described the ancestral rights of lords to their villeins.

de excommunicato capiendo (dee eks-kə-myoo-nī-kay-toh kap-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin “for taking an excommunicated person”] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ ordering a sheriff to imprison an excommunicated person until the person reconciled with the church. •

de excommunicato deliberando (dee eks-kə-myoo-ni-kay-toh di-lib-ə-ran-doh), n. [Law Latin “for delivering an excommunicated person”] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ ordering an excommunicated person from prison upon a certification by the person’s superior that the person has reconciled with the church.

de excommunicato recapiendo (dee eks-kə-myoo-ni-kay-toh ri-kap-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin “for retaking an excommunicated person”] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ ordering the rearrest of an excommunicated person who had been released but had not reconciled with the church or given security for a reconciliation.

de excusationibus (dee ek-skyoo-zay-shee-oh-ni-bəs). [Latin “of excuses”] Roman law. The first title of the 27th book of the Digest, containing a person’s legal excuses from serving as tutor or curator. • It is primarily drawn from the Greek work of Herennius Modestinus. See DIGEST (2).

de executione facienda in withernamium (dee ek-sə-kyoo-shee-oh-nee fay-shee-en-də in with-ər-nay-mee-əm), n. [Law Latin “for making execution in withernam”] Hist. A writ of execution in withernam. • This is a type of capias in withernam directing the sheriff to take from the defendant goods equal in value to the goods that the defendant took from the plaintiff.

de executione iudicii (dee ek-sə-kyoo-shee-oh-nee joo-dish-ee-i), n. [Law Latin “of execution of judgment”] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff or bailiff to execute a judgment.

de exemplificatione (dee ig-zem-pli-fi-kay-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin “of exemplification”] A writ ordering the transcription of an original record.

de exoneratione sectae (dee ig-zon-ə-ray-shee-oh-nee sek-tee), n. [Law Latin “of exoneration of suit”] Hist. A writ exempting the king’s ward from being sued in any court lower than the Court of Common Pleas (such as a county court, hundred court, leet, or court baron) during the time of the wardship.

de expensis civium et burgensium (dee ek-spen-sis siv-ee-əm et bər-jen-see-əm), n. [Law Latin “for levying the expenses of burgesses”] Hist. A writ ordering the sheriff to levy the expenses of each citizen and burgess of Parliament.

de expensis militum levandis (dee ek-spen-sis mil-ə-təm lə-van-dis), n. [Law Latin “for levying the expenses of knights”] Hist. A writ ordering the sheriff to levy an allowance for knights of the shire in Parliament.

deface (di-fays), vb. (14c) 1. To mar or destroy (a written instrument, signature, or inscription) by obliteration, erasure, or superinscription. 2. To detract from the value of (a coin) by punching, clipping, cutting, or shaving. 3. To mar or injure (a building, monument, or other structure). — defacement, n.

defacere. See DIFFACERE.

de facto (di fak-toh also dee or day), adj. [Law Latin “in point of fact”] (17c) 1. Actual; existing in fact; having effect even though not formally or legally recognized  2. Illegitimate but in effect . Cf. DE JURE.

de facto adoption. See ADOPTION.

de facto blockade. See BLOCKADE.

de facto contract of sale. See CONTRACT.

de facto corporation. See CORPORATION.

de facto court. See COURT.

de facto dissolution. See DISSOLUTION.

de facto father. See de facto parent under PARENT.

de facto government. See GOVERNMENT.

de facto judge. See JUDGE.

de facto marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

de facto merger. See MERGER.

de facto mother. See de facto parent under PARENT.

de facto officer. See officer de facto under OFFICER (1).

de facto parent. See PARENT.

de facto segregation. See SEGREGATION.

de facto stepparent adoption. See second-parent adoption under ADOPTION.

de facto taking. See TAKING (2).

defalcation (dee-fal-kay-shən), n. (15c) 1. EMBEZZLEMENT. 2. Loosely, the failure to meet an obligation; a nonfraudulent default. 3. Archaic. A deduction; a setoff. — defalcate (di-fal-kayt or dee-), vb. — defalcator, n.

defalk (di-fawl-k), vb. Archaic. To deduct (a debt); to set off (a claim).

de falso iudicio (dee fal-soh or fawl-soh joo-dish-ee-oh), n. [Law Latin “of false judgment”] Hist. A writ of false judgment; a writ to reverse an inferior court’s ruling.

de falso moneta (dee fal-soh or fawl-soh mah-nee-tə), n. [Law Latin “of false money”] Hist. The statute of Edward I providing that persons importing certain coins (called “pollards” and “crokards”) would forfeit both their goods and their lives.

defamacast (di-fam-ə-kast). (1997) Defamation by television or radio broadcast. • The word was first used in American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc. v. Simpson, 126 S.E.2d 873, 879 (Ga. Ct. App. 1962). Although Prosser called it “a barbarous word” (William Prosser, The Law of Torts 753 [4th ed. 1971]), another authority has said that “[t]he word seems to be quite apt” (Laurence H. Eldredge, The Law of Defamation § 12, at 77 [1978]). See DEFAMATION.

defamation, n. (14c) 1. The act of harming the reputation of another by making a false statement to a third person. • If the alleged defamation involves a matter of public concern, the plaintiff is constitutionally required to prove both the statement’s falsity and the defendant’s fault. 2. A false written or oral statement that damages another’s reputation. See LIBEL; SLANDER. Cf.

"Defamation is the publication of a statement which tends to lower a person in the estimation of right-thinking members of society generally; or which tends to make them shun or avoid that person." P.H. Winfield, A Textbook of the Law of Tort § 72, at 242 (5th ed. 1950).

"The wrong of defamation consists in the publication of a false and defamatory statement concerning another person without lawful justification. That person must be in being. Hence not only does an action of defamation not survive for or against the estate of a deceased person, but a statement about a deceased or unborn person is not actionable at the suit of his relatives, however great their pain and distress, unless the statement is in some way defamatory of them." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 138 (17th ed. 1977).

"For entirely too long a period of time, English and American law have recognized two distinct kinds of defamation based solely on the form in which it is published. Oral defamation is slander; written defamation is libel. Libel is a crime and a tort which subjects the defamer to tort liability without proof of special damages. Slander is not a common law crime and, with certain exceptions, does not subject the defamer to liability unless there is proof of special damages. Under this distinction in form alone the defamatory letter read only by its addressee and burned to ashes after being read is a more serious defamation than a defamatory statement spoken to an audience of 3,000 community leaders and molders of public opinion. This is utterly absurd and completely indefensible . . ." Laurence H. Eldredge, The Law of Defamation § 12, at 77 (1978).

"Defamation . . . is involved in two related harms, libel and slander. A familiar statement is that libel is written whereas slander is oral. This covers the idea in a general way but tends to mislead because defamation may be published without the use of words and hence be neither written nor oral. Thus libel may be perpetrated by hanging a person in effigy and slander, by sign or gesture." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 489 (3d ed. 1982).

defamation per quod. (1915) Defamation that either (1) is not apparent but is proved by extrinsic evidence showing its injurious meaning or (2) is apparent but is not a statement that is actionable per se. [Cases: Libel and Slander ↪ 33.]

defamation per se. (1928) A statement that is defamatory in and of itself and is not capable of an innocent meaning. [Cases: Libel and Slander ↪ 33.]

trade defamation. The damaging of a business by a false statement that tends to diminish the reputation of that business. • Trade defamation may be trade libel if it is recorded, or trade slander if it is not. — Also termed commercial defamation. Cf. TRADE DISPARAGEMENT. [Cases: Libel and Slander ↪ 130.]

defamation privilege. See litigation privilege under PRIVILEGE (1).

defamatory, adj. (16c) (Of a statement or communication) tending to harm a person's reputation, usu. by subjecting the person to public contempt, disgrace, or ridicule, or by adversely affecting the person's business. [Cases: Libel and Slander ↪ 6–14.]

"A communication is defamatory if it tends so to harm the reputation of another as to lower him in the estimation of the community or to deter third persons from associating or dealing with him." Restatement (First) of Torts § 559 (1938).

"No exhaustive definition of 'defamatory' emerges from the cases for, as Lord Reid once said, it is not for the judges to 'frame definitions or to lay down hard and fast rules. It is their function to enunciate principles and much that they say is intended to be illustrative or explanatory and not to be definitive' [Cassell & Co. Ltd. v. Broome (1972) AC 1027, 1085]. One can nevertheless achieve a working description by combining two statements, namely: a defamatory statement is one which injures the reputation of another by exposing him to hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or which tends to lower him in the esteem of right-thinking members of society." R.W.M. Dias & B.S. Markesinis, Tort Law 423–24 (2d ed. 1989).

defamatory communication. See DEFAMATORY STATEMENT.

defamatory libel. See LIBEL (1).

defamatory propaganda. See PROPAGANDA.

defamatory statement. A statement that tends to injure the reputation of a person referred to in it. • The statement is likely to lower that person in the estimation of reasonable people and in particular to cause that person to be regarded with feelings of hatred, contempt, ridicule, fear, or dislike. — Also termed defamatory communication. [Cases: Libel and Slander ↪ 6–14.]

defames (di-fay-meez or di-fahm), adj. [Law French] Infamous.

default (di-fawlt also dee-fawlt), n. (13c) The omission or failure to perform a legal or contractual duty; esp., the failure to pay a debt when due. [Cases: Contracts ↪ 312, 315.]

default (di-fawlt), vb. 1. To be neglectful; esp., to fail to perform a contractual obligation. 2. To fail to appear or answer. 3. To enter a default judgment against (a litigant).

defaultant (di-fawl-tənt), adj. In default; having defaulted. See DEFAULTER.

defaulter. 1. A person who is in default. 2. A person who misappropriates or fails to account for money held in the person's official or fiduciary capacity. — Also termed defaultant.

default judgment. (16c) 1. A judgment entered against a defendant who has failed to plead or otherwise defend against the plaintiff's claim. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↪ 2411; Judgment ↪ 92.] 2. A judgment entered as a penalty against a party who does not comply with an order, esp. an order to comply with a discovery request. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 55(b). — Also termed judgment by default. See JUDGMENT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↪ 1278, 2820; Pretrial Procedure ↪ 46.]

nil-dicit default judgment (nil dī-sit). [Latin "he says nothing"] (2002) A judgment for the plaintiff entered after the defendant fails to file a timely answer, often after the defendant appeared in the case by filing a preliminary motion. — Often shortened to nihil dicit. — Also termed nihil-dicit default judgment; judgment by nil dicit. [Cases: Judgment ↪ 106.]

no-answer default judgment. (1979) A judgment for the plaintiff entered after the defendant fails to timely answer or otherwise appear. [Cases: Judgment ⇨ 106.]

default jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

default of issue. See FAILURE OF ISSUE.

defeasance (di-feez-ənts), n. (15c) 1. An annulment or abrogation; VOIDANCE. 2. The fact or an instance of bringing an estate or status to an end, esp. by conditional limitation. 3. A condition upon the fulfillment of which a deed or other instrument is defeated or made void; a contractual provision containing such a condition. — Also termed defeasance clause. 4. Hist. A collateral deed made simultaneously with a conveyance and containing a condition by which the main deed might be defeated or made void. — Also spelled defeazance. — defease, vb.

"A defeazance is a collateral deed, made at the same time with a feoffment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally undone." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 327 (1766).

defeasance clause. A mortgage provision stating that the conveyance to the mortgagee will be ineffective if the mortgagor pays the debt on time. See DEFEASANCE (3). [Cases: Mortgages ⇨ 33.]

defeasible, adj. (16c) (Of an act, right, agreement, or position) capable of being annulled or avoided <defeasible deed>. See fee simple defeasible under FEE SIMPLE. — defeasibility, n.

defeasible deed. See DEED.

defeasible estate. See ESTATE (1).

defeasible fee simple. See fee simple defeasible under FEE SIMPLE.

defeasible interest. See INTEREST (2).

defeasible remainder. See REMAINDER.

defeasible title. See TITLE (2).

defeasive, adj. Rare. Capable of defeating .

defeat, vb. 1. To deprive (someone) of something expected, usu. by an antagonistic act <to defeat the opponent in an election>. 2. To annul or render (something) void <to defeat title>. 3. To vanquish; to conquer (someone or something) <to defeat the armies>. 4. To frustrate (someone or something) <the expenditures defeat the bill's purpose>.

defect, n. (15c) An imperfection or shortcoming, esp. in a part that is essential to the operation or safety of a product. — defective, adj. [Cases: Products Liability ⇨ 119.]

apparent defect. See patent defect.

design defect. (1954) An imperfection occurring when the seller or distributor could have reduced or avoided a foreseeable risk of harm by adopting a reasonable alternative design, and when, as a result of not using the alternative, the product or property is not reasonably safe. Cf. manufacturing defect. [Cases: Products Liability ⇨ 127, 128.] fatal defect. (18c) A serious defect capable of nullifying a contract.

hidden defect. (1896) A product imperfection that is not discoverable by reasonable inspection and for which a seller or lessor is generally liable if the flaw causes harm. • Upon discovering a hidden defect, a purchaser may revoke a prior acceptance. UCC § 2-608(1)(b). — Also termed latent defect; inherent defect. [Cases: Sales ⇨ 119.]

latent defect. See hidden defect.

manufacturing defect. (1925) An imperfection in a product that departs from its intended design even though all possible care was exercised in its assembly. Cf. design defect. [Cases: Products Liability ⇨ 125.]

marketing defect. (1980) 1. The failure to adequately warn of a potential risk of harm that is known or should have been known about a product or its foreseeable use. 2. The failure to adequately instruct the user about how to use a product safely. [Cases: Products Liability ⇨ 133.]

patent defect. (1827) A defect that is apparent to a normally observant person, esp. a buyer on a reasonable inspection. — Also termed apparent defect.

product defect. (1967) An imperfection in a product that has a manufacturing defect or design defect, or is faulty because of inadequate instructions or warnings. See manufacturing defect; design defect; marketing defect. [Cases: Products Liability ⇨ 122.]

defective, adj. (14c) 1. (Of a position, right, act, or process) lacking in legal sufficiency <defective execution of documents> <defective service of process>. 2. (Of a product) containing an imperfection or shortcoming in a part essential to the product's safe operation <defective wiring caused the accident>. [Cases: Products Liability ⇨ 119.]

defective condition. (1823) An unreasonably dangerous state that might well cause physical harm beyond that contemplated by the ordinary user or consumer who purchases the product. See PRODUCTS LIABILITY. [Cases: Products Liability ⇨ 119.]

defective performance. See PERFORMANCE.

defective pleading. See PLEADING (1).

defective process. See PROCESS.

defective product. See PRODUCT.

defective record. See RECORD.

defective title. See TITLE (2).

defective trust. See TRUST.

defective verdict. See VERDICT.

defect of form. (17c) An imperfection in the style, manner, arrangement, or nonessential parts of a legal document, as distinguished from a substantive defect. Cf. DEFECT OF SUBSTANCE.

defect of parties. (18c) A failure to include all indispensable parties in a lawsuit. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↪384; Parties ↪77, 81.] defect of reason. Archaic. 1. Mental illness. 2. Mental retardation.

defect of substance. (18c) An imperfection in the substantive part of a legal document, as by omitting an essential term. Cf. DEFECT OF FORM.

defectus (di-fek-təs), n. [fr. Latin deficere “to be deficient”] Hist. A defect; a deficiency.

defectus sanguinis (di-fek-təs sang-gwi-nis). [Latin “defect of blood”] Hist. A failure of issue, often resulting in an escheat. See ESCHEAT.

defence. See DEFENSE.

defend, vb. (14c) 1. To deny, contest, or oppose (an allegation or claim) <the corporation vigorously defended against the shareholder’s lawsuit>. 2. To represent (someone) as an attorney <the accused retained a well-known lawyer to defend him>.

defendant (di-fen-dənt). (14c) A person sued in a civil proceeding or accused in a criminal proceeding. — Abbr. D. Cf. PLAINTIFF.

John Doe defendant. An anonymous defendant labeled “John Doe” because the plaintiff does not, at the time of filing suit, know the person’s name. ● John Doe defendants are common in several situations, such as police-brutality lawsuits in which the plaintiff does not know the names of the officers allegedly at fault, and in some copyright-infringement lawsuits where defendants are identified only by Internet addresses. See JOHN DOE. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↪101; Parties ↪73.]

target defendant. In a case with multiple defendants, the one whom the plaintiff considers the primary source for any recovery of damages. ● Among several defendants, one is usu. the most blameworthy or has the most insurance or greatest assets, or both.

defendant in error. (18c) Archaic. In a case on appeal, the prevailing party in the court below. See APPELEE; RESPONDENT (1).

defendant score. (1982) A number taken from an established scale, indicating the relative seriousness of the defendant’s criminal history. Cf. CRIME SCORE.

defendant’s gain. (1882) The amount of money or the value of property that a criminal defendant has obtained by committing a crime. ● Some states, such as New York, consider the defendant’s gain when assessing a criminal fine or ordering restitution.

defendemus (di-fen-də-məs). [fr. Latin defendere] We will defend. ● This term was used in conveyancing to require the donor and the donor’s heirs to defend the donee against any attempted encumbrance not specifically agreed to. Although defendemus was not a warranty, it became part of the warranty clause “shall and will warrant and forever defend.”

defender. 1. One who defends, such as the defendant in a lawsuit, a person using self-defense, or defense counsel. 2. PUBLIC DEFENDER.

defendere (di-fen-də-ree), vb. [Law Latin] To deny; to defend.

defendere se per corpus suum (di-fen-də-ree see pər kor-pəs s[y]oo-əm), vb. [Law Latin “to defend himself by his own body”] Hist. To agree to a trial by judicial combat; to agree to a duel.

defendere unica manu (di-fen-də-ree yoo-nə-kə man-yoo), n. [Law Latin “to defend with one hand”] Hist. A denial of an accusation under oath.

Defender of the Faith. See DEFENSOR FIDELI.

defendour (day-fon-duur), n. [Law French] Hist. A defendant; the party accused in an appeal.

defeneration (dee-fen-ə-ray-shən), n. [fr. Latin de “of” + foenero “to lend upon usury”] Hist. The act of lending money at a usurious interest rate.

defenestration (dee-fen-ə-stray-shən). (17c) The act of throwing someone or something out a window. — defenestrate, vb.

defense (di-fen[t]s). (16c) 1. A defendant’s stated reason why the plaintiff or prosecutor has no valid case; esp., a defendant’s answer, denial, or plea <her defense was that she was 25 miles from the building at the time of the robbery>. [Cases: Criminal Law ↪31.]

“Defense is defined to be that which is alleged by a party proceeded against in an action or suit, as a reason why the plaintiff should not recover or establish that which he seeks by his complaint or petition.” Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 240 (2d ed. 1899).

affirmative defense. (1837) A defendant’s assertion of facts and arguments that, if true, will defeat the plaintiff’s or prosecution’s claim, even if all the allegations in the complaint are true. ● The defendant bears the burden of proving an affirmative defense. Examples of affirmative defenses are duress (in a civil case) and insanity and self-defense (in a criminal case). — Also termed plea in avoidance; plea in justification. Cf. negative defense; CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↪31; Federal Civil Procedure ↪751; Pleading ↪76, 78, 130.]

capacity defense. (1967) A defense based on the defendant’s inability to be held accountable for an illegal act or the plaintiff’s inability to prosecute a lawsuit (as when the plaintiff was a corporation, but has lost its corporate charter). See CAPACITY.

choice-of-evils defense. See lesser-evils defense.

collateral defense (kə-lat-ə-rəl). Criminal law. A defense of justification or excuse not involving a rebuttal of the allegation and therefore collateral to the elements that the prosecutor must prove. See EXCUSE (2); JUSTIFICATION (2). [Cases: Criminal Law ↪38.]

cultural defense. 1. A criminal defendant's assertion that because an admitted act is not a crime in the perpetrator's culture or native land, it should not be judged by the laws of the place where it was committed. • This cultural defense is asserted as an affirmative defense to a criminal charge. 2. The defense that the actor's mental state at the time the alleged crime was committed was heavily influenced by cultural factors. • This is not a complete defense but a mitigating one, pleaded to reduce the charges, the sentence, or both. See FEMALE GENITAL MUTILATION. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻34.]

defense of habitation. The defense that conduct constituting a criminal offense is justified if an aggressor unjustifiably threatens the defendant's place of abode or premises and the defendant engages in conduct that is (1) harmful to the aggressor, (2) sufficient to protect that place of abode or premises, and (3) reasonable in relation to the harm threatened. — Also termed defense of premises. See CASTLE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Assault and Battery ↻69; Criminal Law ↻38, Homicide ↻759.]

defense of honesty. See honesty defense.

defense of inequitable conduct. Patents. A defense to an action for patent infringement, made by charging the plaintiff with breaching the duty of candor and good faith. • To succeed, the defendant must show that, in the patent prosecution, the plaintiff intentionally withheld material information from or misled the examiner. Inequitable conduct is a combination of two former defenses: unclean hands and fraud on the Patent Office. [Cases: Patents ↻97.]

derivative defense. (1972) A defense that rebuts the criminal elements that a prosecutor must establish to justify the submission of a criminal case to a jury. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻31.]

designer defense. A novel defense based on diminished capacity attributed to stress or impairment. • The phrase derives from the fact that the defense is tailored to the defendant and the circumstances of the crime. Examples include extraordinary reactions to snack food (the Twinkie defense), unconsciousness or sleepwalking, and postpartum psychosis. See AUTOMATISM. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻46; Homicide ↻815, 816.]

dilatory defense (dīl-ə-tor-ee). (1845) A defense that temporarily obstructs or delays a lawsuit but does not address the merits. • Examples of dilatory defenses include misjoinder, nonjoinder, res judicata, misnomer, lack of capacity to sue, another action pending, statute of limitations, prematurity, unripeness, release, and settlement.

dwelling defense. See CASTLE DOCTRINE.

emphy-suit defense. A defense in which a high-ranking officer or director in an organization claims ignorance of any wrongdoing by subordinates.

equitable defense. (18c) A defense formerly available only in a court of equity but now maintainable in a court of law. • Examples include mistake, fraud, illegality, failure of consideration, forum non conveniens, laches, estoppel, and unclean hands.

frivolous defense. (18c) A defense that has no basis in fact or law.

full defense. A technical common-law defensive plea, stated at length and without abbreviation. • This plea is obsolete because of the pleading requirements in federal and state rules of civil procedure.

general-justification defense. See lesser-evils defense.

honesty defense. Rare. An assertion that the defendant acted honestly and in good faith. • This defense, almost unique to civil suits, is rarely raised. For example, a defendant may assert honesty as a defense to a charge of fraudulent misrepresentation. — Also termed defense of honesty. Cf. CLAIM OF RIGHT (1). [Cases: Fraud ↻36.]

imperfect defense. (1835) A defense that fails to meet all legal requirements and usu. results only in a reduction in grade or sentence rather than an acquittal, as when a defendant is charged with manslaughter rather than murder because the defendant, while defending another, used unreasonable force to repel the attack. See imperfect self-defense under SELF-DEFENSE. Cf. perfect defense.

inconsistent defense. (1852) A defense so contrary to another defense that the acceptance of one requires abandonment of the other. • A person accused of murder, for example, cannot claim both self-defense and the alibi of having been in a different city when the murder took place. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻43.5.]

innocent-owner defense. In forfeiture action, an affirmative defense in which the owner of property (such as real estate or money) asserts that another person committed the wrongful act or omission while using the property without the owner's knowledge or consent. See 18 USCA § 983(d). See civil forfeiture under FORFEITURE. [Cases: Controlled Substances ↻174; Forfeitures ↻4.]

insanity defense. See INSANITY DEFENSE. issuable defense. (1847) Common-law pleading. A plea on the merits setting forth a legal defense. Cf. issuable plea under PLEA (3).

justification defense. See JUSTIFICATION DEFENSE.

legal defense. (17c) A complete and adequate defense in a court of law.

lesser-evils defense. (1982) The defense that, while the defendant may have caused the harm or evil that would ordinarily constitute a criminal offense, in the present case the defendant has not caused a net harm or evil because of justifying circumstances and therefore should be exculpated. — Also termed choice-of-evils defense; necessity; general-justification defense.

meritorious defense (mer-ə-tor-ee-əs). (18c) 1. A defense that addresses the substance or essentials of a case rather than dilatory or technical objections. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷ 2450, 2651.1; Judgment ↷ 145, 379, 447.] 2. A defense that appears likely to succeed or has already succeeded.

negative defense. A defendant's outright denial of the plaintiff's allegations without additional facts pleaded by way of avoidance. Cf. affirmative defense. [Cases: Pleading ↷ 76.]

new-value defense. Bankruptcy. A defense to a suit to recover preferential payments whereby the transferee of the payments can reduce liability by the amount of consideration or value that the transferee provided to the transferor after a suspect transfer. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↷ 2613.]

ostrich defense. A criminal defendant's claim not to have known of the criminal activities of an associate.

partial defense. (1818) A defense going either to part of the action or toward mitigation of damages.

pass-on defense. An antitrust defense that a member of the distributive chain who was overcharged or undercharged passed on the price adjustment to reflect the charge and thereby suffered no damage. — Also termed passing on. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷ 908.] peremptory defense (pər-emp-tər-ee). (1860) A defense that questions the plaintiff's legal right to sue or contends that the right to sue has been extinguished.

perfect defense. (1817) A defense that meets all legal requirements and results in the defendant's acquittal. See perfect self-defense under SELF-DEFENSE. Cf. imperfect defense.

pretermitted defense (pree-tər-mit-id). (1947) A defense available to a party that must be pleaded at the right time or be waived.

sham defense. (1853) A fictitious, untrue defense, made in bad faith.

sleepwalking defense. See AUTOMATISM.

SODDI. See SODDI DEFENSE.

true defense. A defense admitting that a defendant committed the charged offense, but seeking to avoid punishment based on a legal excuse (such as insanity) or justification (such as self-defense).

unconsciousness defense. See AUTOMATISM.

YYY-chromosome defense. See XYY-CHROMOSOME DEFENSE.

2. A defendant's method and strategy in opposing the plaintiff or the prosecution; a doctrine giving rise to such a method or strategy <the lawyer advised her client to adopt a passive defense and to avoid taking the witness stand>.

empty-chair defense. (1981) A trial tactic in a multi-party case whereby one defendant attempts to put all the fault on a defendant who plea-bargained or settled before trial or on a person who was neither charged nor named as a party.

malicious defense. Torts. A defendant's use of unfair, harassing, or illegal tactics to advance a frivolous or unmeritorious defense. • The elements of the tort are (1) the defendant's initiation, continuation, or procurement of proceedings; (2) knowledge that the defense lacks merit; (3) the assertion of the defense for a purpose other than to properly adjudicate the claim, such as to harass, annoy, or injure, or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation; (4) termination of the suit in the plaintiff's favor; and (5) harm to the plaintiff resulting from the proceeding. Damages are the same as in an action for malicious prosecution. A minority of states recognize the tort. Cf. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION. [Cases: Torts ↷ 437.]

Stalingrad defense. The strategy of wearing down the plaintiff by tenaciously fighting by whatever means anything the plaintiff presents and appealing every ruling favorable to the plaintiff, rather than presenting a meritorious case. • The tactic is named for the Russian city besieged by the Germans in World War II. The defenders refused to surrender and used every available tactic and tool to hold the attackers at bay until winter cut the enemy's supply lines, leaving the attackers with inadequate resources with which to continue the siege.

3. One or more defendants in a trial, as well as their counsel <the defense rests>. 4. Commercial law. A basis for avoiding liability on a negotiable instrument <the drawer asserted a real defense against the holder in due course>.

absolute defense. See real defense.

personal defense. (1950) An ordinary defense in a contract action — such as failure of consideration or nonperformance of a condition — that the maker or drawer of a negotiable instrument is precluded from raising against a person who has the rights of a holder in due course. See UCC § 3-305(b). • A personal defense can be asserted only against a transferee who is not a holder in due course. — Also termed limited defense.

real defense. A type of defense that is good against any possible claimant, so that the maker or drawer of a negotiable instrument can raise it even against a holder in due course. • The ten real defenses are (1) fraud in the factum, (2) forgery of a necessary signature, (3) adjudicated insanity that, under state law, renders the contract void from its inception, (4) material alteration of the instrument, (5) infancy, which renders the contract voidable under state law, (6) illegality that renders the underlying contract void, (7) duress, (8) discharge in bankruptcy, or any discharge known to the holder in due course, (9) a suretyship defense (for example, if the holder knew

5. Measures taken by a country or individual to protect against an attack. See SELF-DEFENSE; NATIONAL DEFENSE (1).

self-defense. See SELF-DEFENSE.

6. A country's military establishment. See NATIONAL DEFENSE (2). — Also spelled in all senses (esp. in BrE) defence. 7. TAKEOVER DEFENSE.

definitive sentence. See determinate sentence under SENTENCE.

deflation. n. A general decline in the price of goods and services. Cf. INFLATION; DISINFLATION. — deflate, vb. — deflationary, adj.

deforce, vb. (15c) 1. To keep (lands) from the true owner by means of force. 2. To oust another from possession by means of force. 3. To detain (a creditor's money) unjustly and forcibly. — deforciant, n.

"The character of the action of debt is well illustrated by the form of the writ as given by Glanville. It directs the sheriff to order the debtor to render a stated sum which he owes to the plaintiff, 'and whereof the plaintiff complains that the defendant unjustly deforces him,' and, if he will not obey, he is to be summoned before the King's Court. The plaintiff is 'deforced' of money just as in a writ of right he is 'deforced' of land. It is true that the term 'deforces' disappeared from the writ shortly after Glanville's time, the word debet taking its place; but this seems to have been a matter of form, not of substance. The plaintiff sought to recover the money due as his property." William F. Walsh, Outlines of the History of English and American Law 411 (1924).

deforcement. 1. An act of keeping lands from the true owner by force. 2. An act of ousting another from possession by means of force. 3. An act of detaining a creditor's money unjustly and forcibly.

deforciant (di-for-shənt), n. [fr. Law Latin deforcians "a deforcer"] 1. A person who prevents another from taking possession of property. 2. The defendant in an action of fine. See FINE (1).

deforciare (di-for-shee-air-ee), vb. [fr. Law Latin deforciare "to deforce"] Hist. To withhold property (such as land and tenements) from the true owner.

deforciatio (di-for-shee-ay-shee-oh), n. [Law Latin "a distress"] Hist. A seizure of goods to satisfy a debt.

de forisfactura maritagii (dee for-is-fak-tyoor-ə mar-ə-tay-jee-i), n. [Law Latin "of forfeiture of marriage"] Hist. A writ forfeiting a marriage.

defossion (di-fosh-in), n. [fr. Latin de "down" + fodere "dig"] The punishment of being buried alive.

de frangentibus prisonam (dee fran-jen-ti-bəs priz-ə-nəm), n. [Latin "of those who break prison"] Hist. The statute providing that an escaped prisoner will not be put to death or forfeit a limb simply for escaping from prison unless the original crime required that penalty upon conviction. 1 Edw. 2. defraud, vb. (14c) To cause injury or loss to (a person) by deceit. See FRAUD.

defraudation. The perpetration of a fraud; the act of committing fraud.

defrauder. See FRAUDEASOR.

defunct, adj. Dead; extinct <defunct corporation>.

defunct marriage. See MARRIAGE (1).

defunctus (di-fəŋk-təs), adj. [Latin] Dead, as in defunctus sine prole ("dead without (leaving) issue").

de furto (dee fər-toh), n. [Latin "of theft"] Hist. In England, a type of criminal appeal.

de futuro (dee fyuu-t[y]uur-oh). [Latin] Hist. Regarding the future; at a future time. • The phrase usu. appeared in reference to a marriage promise, which was not binding if it mentioned marriage at a future date. Cf. DE PRAESENTI.

degaster (day-gas-tay), vb. [fr. Old French dégaster "to spoil"] To waste.

de gestu et fama (dee jes-ty[y]oo et fay-mə), n. [Law Latin "of behavior and reputation"] Hist. A writ available to a person whose character and reputation had been impeached.

degradation (deg-rə-day-shən). (16c) 1. A reduction in rank, degree, or dignity; specif., censure of a clergy member by divestiture of holy orders, either by word or by a solemn divestiture of robes and other insignia. Cf. DEPOSITION (4); DEPRIVATION (4). 2. A moral or intellectual decadence or degeneration; a lessening of a person's or thing's character or quality <degradation of resources>. 3. A wearing down of something, as by erosion.

de gratia (dee gray-shee-ə). [Latin] Off favor; by grace, as in de speciali gratia ("of special grace or favor").

degree. (13c) 1. Generally, a classification or specification <degrees of proof>. 2. An incremental measure of guilt or negligence; a level based on the seriousness of an offense <murder in the first degree>. [Cases: Criminal Law ◊28.] 3. A stage in a process; a step in a series of steps toward an end <the statute went through several degrees of development>. 4. A stage in intensity . 5. In the line of descent, a measure of removal determining the proximity of a blood or marital relationship <the council member did not participate in the vote because he was related to one of the bidders within the first degree of consanguinity>. • In the civil law, and in the degree-of-relationship system used by many American jurisdictions, an intestate estate passes to the closest of kin, counting degrees of kinship. To calculate the degree of relationship of the decedent to the claimant, one counts the steps (one for each generation) up from the decedent to the nearest common ancestor of the decedent and the claimant, and on down to the claimant from the common ancestor. The total number of steps is the degree of relationship. For example, a decedent's cousin stands in the fourth degree of relationship. Degrees of relationship are used not only to determine who is the closest heir but also to establish the incest prohibition in marriage requirements. — Also termed degree of kin; degree of relationship; degree of descent. See AFFINITY (2); CONSANGUINITY. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ⇨22.] equal degree. (16c) A relationship between two or more relatives who are the same number of steps away from a common ancestor. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ⇨22.]

prohibited degree. (17c) A degree of relationship so close (as between brother and sister) that marriage between the persons is forbidden by law. • Generally, with slight variations from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, the law forbids marriages between all persons lineally related and within the third civil-law degree of relationship. That is, aunt-nephew and uncle-niece relations are prohibited. Prohibited degrees are also known as Levitical degrees, since the incest prohibition is pronounced in the Bible in Leviticus 18:6–18. — Also termed forbidden degree. [Cases: Marriage ⇨10.]

6. A title conferred on a graduate of a school, college, or university, either after the completion of required studies or in honor of special achievements <she began studying for the bar exam the day after receiving her law degree>. Cf. DIPLOMA (3).

degree of care. (17c) A standard of care to be exercised in a given situation. See CARE. [Cases: Negligence ⇨230.]

degree of crime. (1826) 1. A division or classification of a single crime into several grades of guilt, according to the circumstances surrounding the crime's commission, such as aggravating factors present or the type of injury suffered. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨28.] 2. A division of crimes generally, such as felonies or misdemeanors. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨27.]

degree of descent. See DEGREE (5).

degree of kin. See DEGREE (5).

degree of negligence. (18c) One of the varying levels of negligence typically designated as slight negligence, ordinary negligence, and gross negligence. See NEGLIGENCE. [Cases: Negligence ⇨272–276.]

"Although the common law concept of degrees of negligence has been criticized or repudiated in many jurisdictions, the usefulness of the view at common law that degrees of negligence exist is still recognized in a number of jurisdictions, particularly in regard to the distinction between ordinary and gross negligence. Furthermore, legislators have not been dissuaded from using the degrees of negligence concept when it is helpful to achieve a legislative purpose." 57A Am. Jur. 2d Negligence § 233, at 274 (1989).

degree of proof. 1. See BURDEN OF PROOF. 2. BURDEN OF PRODUCTION.

degree of relationship. See DEGREE (5).

de haerede deliberando illi qui habet custodiam terrae (dee hi-ree-dee di-lib-ə-ran-doh il-i kwī hay-bət kə-stoh-dee-əm ter-ee), n. [Law Latin "for delivering an heir to him who has wardship of the land"] Hist. A writ ordering the sheriff to deliver an heir to a person who had wardship.

de haerede ripto et abducto (dee hi-ree-dee rap-toh et ab-dək-toh), n. [Law Latin "of an heir ravished and carried away"] Hist. A writ allowing a lord to recover a ward who had been taken by another person.

de haeretico comburendo (dee hi-ret-i-koh kom-byə-ren-doh), n. [Law Latin "of burning a heretic"] Hist. 1. A writ ordering the execution by burning of a convicted heretic who refused to recant, or was convicted of heresy again after recanting. — Also termed writ de haeretico comburendo.

"[W]e find among our ancient precedents a writ de haeretico comburendo, which is thought by some to be as ancient as the common law itself. However, it appears from thence, that the conviction of heresy by the common law was not in any petty ecclesiastical court, but before the archbishop himself in a provincial synod; and that the delinquent was delivered over to the king to do as he should please with him: so that the crown had a control over the spiritual power, and might pardon the convict by issuing no process against him; the writ de haeretico comburendo being not a writ of course, but issuing only by the special direction of the king in council." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 46–47 (1769).

"But the case of Sawtre (1400) is a clear case in which the rule of the canon law was applied. He was convicted of heresy before the Bishop of Norwich and recanted his heresy. He fell again into heresy, and was condemned by the archbishop and his provincial Council, as a relapsed heretic. On this conviction the king issued a writ de haeretico comburendo. This case clearly shows that the common law recognized the rule of the canon law . . ." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 617 (7th ed. 1956).

2. The first English penal law against heresy, enacted in 1401 (2 Hen. 4, ch. 15). • The law authorized the burning of defendants who relapsed or refused to abandon their heretical opinions.

"The first English statute that denounced the penalty of death against heretics was passed in the year 1401. Whether before that statute the law that was in force in our land demanded or suffered that such persons should be burnt is a question that has been eagerly debated; on it in the days of Elizabeth and James I depended the lives of Anabaptists and Arians; it has not yet lost its interest; but it is a question that buzzes in a vacuum, for until Lollardy became troublesome there was too little heresy in England to beget a settled course of procedure." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 544 (1899).

deherison (dee-her-i-zən). See DISINHERITANCE.

de homagio respectuando (dee hə-may-jee-oh ri-spektyoo-an-doh), n. [Law Latin “for respiting or postponing homage”] Hist. A writ to postpone an homage. See HOMAGE.

de homine capto in withernamium (dee hom-ə-nee kap-toh in with-ər-nay-mee-əm), n. [Law Latin “for taking a man in withernam”] Hist. A writ to seize and jail a person who took a bondman out of the county to keep the bondman from being replevied. • The defendant was jailed without bail until the bondman was returned. See WITHERNAM.

de homine replegiando (dee hom-ə-nee ri-plee-jee-an-doh), n. [Law Latin “for replevying a man”] A writ to replevy a person out of jail or out of the custody of another person after giving security that the replevied person will answer any charge.

“The writ de homine replegiando lies to replevy a man out of prison, or out of the custody of any private person, (in the same manner that chattels taken in distress may be replevied . . .) upon giving security to the sheriff that the man shall be forthcoming to answer any charge against him. And, if the person be conveyed out of the sheriff’s jurisdiction, the sheriff may return that he is eloiigned . . . upon which a process issues . . . to imprison the defendant himself, without bail . . . till he produces the party. But this writ is guarded with so many exceptions, that it is not an effectual remedy in numerous instances, especially where the crown is concerned.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 129 (1768).

dehors (də-hor or də-horz). [Law French] (18c) Outside; beyond the scope of <the court cannot consider the document because it is dehors the record>.

de identitate nominis (dee i-den-tə-tay-tee nom-ə-nis), n. [Law Latin “of identity of name”] Hist. A writ to free a person mistaken for someone else with the same name and then falsely arrested and imprisoned. — Also termed de idemptitate nominis.

de idiota inquirendo (dee id-ee-oh-tə in-kwi-ren-doh or in-kwə-ren-doh). [Latin “of inquiring concerning an idiot”] Hist. A writ directing the sheriff to open an inquiry before a jury of 12 into whether a person is an idiot, that is, mentally incapable of managing his or her personal affairs.

Dei gratia (dee-ī gray-shee-ə). [Latin] By the grace of God. • This phrase was often used in rulers’ titles to show that their authority was by divine right. It was also formerly used in titles of magistrates and other officers.

de iis qui ponendi sunt in assisis (dee i-əs kwī pə-nen-dī sənt in ə-sī-zəz), n. [Law Latin “of those who are to be put on assises”] Hist. The statute establishing juror qualifications. 21 Edw. 1.

dei iudicium (dee-ī joo-dish-ee-əm). [Latin “God’s judgment”] A trial by ordeal. See ORDEAL.

de libera piscaria (dee lib-ər-ə pi-skair-ee-ə), n. [Law Latin “of free fishery”] Hist. A writ allowing an exclusive right to fish on public navigable water. • This was a form of quod permittat.

deliberate (di-lib-ə-rit), adj. (15c) 1. Intentional; premeditated; fully considered. 2. Unimpulsive; slow in deciding.

deliberate (di-lib-ə-rate), vb. (Of a court, jury, etc.) to weigh and analyze all the evidence after closing arguments <the jury deliberated for 12 hours before reaching a verdict>.

deliberate elicitation. (1966) Criminal procedure. The purposeful yet covert drawing forth of an incriminating response (usu. not during a formal interrogation) from a suspect whose Sixth Amendment right to counsel has attached but who has not waived that right. • Deliberate elicitation may occur, for example, when a police officer engages an arrested suspect in conversation on the way to the police station. Deliberate elicitation violates the Sixth Amendment. Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 84 S.Ct. 1199 (1964). See MASSIAH RULE.

deliberate indifference. See INDIFFERENCE.

deliberate speed, with all. (1817) As quickly as the maintenance of law and order and the welfare of the people will allow, esp. with respect to the desegregation of public schools. Brown v. Board of Educ., 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686 (1954). [Cases: Schools ⇨ 13(9).]

deliberation, n. (14c) The act of carefully considering issues and options before making a decision or taking some action; esp., the process by which a jury reaches a verdict, as by analyzing, discussing, and weighing the evidence. See CONSIDERATION (3). [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 857(1); Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1974; Trial ⇨ 306.] — deliberate (di-lib-ə-rayt), vb.

deliberative assembly. See ASSEMBLY.

deliberative-process privilege. (1977) The principle that a decision-maker's thoughts and how they led to a decision are not subject to revelation or scrutiny. See U.S. v. Morgan, 313 U.S. 409, 61 S.Ct. 999 (1941). • An exception to the rule may be allowed if a party can clearly show that the decision resulted from bias, bad faith, misconduct, or illegal or unlawful action. The privilege is meant to encourage open and independent discussion among those who develop government policy. [Cases: Privileged Communications and Confidentiality ⇨ 361.] — Also termed mental-process privilege.

de libero homine exhibendo (dee lib-ər-oh hom-ə-nee ek-si-ben-doh). [Latin “for the production of a free man”] Roman law. An interdict requiring a free person to be produced before a magistrate.

de libertatibus allocandis (dee lib-ər-tay-tə-bəs al-ə-kan-dis), n. [Law Latin “for allowing liberties”] Hist. A writ allowing a person entitled to certain liberties to obtain them.

de licentia transfretandi (dee li-sen-shee-ə trans-frə-tan-di), n. [Law Latin “of permission to cross the sea”] Hist. A writ ordering wardens of seaports, on certain conditions, to permit any person named in the writ to cross the sea.

delict (di-lik), n. [Latin delictum “an offense”] (16c) Roman & civil law. A violation of the law; esp., a wrongful act or omission giving rise to a claim for compensation; TORT. — Also termed (in Roman law) delictum; (in French law) délit. [Cases: Torts ⇨ 107.]

private delict. A wrong regarded primarily as a matter of compensation between individuals.

public delict. A wrong for which the community as a whole takes steps to punish the offender. Cf. public tort under TORT.

quasi-delict. 1. Roman law. A residuary category of private wrongs, characterized by either vicarious or strict liability.

“QUASI-DELICT . . . Justinian enumerates four cases of obligations said to arise quasi ex delicto. The implication seems to be that in all of them the law creates a liability though the defendant may not in fact be to blame. The cases are the following: — (1) The judge who ‘makes the case his own’ . . . incurs a penalty fixed by the magistrate at discretion . . . (2) If anything was thrown, or poured, from an upper room . . . the occupier was liable for double the damage . . . (3) If a thing was kept placed or suspended over a way used by the public . . . there was a penalty . . . which might be recovered from the occupier . . . (4) Ship-owners, innkeepers and stable-keepers were liable for damage or theft committed by slaves or free persons in their employ . . .” R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 401-02 (4th ed. 1956).

2. See quasi-offense under OFFENSE (2). 3. Scots law. Tortious conduct that is negligent, as opposed to intentional.

delictal. See DELICTUAL.

deliction (di-lik-shən). (1966) The loss of land by gradual, natural changes, such as erosion resulting from a change in the course of a river or stream. Cf. ACCRETION (1); ALLUVION; AVULSION (2); EROSION. [Cases:

Navigable Waters ↪ 44; Waters and Water Courses ↪ 93.]

delictual (di-lik-chə-wəl), adj. Of, relating to, or involving a delict; TORTIOUS. — Also termed delictal.

delictual fault. See FAULT.

delictum. See DELICT.

delimitation. The act of marking a boundary or fixing a limit.

delirium. (16c) 1. A disordered mental state, often occurring during illness. 2. Exaggerated excitement. 3. A delusion; a hallucination.

delirium tremens. An illness characterized by hallucinations and violent trembling, induced by excessive consumption of alcohol over a long period. — Also termed mania a potu; settled insanity. — Abbr. d.t.'s. delisting, n. The suspension of the privilege of having a security listed on an exchange. • Delisting results from failing to meet the exchange's listing requirements, as by not complying with the minimum net-asset requirement. Cf. DEREGISTRATION. [Cases: Exchanges ↪ 13.10.] — delist, vb.

délit. See DELICT.

deliverance. (14c) 1. A jury's verdict. 2. A judicial opinion or judgment. 3. A court's order directing that a person in custody be released; esp., such an order by an ecclesiastical court. — Also termed writ of deliverance. 4. Archaic. In a replevin action, a writ ordering the redelivery of goods to the owner.

second deliverance. Hist. A second replevin remedy after the plaintiff has been nonsuited and the distrained property has been returned to the defendant. — Also termed writ of second deliverance.

"And at the common law, the plaintiff might have brought another replevin, and so in infinitum, to the intolerable vexation of the defendant. Wherefore the statute of Westm. 2, c. 2 restrains the plaintiff, when nonsuited, from suing any fresh replevin, but allows him a judicial writ issuing out of the original record, and called a writ of second deliverance, in order to have the same distress again delivered to him, on giving the like security as before. And, if the plaintiff be a second time nonsuit, or if the defendant has judgment upon verdict . . . he shall have a writ or return irreplevisable; after which no writ of second deliverance shall be allowed." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 150 (1767).

5. Such a release (as in sense 3) or redelivery (as in sense 4).

delivered at frontier. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must (1) clear the goods for export, (2) arrange and pay for transportation, and (3) deliver the goods to a specified place on the importing nation's border. • The seller's delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the goods arrive at the designated point and are placed at the disposal of the buyer. This term is generally used when the delivery place is on land, but it places no explicit restrictions on the mode of carriage. If the delivery place is a border port and delivery is complete either onboard or alongside the vessel, the term delivered ex ship or delivered ex quay is preferred. — Abbr. DAF. Cf. DELIVERED EX SHIP; DELIVERED EX QUAY.

delivered duty paid. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must (1) clear the goods for export, (2) bear the costs of carriage, (3) pay the buyer's import duties, and (4) make the goods available to the buyer on board the carrier at the destination. • The seller's delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the seller's carrier arrives at the agreed destination. This term is generally used when the delivery place is on land, but it places no explicit restrictions on the mode of carriage. If the delivery point is a port and delivery is complete either onboard or alongside the vessel, the term delivered ex ship or delivered ex quay is preferred. — Abbr. DDP. Cf. DELIVERED DUTY UNPAID; DELIVERED EX SHIP; DELIVERED EX QUAY.

delivered duty unpaid. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must (1) clear the goods for export, (2) bear the costs of carriage (apart from unloading charges and import duties), and (3) make the goods available to the buyer on board the carrier at the destination. • The seller's delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the seller's carrier arrives at the agreed destination. The buyer is responsible for all import duties. This term is generally used when the delivery place is on land, but it places no explicit restrictions on the mode of carriage. If the delivery point is a port and delivery is complete either onboard or alongside the vessel, the term delivered ex ship or delivered ex quay is preferred. — Abbr. DDU. Cf. DELIVERED DUTY PAID; DELIVERED EX SHIP; DELIVERED EX QUAY.

delivered ex quay. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must (1) clear the goods for export, (2) bear the costs of transportation to the port named by the importing buyer, and (3) place the goods alongside the ship in the port of destination. • The seller's delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the goods are unloaded in the destination port. This term is used only when goods are transported by sea or inland waterway. — Abbr. DEQ. Cf. DELIVERED EX SHIP; FREE ALONGSIDE SHIP.

delivered ex ship. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must clear the goods for export and bear the costs of transportation (apart from unloading charges and import duties) to the importing nation's port of destination. • The seller's delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the seller's carrier arrives at the destination port. This term is used only when goods are transported by sea or inland waterway. — Abbr. DES. Cf. DELIVERED EX QUAY; FREE ON BOARD.

delivery, n. (15c) 1. The formal act of transferring something, such as a deed; the giving or yielding possession or control of something to another. 2. The thing so transferred or conveyed. Cf. LIVERY. — deliver, vb.

absolute delivery. (1808) A delivery that is complete upon the actual transfer of the instrument from the grantor's possession. • Such a delivery does not usu. depend on recordation.

actual delivery. (17c) The act of giving real and immediate possession to the buyer or the buyer's agent.

conditional delivery. (18c) A delivery that passes possession subject to the happening of a specified event. • Possession passes immediately; title remains conditional.

constructive delivery. (18c) An act that amounts to a transfer of title by operation of law when actual transfer is impractical or impossible. • For example, the delivery of a deposit-box key by someone who is ill and immobile may amount to a constructive delivery of the box's contents even though the box may be miles away. For the three traditional types of constructive delivery, see ATTORNMENT; CONSTITUTUM POSSESSORIUM; TRADITIO BREVI MANU.

good delivery. Securities. A security's delivery when the certificate (1) is in good condition, (2) belongs to the person transferring it, (3) is properly indorsed, and jail delivery. See JAIL DELIVERY.

(4) is accompanied by any legal documents necessary for its negotiability.

second delivery. (17c) A legal delivery by the depository of a deed placed in escrow. [Cases: Deeds ↷ 58; Deposits and Escrows ↷ 21.]

symbolic delivery. (18c) The constructive delivery of the subject matter of a sale or gift by the actual delivery of an article that represents the item, that renders access to it possible, or that provides evidence of the title to it, such as the key to a warehouse or a bill of lading for goods on shipboard. [Cases: Sales ↷ 162.]

unconditional delivery. (18c) A delivery that immediately passes both possession and title and that takes effect immediately.

delivery bond. See forthcoming bond under BOND (2).

delivery in escrow. (1842) The physical transfer of something to an escrow agent to be held until some condition is met, at which time the agent will release it. • An example of such a delivery is a stock buyer's transfer of cash to a bank that will give the seller the cash upon receiving the stock certificates. This type of delivery creates immediate conditional rights in the promisee. The device may be used to create an option contract in which the promisee has the option. See ESCROW. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows ↷ 14.]

delivery of deed. (18c) The placing of a deed in the grantee's hands or within the grantee's control. • By this act, the grantor shows an intention that the deed operates immediately as a conveyance. A deed may also be held to be delivered when the grantor manifests the intention to complete the conveyance, regardless of actual delivery. [Cases: Deeds ↷ 54–67.]

delivery order. A written order to deliver goods, directed to a warehouseman, carrier, or other person who ordinarily issues warehouse receipts or bills of lading. UCC § 7-102(1)(d).

demand letter. (1911) A letter by which one party explains its legal position in a dispute and requests that the recipient take some action (such as paying money owed), or else risk being sued. • Under some statutes (esp. consumer-protection laws), a demand letter is a prerequisite for filing a lawsuit.

demand loan. See call loan under LOAN.

demand note. 1. See NOTE (1). 2. See DEMAND INSTRUMENT.

demand of oyer. Hist. The assertion of a party's right to hear, read, or inspect a deed of which profert is made by the opposing party in a pleading. See OYER (3); PROFERT.

demand of view. Hist. In a real action, a request by a defendant (called a tenant) to see the thing at issue to ascertain its identity and the circumstances of the claim. • If a real action was brought against a tenant who did not know what land was at issue, the tenant might demand a view. See VIEW (4).

demand-pull inflation. See INFLATION.

demand registration rights. See REGISTRATION RIGHTS.

demandress. Archaic. A female demandant. See DEMANDANT.

de manucapione (dee man-yə-kap-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin "of manucapion"] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to release on sufficient bail an accused felon whose initial offer of bail had been rejected.

de manutenendo (dee man-yə-tə-nen-doh), n. [Law Latin "of maintenance"] Hist. A writ against a person who has wrongfully meddled in a lawsuit by providing assistance to a party to continue the litigation. See MAINTENANCE (6).

demarcation line. Int'l law. A provisional border having the function of separating territories under different jurisdictions, usu. established when the political situation does not admit a final boundary arrangement. — Also termed line of demarcation.

démarche (day-mahrsh). [French "gaît; walk"] An oral or written diplomatic statement, esp. one containing a demand, offer, protest, threat, or the like. — Also spelled demarche. See AIDE-MÉMOIRE.

de maritaggio amisso per defaultam (dee mar-ə-tay-jee-oh ə-mis-oh pər də-fawl-təm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A writ available to a tenant of a frankmarriage to regain land lost by default.

dematerialized security. See uncertificated security under SECURITY.

de me (dee mee). [Latin] Of me. • This phrase appeared in feudal grants to confirm that a superior lord's permission was not needed for the conveyance. This was distinguished from a conveyance a me de superiore meo ("from me of my superior"), in which the estate is to be held of the superior, and is invalid unless confirmed by the superior. Cf. A ME.

demeanor. (15c) Outward appearance or behavior, such as facial expressions, tone of voice, gestures, and the hesitation or readiness to answer questions. • In evaluating credibility, the jury may consider the witness's demeanor. [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 315.]

demeanor evidence. See EVIDENCE.

demease (di-meez), n. Hist. Death. See DEMISE.

de medietate linguae (dee mee-dee-ə-tay-tee ling-gwee). [Law Latin] Of half-tongue. • This term describes a jury made up of an equal number of natives and aliens. Edward III originally provided for such a jury in commercial cases when one party was an alien. It was later extended to criminal cases. If enough aliens could not be found, trial proceeded with the available number.

de medio (dee mee-dee-oh), n. [Law Latin "of mesne"] Hist. A writ against a mesne (i.e., middle) lord to protect an undertenant from harassment by a paramount lord for rent actually due from the mesne lord. — Also termed writ of mesne.

de melioribus damnis (dee mee-lee-or-ə-bəs dam-nis). [Law Latin] Of the better damages. • This term describes a plaintiff's election of the defendant against which to take judgment when the jury has mistakenly awarded separate damages against two or more defendants for a joint tort. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff could take a judgment against the defendant that had been assessed the greatest damages, and then enter a nolle prosequi against the others. [Cases: Judgment ⇨ 240, 256(4, 5).]

demembration (dee-mem-bray-shən), n. The cutting off of a limb; dismemberment; mutilation.

demented, adj. Not of sound mind; insane.

dementenant en avant (də-men-tə-nahnt on ə-vahnt). [Law French] From this time forward.

de mercatoribus (dee mər-kə-tor-ə-bəs), n. [Latin "of merchants"] Hist. The title of two statutes enacted in the 11th and 13th years of the reign of Edward I, providing that the land of a business debtor could be held by a creditor as security until the debt was paid.

"But by the statute de mercatoribus . . . the whole of a man's lands was liable to be pledged in a statute merchant, for a debt contracted in trade; though one-half of them was liable to be taken in execution for any other debt of the owner." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 161 (1765).

demesne (di-mayn or di-meen), n. [French] (14c) 1. At common law, land held in one's own right, and not through a superior; esp., land attached to a manor and reserved for the court's own use. 2. Domain; realm. — Also spelled demain.

ancient demesne. Hist. A manor that was held by the Crown at the time of William the Conqueror and was recorded in the Domesday Book.

demesne as of fee. Hist. Complete ownership of something.

demesne land. See LAND.

demesne land of the Crown. See Crown land under LAND.

demesnial (di-may-nee-əl or di-meen-ee-əl), adj. Of or relating to a demesne.

demi (dem-ee), n. [French] Half; the half. • The term is most often a combining form, as in demi-sangue.

demi-dietas (dem-ee-dī-ə-tas), n. [Law Latin] A half; a moiety.

demilitarization. Int'l law. The process by which a country obligates itself not to station military forces — or to maintain military installations — in specified areas or zones within its territory.

demilitarized zone. Int'l law. A territorial area in a country or between countries in which no military forces or military installations are stationed or maintained.

demimark. Hist. Half a mark; money equal to six shillings and eight pence, required to be tendered in a writ of right to force the demandant to prove seisin. — Also termed half-mark.

de minimis (də min-ə-mis), adj. [Latin "of the least"] (1952) 1. Trifling; minimal. 2. (Of a fact or thing) so insignificant that a court may overlook it in deciding an issue or case. 3. DE MINIMIS NON CURAT LEX.

de minimis non curat lex (də min-ə-mis non kyoor-at leks). [Latin] The law does not concern itself with trifles. — Often shortened to de minimis.

de minimis test. Copyright. A judicial test for determining whether a contributor to a joint work is an author for legal purposes, based on whether the joint effort itself is an original expression that qualifies for copyright protection. • This test has been rejected in favor of the copyrightability test by most courts that have addressed the issue. Cf. COPYRIGHTABILITY TEST. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 41(3).]

de minis (dee min-is), n. [Latin “of threats”] Hist. A writ ordering a person to keep the peace when the person has threatened another person with bodily harm or property destruction.

deminutio (dee-mi-n[y]oo-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin deminuere “taking away”] Roman law. A deprivation or loss. • The term appeared, for example, in the phrase capitis deminutio “the loss of civil status.” — Also spelled diminutio. See CAPITIS DEMINUTIO. Pl. deminutiones (dee-mi-n[y]oo-shee-oh-nee-z).

demisanguae (dem-ee-sang). [Law French] Hist. Half-blood; blood on either the father’s or the mother’s side. — Also termed demy-sanguae.

demise (di-miz), n. (15c) 1. The conveyance of an estate usu. for a term of years, a lease <the demise of the land for one year>. 2. The instrument by which such a conveyance is accomplished <the demise set forth the terms of the transfer>. 3. The passing of property by descent or bequest . 4. The death of a person or (figuratively) of a thing <the corporation’s untimely demise>. — Abbr. dem. See DEATH. — demise, vb.

demise of the Crown. The immediate, automatic transfer of a kingdom to a successor upon a sovereign’s death or long absence from the throne.

“The king never dies. Henry, Edward, or George may die; but the king survives them all. For immediately upon the decease of the reigning prince in his natural capacity, his kingship or imperial dignity, by act of law, without any . . . interval, is vested at once in his heir; who is, eo instanti, king to all intents and purposes. And so tender is the law of supposing even a possibility of his death, that his natural dissolution is generally called his demise . . . an expression which signifies merely a transfer of property; for . . . when we say the demise of the crown, we mean only that, in consequence of the disunion of the king’s body natural from his body politic, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor; and so the royal dignity remains perpetual.”
1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 242 (1765).

joint demise. In an ejectment action, a demise made by two or more persons in one declaration. [Cases: Ejectment ⇨ 65.]

separate demise. In an ejectment action, a demise made solely by the lessor.

several demise. (often pl.) Hist. In an ejectment action, a list of demises by all people potentially owning the property at issue, used to ensure that the plaintiff had proved a lease from the person actually having title. See EJECTMENT.

single demise. In an ejectment action, a declaration containing one demise. See EJECTMENT. [Cases: Ejectment ⇨ 65.]

demise charter. See bareboat charter under CHARTER (8).

demise charterer. See bareboat charter under CHARTER (8).

demised premises. See PREMISES.

demisi (di-mi-zi). [fr. Latin demittere] I have demised. • This was the operative phrase in a lease.

demissio (di-mish-ee-oh), n. [fr. Latin demittere “to demise”] Hist. A lease or other transfer. • In an ejectment action, this term was used in the phrase ex demissione (“on the demise”) to show that a nominal plaintiff (a fictitious person) held an estate on a demise from the real plaintiff.

de mittendo tenorem recordi (dee mi-ten-doh tə-nor-əm ri-kor-di), n. [Law Latin “of sending the tenor of a record”] Hist. A writ to certify a record under seal.

demobilization. A dismissal of troops from active service.

democracy, n. Government by the people, either directly or through representatives elected by the people. Cf. REPUBLIC. — democratic, adj.

de moderata misericordia capienda (dee mod-ə-ray-tə miz-ə-ri-kor-dee-ə kap-ee-en-də), n. [Law Latin “for taking a moderate amercement”] Hist. A writ ordering a bailiff to take a moderate penalty from a party who had been excessively penalized in a court not of record. • The writ was founded on Magna Carta.

de modo decimandi (dee moh-doh des-ə-man-di), n. [Law Latin] Eccles. law. Of a mode of tithing. • This refers to any special kind of tithing by custom that is different from the general law that usu. required the tenth part of an annual increase. For example, it could mean a twelfth part of a quantity of hay rather than a tenth part or a couple of hens instead of a normal tithing of eggs. — Also termed modus decimandi; modus.

de momento in momentum (dee mə-men-toh in mə-men-təm). [Latin] Scots law. From moment to moment. • The phrase appeared in reference to terms for counting. For example, a minor’s age was counted de momento in momentum until the last moment of 21 years. The years of prescription were also thus computed.

demonetization. A disuse of a metal in coinage; a withdrawal of the value of a metal as money <the demonetization of gold in the United States>.

demonstratio (dem-ən-stray-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin demonstrare “to show”] Roman law. 1. A description, as in falsa demonstratio (a false description of something or someone in a will). 2. Under the formulary procedure, the statement of facts in a formula, forming the basis of a claim. Pl. demonstrationes (dem-ən-stray-shee-oh-nee-z). See FORMULA (1).

demonstrative bequest. See BEQUEST.

demonstrative devise. See DEVISE.

demonstrative evidence. See EVIDENCE.

demonstrative legacy. See LEGACY.

de morte antecessoris (dee mor-tee an-ti-ses-ər-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. Concerning the death of the ancestor. • The phrase occurs in the briefe of mortancestry, equivalent to the English mort d’ancestor.

demote, vb. To lower (usu. a person) in rank, position, pay, or other status. See DEGRADATION (1).

de munere regio (dee myoo-nər-ə ree-jee-oh). [Law Latin] Scots law. By royal gift. • The phrase described land held under feudal tenure.

demur (di-mər), vb. (17c) 1. To file a demurrer. See DEMURRER. 2. To object to the legal sufficiency of a claim alleged in a pleading without admitting or denying the truth of the facts stated. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 189.] 3. To object to the legal sufficiency of a claim alleged in a pleading while admitting the truth of the facts stated. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 189, 214.]

demurrable (di-mər-ə-bəl), adj. (1827) (Of a claim, pleading, etc.) subject to a demurrer . See DEMURRER.

demurrage (di-mər-ij), (usu. pl.) Maritime law. 1. Liquidated damages owed by a charterer to a shipowner for the charterer's failure to load or unload cargo by the agreed time. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 170.]

contract demurrage. Demurrage paid by a vessel's charterer if the time to load or unload the vessel at port takes longer than that agreed on in the charterer's contract with the shipowner. Cf. DISPATCH MONEY.

"The contract may also provide that if . . . the loading time exceeds that fixed by the charter, the charterer will pay a liquidated compensation termed 'contract demurrage.'" Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 56 (2d ed. 1988).

noncontract demurrage. Demurrage not provided by contract, but ordered by a court. — Also termed damages for detention.

"After the . . . days on contract demurrage have expired, the charterer of course still remains liable for further delay, but the liability now is one for noncontract demurrage, which will be fixed by the court just as would any other unliquidated claim for damages. Non-contract demurrage may also be referred to as 'damages for detention.'" Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 4-8, at 212 (2d ed. 1975).

2. A charge due for the late return of ocean containers or other equipment.

demurrage lien. See LIEN.

demurrant (di-mər-ənt). One who demurs; esp., a litigant who files a demurrer.

demurrer (di-mər-ər). [Law French demorer "to wait or stay"] (16c) A pleading stating that although the facts alleged in a complaint may be true, they are insufficient for the plaintiff to state a claim for relief and for the defendant to frame an answer. • In most jurisdictions, such a pleading is now termed a motion to dismiss, but demurrer is still used in a few states, including California, Nebraska, and Pennsylvania. Cf. DENIAL (1). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 658, 1725; Pleading ⇨ 189, 193(5).]

"The word 'demurrer,' derived from the Latin demorari, or the French demorrier, meaning to 'wait or stay,' imports that the party demurring waits or stays in his proceedings in the action until the judgment of the court is given whether he is bound to answer to so insufficient a pleading. Each party may demur to what he deems an insufficient pleading of the other. The demurrer was general when it was to matter of substance; it was special when it was made to matter of form, and must specifically point out the defect." Edwin demurrer ore tenus. An oral demurrer. See ORE TENUS.

E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 15 (2d ed. 1899).

"The codes either expressly or by implication require all pleadings to be in writing. To this proposition there is the apparent exception that objections to the jurisdiction of the court, or to the sufficiency of a pleading, that it does not state a cause of action or defence, may be raised on the trial by what is sometimes called a demurrer ore tenus (that is, orally, — by word of mouth)." Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 179 (2d ed. 1899).

general demurrer. See general exception (1) under EXCEPTION (1).

parol demurrer. Hist. A suspension of proceedings during the minority of an infant.

speaking demurrer. (18c) A demurrer that cannot be sustained because it introduces new facts not contained in the complaint. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 210.]

special demurrer. (17c) A demurrer that states grounds for an objection and specifically identifies the nature of the defect, such as that the pleading violates the rules of pleading or practice. • If a pleading is defective in form but not substance, the defect must be pointed out by a special demurrer. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 206.]

demurrer book. Hist. A record of the demurrer issue used by the court and counsel in argument.

demurrer to evidence. (17c) A party's objection or exception that the evidence is legally insufficient to make a case. • Its effect, upon joinder in the demurrer by the opposite party, is that the jury is discharged and the demurrer is entered on record and decided by the court. A demurrer to evidence admits the truth of all the evidence and the legal deductions from that evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 752; Trial ⇨ 150.]

demurrer to interrogatories. (18c) The objection or reason given by a witness for failing to answer an interrogatory.

demutualization, n. The process of converting a mutual insurance company (which is owned by its policyholders) to a stock insurance company (which is owned by outside shareholders), usu. as a means of increasing the insurer's capital by allowing the insurer to issue shares. • About half the states have demutualization statutes authorizing such a conversion. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 1160.] — demutualize, vb.

demý-sangué. See DEMI-SANGUE.

den and strond (den an[d] strond). Hist. Permission for a ship to run aground or strand itself.

denarius (di-nair-ee-əs), n. [Law Latin "penny"] 1. Roman law. The principal silver coin used by the Romans. 2. Hist. An English penny; a pence. 3. (pl.) Slang. Money in general. Pl. denarii. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 3) denier.

denarius Dei (di-nair-ee-əs dee-i), n. [Law Latin "God's penny"] Hist. Earnest money exchanged by contracting parties, so called because the money was originally given either to the church or to the poor. • The denarius Dei was not part of the consideration. — Also termed argentum dei. See ARRA.

denationalization. 1. Int'l law. The unilateral act of a country in depriving a person of nationality, whether by administrative decision or by operation of law. • Strictly, the term does not cover a person's renunciation of citizenship. 2. The act of returning government ownership and control of an industry or function to private ownership and control. Cf. PRIVATIZATION. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ⇨ 729.] — denationalize, vb.

de nativo habendo (dee nə-tī-voh hə-ben-doh), n. [Law Latin "about a serf to be held"] Hist. A writ directing a sheriff to apprehend and return a runaway serf to the serf's lord. • A trial on the writ would determine the lord's ownership status.

de natura brevium (dee nə-tyoor-ə bree-vee-ə). [Latin] Concerning the nature of writs. • This was a common title of textbooks on English medieval law.

denaturalization. The process by which a government deprives a naturalized citizen of all rights, duties, and protections of citizenship. See 8 USCA § 1451. — denaturalize, vb.

denelage. See DANELAW.

denial, n. (16c) 1. A refusal or rejection; esp., a court's refusal to grant a request presented in a motion or petition <denial of the motion for summary judgment>. 2. A defendant's response controverting the facts that a plaintiff has alleged in a complaint; a repudiation <the worker filed a denial alleging that physical contact never occurred>. Cf. DEMURRER. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 741; Pleading ⇨ 112.]

conjunctive denial. (1860) A response that controverts all the material facts alleged in a complaint.

disjunctive denial. (1920) A response that controverts the truthfulness of two or more factual allegations of a complaint in the alternative.

general denial. (16c) A response that puts in issue all the material assertions of a complaint or petition. — Also termed general plea. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 742; Pleading ⇨ 123.]

qualified general denial. (1844) A general denial of all the allegations except the allegations that the pleader expressly admits.

"The qualified general denial most frequently is used when a limited number of allegations in the complaint are to be admitted. This form of denial also is employed when defendant cannot expressly deny an averment in his opponent's pleading and therefore cannot submit a general denial, although defendant wants to put plaintiff to his proof on that averment by interposing a denial of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief or a denial on information and belief." 5 Charles Alan Wright & Arthur Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1266, at 405 (2d ed. 1990).

specific denial. (1850) A separate response applicable to one or more particular allegations in a complaint.

[Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 742; Pleading ⇨ 124.]

3. A refusal or rejection <denial of an employment application>. 4. A deprivation or withholding <denial of due process>. — deny, vb.

denial of justice. Int'l law. A defect in a country's organization of courts or administration of justice, resulting in the country's violating its international legal duties to protect aliens. • A denial of justice is a wrongful act under international law. — Also termed justitia denegata; déni de justice; refus de justice.

denial-of-service attack. A malicious strike against a computer, website, network, server, or database designed to render it inaccessible, usu. by overwhelming it with activity or by forcing it to malfunction. — Also termed nuke. — Abbr. DoS attack.

distributed denial-of-service attack. A denial-of-service attack carried out by distributing a virus that causes infected computers to try to access the target computer at the same time. — Abbr. DDoS attack.

denier, n. 1. (də-nyay) [French fr. Latin denarius] DENARIUS (1). 2. DENARIUS (3). 3. (di-nī-ər). [Law French] Hist. Denial; refusal, as in refusal to pay rent when demanded.

Denier à Dieu (də-nyay ah dyuu or dyoo). [French "God's money"] French law. Earnest money exchanged by contracting parties. See DENARIUS DEI.

denization (den-ə-zay-shən). The act of making a person a denizen. See DENIZEN. — Also termed indenization.

denize (den-iz or di-nīz), vb. To make (a person) a denizen. See DENIZEN.

denizen (den-ə-zən). (15c) 1. A person given certain rights in a foreign nation or living habitually in a foreign nation. 2. English law. A person whose status is midway between being an alien and a natural-born or naturalized subject.

Denman's Act. Hist. 1. The (English) Evidence Act of 1843, providing that no person offered as a witness can be excluded because of incapacity due to a past crime or an interest in the proceedings. — Also termed Lord Denman's Act. 2. The (English) Criminal Procedure Act of 1865 that allowed defense counsel to sum up evidence as allowed in a civil trial, to prove contradictory statements made by an adverse witness, to prove a previous criminal conviction of an adverse witness, and to compare samples of disputed handwriting. — Also termed Mr. Denman's Act.

denomination. (15c) 1. An act of naming. 2. A collective designation, esp. of a religious sect.

de non alienando (dee non ay-lee-ə-nan-doh). [Law Latin] Scots law. For not alienating. • The phrase was used to restrict the transfer of property.

de non alienando sine consensu superiorum (dee non ay-lee-ə-nan-doh si-nee kən-sen-s[y]oo s[y]oo-peer-ee-or-əm). [Law Latin] Scots law. Concerning the nonalienation of the lands without the consent of the superior. • The phrase was frequently present in a charter to a vassal.

de non contrahendo debito (dee non kon-trə-hen-doh deb-i-toh). [Law Latin] Scots law. Against the contraction of debt. • The phrase was inserted in an entail to prevent the heir from incurring debt.

de non decimando (dee non des-ə-man-doh), n. [Law Latin “of not paying tithes”] Eccles. law. A claim for release from paying a tithe. — Also termed modus de non decimando.

“A prescription de non decimando is a claim to be entirely discharged of tithes, and to pay no compensation in lieu of them. Thus the king by his prerogative is discharged from all tithes. So a vicar shall pay no tithes to the rector, nor the rector to the vicar. . . . But these privileges are personal to both the king and the clergy; for their tenant or lessee shall pay tithes. . . . And from this original have sprung all the lands, which, being in lay hands, do at present claim to be tithe-free: for, if a man can show his lands to have been such abbey lands, and also immemorially discharged of tithes. . . . this is now a good prescription, de non decimando. But he must show both these requisites for abbey lands, without a special ground of discharge, are not discharged of course; neither will any prescription de non decimando avail in total discharge of tithes, unless it relates to such abbey lands.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 31–32 (1766).

de non procedendo ad assisam (dee non proh-sə-den-doh ad ə-si-zəm), n. [Law Latin “of not proceeding to take an assize”] Hist. A writ ordering justices not to hold an assize in a particular case.

de non residentia clerici regis (dee non rez-ə-den-shee-ə kler-ə-si ree-jis), n. [Law Latin “of the nonresidence of a parson employed in royal service”] Hist. A writ to excuse a parson from nonresidence because the parson is busy serving the Crown. See NONRESIDENCE (1).

de non sane memorie (dee non sayn mem-ə-ree). [Law French] Of unsound memory; of unsound mind. See MIND AND MEMORY; NON COMPOS MENTIS.

denounce, vb. (13c) 1. To condemn openly, esp. publicly. 2. To declare (an act or thing) to be a crime and prescribe a punishment for it. 3. To accuse or inform against. 4. To give formal notice to a foreign country of the termination of (a treaty).

denouncement. 1. An act of accusation or condemnation <denouncement of a thief>. 2. A declaration of a threatened action <denouncement of war> <denouncement of a treaty>. 3. An application for a grant to work a mine that is either newly discovered or forfeited <the denouncement was granted>. • Historically, denouncements were also granted under Spanish-American law. 4. Archaic. A formal announcement; a declaration . — Also termed denunciation. — denunciatory, denunciative, adj.

de novi operis nuntiatione. See NOVI OPERIS NUNTIA-TIO.

denunciation. See DENOUNCEMENT.

denuntiatio (di-nən-shee-ay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] 1. Roman & civil law. A declaration intended to protect or set in motion the enforcement of the declarer’s right; esp., a report of a crime. 2. Hist. A summons; a public notice. 3. Scots law. The Crown’s public denunciation of a debtor as a rebel and an outlaw when the debtor has disobeyed an order to pay. Pl. denuntiationes.

denuntiatio belli (di-nən-shee-ay-shee-oh bel-i). [Latin “declaration of war”]. A declaration of war. See declaration of war under DECLARATION (3).

deodand (dee-ə-dand). Hist. Something (such as an animal) that has done wrong and must therefore be forfeited to the Crown. • Deodand was abolished in 1846.

“In the oldest records, we see no attempt to distinguish the cases in which the dead man was negligent from those in which no fault could be imputed to him, and the large number of deodands collected in every eyre suggests that many horses and boats bore the guilt which should have been ascribed to beer. A drunken carter is crushed beneath the wheels of his cart; the cart, the cask of wine that was in it and the oxen that were drawing it are all deodand. Bracton apparently thought it an abuse to condemn as deodand a thing that had not moved; he would distinguish between the horse which throws a man and the horse off which a man stupidly tumbles, between the tree that falls and the tree against which a man is thrown. We do not see these distinctions in the practice of the courts.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 474 n.4 (2d ed. 1899).

“[W]hen in 1716 the coroner’s jury of Yarmouth declared a stack of timber which had fallen on a child to be forfeited as a deodand, it was ransomed for 30s., which was paid over to the child’s father.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 7 (16th ed. 1952).

de odio et atia (dee oh-dee-oh et ay-shee-ə), n. [Law Latin “of hatred and malice”] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to summon a 12-member jury to inquire whether a prisoner jailed for murder was charged for a good reason or only because of ill-will and to determine whether bail should be set. • If the prisoner was accused out of spite or had committed the crime in self-defense, then another writ called tradas in ballim would have been issued ordering the sheriff to release the prisoner on bail if the sheriff could find 12 good citizens of the county to vouch for the prisoner. This writ, similar to habeas corpus, was first mentioned in Magna Carta. — Also termed breve de bono et malo.

de onerando pro rata portione (dee on-ə-ran-doh proh ray-tə por-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin “of charging according to a ratable proportion”] Hist. A writ for a joint tenant or cotenant who is distrained for more rent than is proportionately required.

lawful dependent. (1908) 1. One who receives an allowance or benefits from the public, such as social security. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ↻4.10.] 2. One who qualifies to receive a benefit from private funds as determined by the laws governing the distribution.

legal dependent. (1909) A person who is dependent according to the law; a person who derives principal support from another and usu. may invoke laws to enforce that support.

partial dependent. Workers' compensation. A person whose partial reliance on an employee covered under workers'-compensation law for support entitles him or her to receive death benefits if the employee is killed on the job. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ↻414, 415.]

2. Tax. A person, such as a child or parent, for whom a taxpayer may be able to claim a personal exemption if the taxpayer provides more than half of the person's support during the taxable year. • Besides support, other criteria must be met as well. IRC (26 USCA) § 152. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻3294; Taxation ↻3519.] — dependent, adj.

dependent child. See CHILD.

dependent claim. See PATENT CLAIM.

dependent condition. See CONDITION (2).

dependent contract. See CONTRACT.

dependent covenant. See COVENANT (1).

dependent coverage. See COVERAGE.

dependent intervening cause. A cause of an accident or injury that occurs between the defendant's behavior and the injurious result, but that does not change the defendant's liability. See intervening cause under CAUSE (1). [Cases: Criminal Law ↻31; Negligence ↻431.]

dependent promise. See PROMISE.

dependent relative revocation. (1855) A common-law doctrine that operates to undo an otherwise sufficient revocation of a will when there is evidence that the testator's revocation was conditional rather than absolute. • Typically, the doctrine applies when a testator has physically revoked the will and believes that a new will is valid, although this belief is mistaken. The doctrine undoes only the revocation; it does not always accomplish the testator's intent or validate an otherwise invalid will. — Also termed dependent-relative-revocation doctrine; conditional revocation; mistakenly induced revocation; ineffective revocation; doctrine of ineffective revocation. [Cases: Wills ↻167–195.] dependent state. See nonsovereign state under STATE.

depopulation. 1. A substantial reduction in population. 2. Hist. A species of waste by which the kingdom’s population was diminished. See DEPOPULATIO AGRORUM.

deportable, adj. (Of an alien) subject to removal from a country after an illegal entry.

deportable alien. See ALIEN.

deportatio (dee-por-tay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin deportare “to carry away”] Roman law. Permanent exile of a condemned criminal involving loss of citizenship and, usu., forfeiture of all property. Cf. RELEGATIO.

“Deportatio. Perpetual banishment of a person condemned for a crime. It was the severest form of banishment since it included additional penalties, such as seizure of the whole property, loss of Roman citizenship, confinement to a definite place. Under the Principate it replaced the former interdictio aqua et igni. The emperor could grant the deportee full amnesty, which restored him to his former rights (postliminium). Places of deportatio were islands (in insulam) near the Italian shore or an oasis in the Libyan desert.” Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 432 (1953).

deportation (dee-por-tay-shən), n. The act or an instance of removing a person to another country; esp., the expulsion or transfer of an alien from a country. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ⇨210–292.] — deport, vb.

demand deposit. A bank deposit that the depositor may withdraw at any time without prior notice to the bank.

direct deposit. The payment of money by transferring the payment directly into the payee’s bank account, usu. by electronic transfer.

frozen deposit. A bank deposit that cannot be withdrawn, as when the financial institution is insolvent or an account is restricted.

general deposit. 1. A bank deposit of money that is commingled with other depositors’ money. 2. A bank deposit that is to the depositor’s credit, thus giving the depositor a right to the money and creating a debtor–creditor relationship between the bank and the depositor. • A bank is not required to return the actual money deposited as a general deposit, as it must with a special deposit; the bank need return only an equivalent sum. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⇨75–80, 119.]

special deposit. A bank deposit that is made for a specific purpose, that is kept separately, and that is to be returned to the depositor. • The bank serves as a bailee or trustee for a special deposit. — Also termed specific deposit. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⇨153.]

time deposit. A bank deposit that is to remain for a specified period or for which notice must be given to the bank before withdrawal. — Also termed term deposit.

3. Money placed with a person as earnest money or security for the performance of a contract. • The money will be forfeited if the depositor fails to perform. — Also termed security deposit. 4. Copyright. The placing of two copies of a published work with the Library of Congress within three months of publication. • This requirement is independent of copyright registration. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨50.10.] 5. Civil law. A contract by which a depositor delivers a thing to a depository for safekeeping. La. Civ. Code arts. 2926, 2929. • A deposit may be either an onerous or a gratuitous contract. — Also termed depositum; naked deposit; gratuitous deposit. See gratuitous bailment under BAILMENT. [Cases: Bailment ⇨2.] involuntary deposit. A deposit made by accidentally leaving or placing personal property in another’s possession. See involuntary bailment under BAILMENT.

necessary deposit. A bailment, usu. made by reason of emergency or other necessity, that prevents the depositor from freely choosing the depository. • A necessary deposit occurs, for example, when a person entrusts goods to a stranger during a fire.

quasi-deposit. An involuntary deposit made when one party lawfully possesses property merely by finding it.

voluntary deposit. A deposit made by the mutual consent of the bailor and bailee.

6. Patents. The placing of a sample of microorganisms or cell lines with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to satisfy the enablement requirement. • The practice is not statutory but has been established by regulation and caselaw. 37 CFR §§ 1.801–809. — Also termed enablement by deposit. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 100.]

deposit account. See ACCOUNT.

depository. (17c) 1. A person or institution that one leaves money or valuables with for safekeeping . • When a depository is a company, it is often termed a safe-deposit company. Cf. DEPOSITORY. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows ⇨ 13; Warehousemen ⇨ 39.] 2. A gratuitous bailee. See DEPOSIT (5). [Cases: Bailment ⇨ 2.]

depository bank. See BANK.

deposit in court. The placing of money or other property that represents a person's potential liability in the court's temporary custody, pending the outcome of a lawsuit. — Also termed deposit into the registry of the court. [Cases: Deposits in Court ⇨ 1.]

deposit insurance. See INSURANCE.

deposit into the registry of the court. See DEPOSIT IN COURT.

deposition (dep-ə-zish-ən). (14c) 1. A witness's out-of-court testimony that is reduced to writing (usu. by a court reporter) for later use in court or for discovery purposes. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 30; Fed. R. Crim. P. 15. — Also termed examination before trial. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 627.2; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1311–1456; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 91–206.] 2. The session at which such testimony is recorded.

apex deposition. (1992) The deposition of a person whose position is at the highest level of a company's hierarchy. • Courts often preclude an apex deposition unless (1) the person to be deposed has particular knowledge regarding the claim, and (2) the requesting party cannot obtain the requested — and discoverable — information through less intrusive means. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1325; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 101.]

deposition de bene esse (dee bee-nee es-ee also day ben-ay es-ay). (18c) A deposition taken from a witness who will likely be unable to attend a scheduled trial or hearing. • If the witness is not available to attend trial, the testimony is read at trial as if the witness were present in court. See testimony de bene esse under TESTIMONY. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1291–1299, 1311–1456; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 61–65.]

deposition on written questions. (1970) A deposition given in response to a prepared set of written questions, as opposed to a typical oral deposition. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 31. — Formerly also termed deposition on written interrogatories. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1369; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 155.]

"The advantage of a deposition on written questions is that counsel for the parties need not go to some distant place to be present at the taking of the deposition. Instead they serve on each other questions and cross questions — and even redirect and recross questions — that they wish to have put to the deponent. These are then sent to the officer who is to take the deposition. The officer puts the questions to the witness, records the answers, and transcribes and files the deposition as with an oral deposition. The officer is merely to record what the witness says in response to the various questions propounded to him or her." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 85, at 618–19 (5th ed. 1994).

oral deposition. (1910) A deposition given in response to oral questioning by a lawyer. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1381; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 151.]

3. The written record of a witness's out-of-court testimony. 4. Eccles. law. The involuntary release of a clergyman from the exercise of his office. Cf. DEGRADATION (1); DEPRIVATION (4).

deposition on written interrogatories. See deposition on written questions under DEPOSITION.

deposition subpoena. See SUBPOENA.

accelerated depreciation. Depreciation recorded using a method that writes off the cost of an asset more rapidly than the straight-line method.

accumulated depreciation. (1916) The total depreciation currently recorded on an asset. • On the balance sheet, an asset's total cost less accumulated depreciation reflects the asset's book value. — Also termed accrued depreciation.

annual depreciation. (1862) The yearly decrease in a property's value due to regular wear and tear.

economic depreciation. A reduction in the value of an asset due to a shortening of the asset's economic life.

functional depreciation. (1910) Depreciation that results from the replacement of equipment that is not yet worn out but that is obsolete in light of new technology or improved methodology allowing more efficient and satisfactory production.

depreciation method. (1915) A set formula used in estimating an asset's use, wear, or obsolescence over the asset's useful life or some portion thereof. • This method is useful in calculating the allowable annual tax deduction for depreciation. See USEFUL LIFE. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↻ 3470-3505; Taxation ↻ 3516.]

accelerated depreciation method. (1964) A depreciation method that yields larger deductions in the earlier years of an asset's life and smaller deductions in the later years.

annuity depreciation method. A depreciation method that allows for a return of imputed interest on the undepreciated balance of an asset's value. • The imputed interest is subtracted from the current depreciation amount before it is credited to the accumulated depreciation accounts.

declining-balance depreciation method. (1947) A method of computing the annual depreciation allowance by multiplying the asset's undepreciated cost each year by a uniform rate that may not exceed double the straight-line rate or 150 percent.

double-declining depreciation method. (1996) A depreciation method that spreads over time the initial cost of a capital asset by deducting in each period twice the percentage recognized by the straight-line method and applying that double percentage to the undepreciated balance existing at the start of each period.

replacement-cost depreciation method. A depreciation method that fixes an asset's value by the price of its substitute.

sinking-fund depreciation method. A depreciation method that accounts for the time value of money by setting up a depreciation-reserve account that earns interest, resulting in a gradual yearly increase in the depreciation deduction.

straight-line depreciation method. (1930) A depreciation method that writes off the cost or other basis of the asset by deducting the expected salvage value from the initial cost of the capital asset, and dividing the difference by the asset's estimated useful life.

sum-of-the-years'-digits depreciation method. A method of calculating the annual depreciation allowance by multiplying the depreciable cost basis (cost minus salvage value) by a constantly decreasing fraction, which is represented by the remaining years of useful life at the beginning of each year divided by the total number of years of useful life at the time of acquisition. — Sometimes shortened to SYD method.

unit depreciation method. A depreciation method — directly related to the productivity of the asset — that divides the asset's value by the estimated total number of units to be produced, and then multiplies the unit cost by the number of units sold during the year, representing the depreciation expense for the year.

units-of-output depreciation method. A method by which the cost of a depreciable asset, minus salvage value, is allocated to the accounting periods benefited based on output (as miles, hours, number of times used, and the like).

depreciation reserve. An account built up to offset the depreciation of property because of time and use, so that at the end of the property's service there is enough money to replace the property. [Cases: Electricity ↻ 11.3(3); Gas ↻ 14.4(9); Public Utilities ↻ 127.]

depredation. (15c) The act of plundering; pillaging.

de presenti. See DE PRAESENTI.

depression. (18c) A period of economic stress that persists over an extended period, accompanied by poor business conditions and high unemployment. Cf. RECESSION.

deprivation. (15c) 1. An act of taking away <deprivation of property>. 2. A withholding of something <deprivation of food>. 3. The state of being without something; wanting <sleep deprivation>. 4. A removal or degradation from office, esp. an ecclesiastical office <deprivation of the bishop>. Cf. DEPOSITION (4); DEGRADATION (1).

deprived child. See CHILD.

Deprizio doctrine. (1990) Bankruptcy. The rule that a debtor's payment to an outside creditor more than 90 days before a bankruptcy filing is voidable as a preferential transfer if the payment also benefits an inside creditor. Levit v. Ingersoll Rand Fin. Corp. (In re V.N. Deprizio Constr. Co.), 874 F.2d 1186 (7th Cir. 1989). [Cases: Bankruptcy ↻ 2608(2).]

de procedendo ad iudicium (dee proh-sə-dēn-doh ad joo-dish-ee-əm), n. [Law Latin "for proceeding in an assise"] Hist. A chancery writ ordering a lower court to proceed to judgment in a case that had been wrongfully stayed. • If the lower-court justices refused, they could be punished for contempt.

de proprietate probanda (dee prə-pri-ə-tay-tee prə-ban-də), n. [Law Latin "for proving property"] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to investigate the ownership of distrained goods claimed by a defendant in a replevin action.

"If therefore the distreiner claims any such property, the party replevying must sue out a writ de proprietate probanda, in which the sheriff is to try, by an inquest, in whom the property previous to the distress subsisted. And if it be found to be in the distreiner, the sheriff can proceed no farther; but must return the claim of property to the court of king's bench or common pleas, to be there farther prosecuted, if thought advisable, and there finally determined." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 148 (1768).

depublished opinion. See OPINION (1).

depute, n. Scots law. A person appointed to act in an official capacity or as another official's representative.

deputy, n. (15c) A person appointed or delegated to act as a substitute for another, esp. for an official. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↻ 47.] — deputize, depute, vb.

courtroom deputy. The deputy clerk assigned to a particular courtroom or a particular judge. [Cases: Courts ↻ 55.]

general deputy. 1. A deputy appointed to act in another officer's place and execute all ordinary functions of the office. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↻ 47.] 2. See deputy sheriff under SHERIFF.

special deputy. A deputy specially appointed to serve a particular purpose, such as keeping the peace during a riot.

deputy sheriff. See SHERIFF.

DEQ. abbr. DELIVERED EX QUAY.

de quarantina habenda (dee kwahr-ən-ti-nə hā-ben-də), n. [Law Latin "of return of quarantine"] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff to give a widow possession of part of her husband's estate, after she had been wrongfully ejected but before dower is assigned. See QUARANTINE (4).

de quo (dee kwoh). [Latin] Of which. • These were formal words used in a writ of entry, as in a writ of entry "in the quo" or "in the quibus." — Also termed de quibus.

deraign, n. Archaic. The process of proving, vindicating, or maintaining a legal right. • Historically, a deraign commonly took the form of a duel or trial by combat. — Also termed deraignment.

deraign, vb. Archaic. 1. To prove, justify, vindicate, or settle (a right or claim). 2. To dispute or contest. 3. Hist. To settle (a dispute) by battle or duel.

deraignment. See DERAIGN, n.

de raptu virginum (dee rap-t[y]oo vər-jə-nəm), n. [Latin "of the ravishment of virgins"] Hist. A writ for taking an appeal in a rape case.

de rationabilibus divis (dee rash-ən-ə-bil-i-bəs di-vi-sis), n. [Law Latin "of the fixing of reasonable boundaries"] Hist. A writ to settle the boundaries between property owners of different towns when one owner claimed a trespass by the other.

de rationabili parte bonorum (dee rash-[ee]-ə-nay-bə-lɪ pahr-tee bə-nor-əm), n. [Law Latin "of reasonable share of goods"] Hist. A writ allowing the wife and children of a dead man to recover a reasonable share of his goods from his executors after his debts were paid. • This writ was usu. founded on custom rather than the general law.

de recenti (dee ri-sen-ti). [Law Latin] Scots law. Recently. • The term adds weight to a statement that is made or an event (such as an arrest) that occurs soon after an incident. In a theft case, for example, the presumption of guilt was greater when the suspect was identified soon after the theft occurred.

de recordo et processu mittendis (dee ri-kor-doh et proh-ses-[y]oo mi-ten-dis), n. [Law Latin “of the sending of the record and process of a cause to a superior court”] A type of writ of error.

derecho de autor. See AUTHOR’S RIGHT.

de recto (dee rek-toh), n. [Law Latin] A writ of right to recover both the seisin and the property. — Also termed breve de recto. See WRIT OF COURSE.

de recto de advocacione (dee rek-toh dee ad-və-kay-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin “of the right of advowson”] Hist. A writ restoring a person’s right to present a clerk to a benefice when that right had been interfered with. • It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 27.

de recto de rationabili parte (dee rek-toh dee rash-[ee]-ə-nay-bə-lī pah-r-tee), n. [Law Latin “of right of reasonable part”] Hist. A writ allowing one coparcener or blood relative owning land in fee simple to obtain a rightful share from the other. • It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 27.

de recto patens (dee rek-toh pay-tenz), n. [Law Latin “of right patent”] Hist. The highest writ of right under the law given to an owner in fee simple to recover the possession and use of land from the freehold tenant. — Also termed breve magnum de recto.

de redisseisina (dee ree-dis-see-zin-ə), n. [Law Latin “of redisseisin”] Hist. A writ for recovery of land or rent by a person who had previously recovered the land or rent by an assize of novel disseisin, but who was again disseised by the same disseisor. • This writ is similar to de post disseisina. See DE POST DISSEISINA; DISSEISIN.

deregistration, n. The point at which an issuer’s registration under section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is no longer required because of a decline in the number of holders of the issuer’s securities. 15 USCA § 78l. • Deregistration is triggered when the number of holders falls below a certain number or when required by an administrative order. Cf. DELISTING. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇨35.22.] — deregister, vb.

deregulation, n. (1963) The reduction or elimination of governmental control of business, esp. to permit free markets and competition. — deregulate, vb.

financial deregulation. The lessening of governmental oversight and intervention in the business of financial institutions. • Among other effects, regulation of financial contracts is relaxed and competition for depositors and borrowers increases.

deregulation clause. Oil & gas. A gas-contract provision specifying how the price of gas will be calculated and what the buyer’s and seller’s obligations will be if regulated natural gas becomes deregulated.

de rei gestae veritate (dee ree-I jes-tee ver-i-tay-tee). [Law Latin] Scots law. Of the truth of the thing done. • A witness to a deed that had been lost could testify to the deed’s existence and to the truthfulness of the statements contained in it.

derelict (der-ə-lik-t), adj. (17c) 1. Forsaken; abandoned; cast away <derelict property>. See quasi-derelict under DERELICT. 2. Lacking a sense of duty; in breach of a legal or moral obligation <the managers were derelict in their duties>. 3. Dilapidated; run-down.

derelict, n. (17c) 1. Personal property abandoned or thrown away by the owner with no intent to claim it any longer, such as a ship deserted at sea. [Cases: Salvage ⇨4.]

quasi-derelict. A ship that has been deserted or abandoned temporarily or involuntarily, as when the crew is dead or otherwise incapable of navigating the ship. [Cases: Salvage ⇨4.]

2. Land uncovered by water receding from its former bed. [Cases: Navigable Waters ⇨44; Waters and Water Courses ⇨93.] 3. A street person or vagrant; a hobo.

dereliction (der-ə-lik-shən), n. (16c) 1. The forsaking of a legal or moral obligation with no intent to reassume it; abandonment <dereliction of duty>.

dereliction in the performance of duties. Military law. Willful or negligent failure to perform assigned duties; culpable inefficiency in performing assigned duties. [Cases: Military Justice ⇨687.]

2. An increase of land caused by the receding of a sea, river, or stream from its usual watermark. See RELICTION. [Cases: Navigable Waters ⇨44; Waters and Water Courses ⇨93.]

derelict-official act. A statute that mandates forfeiture of office if the holder willfully neglects or fraudulently fails to perform official duties. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ⇨27.]

de reparatione facienda (dee rep-ə-ray-shee-oh-nee fay-shee-en-də). Hist. 1. An action brought by a joint tenant to compel a cotenant to contribute to the repair of jointly held property. 2. A writ issued in such an action. • The writ had to issue before repairs were undertaken. There was no remedy after repairs began.

de replegiore de averiis. See DE AVERIIS REPLEGIANDIS.

de rescussu (dee ri-skəs-[y]oo), n. [Law Latin “of rescue”] Hist. A writ available when cattle were distrained or persons were arrested, and then rescued.

de retorno habendo (dee ri-tor-noh hə-ben-doh). [Law Latin] For having a return. • This term applied to (1) a judgment for a defendant in a replevin action, (2) a writ of execution for a defendant awarded judgment in a replevin action, and (3) a surety provided by a plaintiff at the beginning of a replevin action.

d.e.r.i.c. abbr. DE EA RE ITA CENSUERE.

de rien culpable (də reen kəl-pə-bəl). [Law French] Guilty of nothing; not guilty.

derivation clause. A deed-of-trust provision that provides information about the transfer of a property, esp. the source of the title, such as the name of the previous grantor and the recording date of the deed. See deed of trust under DEED.

derivative, adj. Copyright. Of, relating to, or constituting a work that is taken from, translated from, adapted from, or in some way further develops a previous work.

• Copyright protection includes the exclusive right in derivative works, such as a screenplay adapted from a book, or a variant musical arrangement. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨12(3).]

derivative, n. 1. A financial instrument whose value depends on or is derived from the performance of a secondary source such as an underlying bond, currency, or commodity. — Also termed derivative instrument; derivative security.

"Derivatives transactions may be based on the value of foreign currency, U.S. Treasury bonds, stock indexes, or interest rates. The values of these underlying financial instruments are determined by market forces, such as movements in interest rates. Within the broad panoply of derivatives transactions are numerous innovative financial instruments whose objectives may include a hedge against market risks, management of assets and liabilities, or lowering of funding costs; derivatives may also be used as speculation for profit." Procter & Gamble Co. v. Bankers Trust Co., [1996-1997 Transfer Binder] Fed. Sec. L. Rep. (CCH) ¶ 99,229, at 95,238 (S.D. Ohio 1996).

2. See derivative work under WORK (2).

derivative acquisition. See ACQUISITION.

derivative action. (18c) 1. A suit by a beneficiary of a fiduciary to enforce a right belonging to the fiduciary; esp., a suit asserted by a shareholder on the corporation's behalf against a third party (usu. a corporate officer) because of the corporation's failure to take some action against the third party. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23.1. — Also termed derivative suit; shareholder derivative suit; stockholder derivative suit; representative action. Cf. DIRECT ACTION (3). [Cases: Corporations ⇨207.5.] 2. A lawsuit arising from an injury to another person, such as a husband's action for loss of consortium arising from an injury to his wife caused by a third person.

derivative contraband. See CONTRABAND.

derivative conveyance. See secondary conveyance under CONVEYANCE.

derivative deed. See secondary conveyance under CONVEYANCE.

derivative defense. See DEFENSE (1).

derivative entrapment. See ENTRAPMENT.

derivative estate. See ESTATE (1).

derivative evidence. See EVIDENCE.

derivative instrument. See DERIVATIVE (1).

derivative-jurisdiction doctrine. (1964) The principle that a case is not properly removable unless it is within the subject-matter jurisdiction of the state court from which it is removed.

derivative lease. See SUBLEASE.

derivative liability. See LIABILITY.

derivative market. See MARKET.

derivative possession. See POSSESSION.

derivative power. See POWER (3).

derivative security. See DERIVATIVE (1).

derivative settlement. See SETTLEMENT (2).

derivative suit. See DERIVATIVE ACTION (1).

derivative title. See TITLE (2).

derivative-use immunity. See use immunity under IMMUNITY (3).

derivative work. See WORK (2).

derived demand. See DEMAND (4).

derogation (der-ə-gay-shən), n. (15c) 1. The partial repeal or abrogation of a law by a later act that limits its scope or impairs its utility and force <statutes in derogation of the common law>. [Cases: Statutes ⇨237, 239.] 2. Disparagement; depreciation in value or estimation <some argue that the derogation of family values has caused an increase in crime>. 3. Detraction, prejudice, or destruction (of a grant or right) <an attorney may be punished for derogation from professional integrity>. — derogate (der-ə-gayt), vb.

derogation clause. Int'l law. A reservation in a treaty allowing a signator to refuse to comply with certain provisions. • For example, a signator may be allowed to suspend some or all of its treaty obligations during a war or other national emergency. If a treaty lacks an express derogation clause, then general principles governing suspension or termination of treaties govern.

derogation from grant. A provision in an instrument of transfer (such as a deed) that diminishes, avoids, or otherwise limits the grant itself.

derogatory clause. (16c) 1. A statutory or contractual provision proclaiming that the document in which it appears, or a part of the document, cannot be repealed or amended. • Such provisions are considered ineffective.

"The one thing a sovereign legislature cannot do is truncate its own sovereignty by restricting its successors. A parliament sovereign today must also be sovereign tomorrow. What is technically called a clausula derogatoria is therefore ineffective: non impedit clausula derogatoria quo minus ab eadem potestate res dissolvantur a qua constituentur (a derogatory clause does not prevent things from being dissolved by the same power which created them)." F.A.R. Bennion, Statutory Interpretation § 140, at 313 (3d ed. 1997).

2. A clause that a testator inserts secretly in a will, containing a provision that any later will not having that precise clause is invalid. • A derogatory clause seeks to protect against a later will extorted by undue influence, duress, or violence. — Also termed clausula derogativa; clausula derogatoria.

DES. abbr. DELIVERED EX SHIP.

de salva gardia (dee sal-və gahr-dee-ə), n. [Law Latin "of safeguard"] A writ issued to protect strangers from harm while pursuing their legal rights in England.

de salvo conductu (dee sal-voh kən-dək-t[y]oo). [Law Latin "of safe conduct"] A writ of safe conduct.

de sa vie (də sa vee). [Law French] Of one's own life, as distinguished from pur autre vie ("for another's life").

descend, vb. To pass (a decedent's property) by intestate succession.

descendant (di-sen-dənt), n. (17c) One who follows in the bloodline of an ancestor, either lineally or collaterally. • Examples are children and grandchildren. Cf. ASCENDANT. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻25.] — descendant, adj.

collateral descendant. Loosely, a blood relative who is not strictly a descendant, such as a niece or nephew. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻32–41.]

lineal descendant. A blood relative in the direct line of descent. • Children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren are lineal descendants. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻25.]

descendibility of future interests. (1936) The legal possibility that a future interest (such as a remainder or an executory interest) can legally pass by inheritance.

descendible, adj. (15c) (Of property) capable of passing by descent or being inherited. See HERITABLE.

descent, n. (15c) 1. The acquisition of real property by law, as by inheritance; the passing of intestate real property to heirs. See SUCCESSION (2). Cf. DISTRIBUTION (1); PURCHASE (2). [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻1–19.] 2. The fact or process of originating from a common ancestor. Cf. ASCENT. — descend, vb.

collateral descent. Descent in a collateral or oblique line, from brother to brother or cousin to cousin. • With collateral descent, the donor and donee are related through a common ancestor. Cf. collateral descendant under DESCENDANT. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻32–41.]

direct-line descent. See lineal descent.

immediate descent. 1. A descent directly to an heir, as from a grandmother to granddaughter, brought about by the earlier death of the mother. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻22.] 2. A direct descent without an intervening link in consanguinity, as from mother to daughter.

lineal descent. Descent in a direct or straight line, as from father or grandfather to son or grandson. — Also termed direct-line descent. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻25.]

maternal-line descent. Descent between two persons, traced through the mother of the younger.

mediate descent. 1. A descent not occurring immediately, as when a granddaughter receives land from her grandmother, which first passed to the mother. 2. A direct descent occurring through a link in consanguinity, as when a granddaughter receives land from her grandfather directly.

"The law categorizes descents as either lineal or collateral, and as mediate or immediate. The term mediate or immediate descent may denote either the passing of the estate, or the relationship between the intestate and the heir. The classification of descents as mediate or immediate describes the proximity of the descent, while the characterization as lineal or collateral refers to the direction of the descent." 23 Am. Jur. 2d, Descent and Distribution § 49, at 787–88 (1983).

paternal-line descent. Descent between two persons, traced through the father of the younger.

descent and distribution. 1. See intestate succession under SUCCESSION (2). 2. Broadly, the rules by which a decedent's property is passed, whether by intestate succession or by will. See DISTRIBUTION. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻1–157.]

descent cast. Hist. The devolution of realty that has been acquired by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion, upon an heir whose ancestor died intestate. • This tolled the real owner's right of entry until the owner brought a legal action. — Also termed descent that tolls entry.

description. (14c) 1. A delineation or explanation of something by an account setting forth the subject's characteristics or qualities <description of a patentable process>. 2. A representation by words or drawing of something seen or heard or otherwise experienced <description of the criminal> <description of the accident>. 3. An enumeration or specific identification of something <description of items in the estate>. 4. LEGAL DESCRIPTION. 5. Patents. In a U.S. patent application, the section that (1) comprehensively characterizes the invention in language that is clear and complete enough to enable anyone of ordinary skill in the relevant art to make and use the invention; (2) explains the best mode for using the invention; and (3) usu. includes an explanation of drawings that are part of the application. • The detailed description typically makes up the largest portion of the application's specification. — Also termed (in sense 5) enabling disclosure; written description. [Cases: Patents ↻99.]

descriptio personae (di-skríp-shee-oh pər-soh-nee). [Law Latin] Description of the person. • This phrase, typically used to identify or describe a person in a contract or deed, is not essential to a document's validity. Cf. DESIGNATIO PERSONAE.

descriptive comparative law. See COMPARATIVE LAW.

descriptive mark. See descriptive trademark under TRADEMARK.

descriptive trademark. See TRADEMARK.

descriptive word. Trademarks. A term that portrays a general characteristic or function of a product or service. • A descriptive word may not be registered as a trademark unless it has acquired secondary meaning in the minds of consumers such that it is directly associated with one brand. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1035.]

"A trader cannot appropriate to his exclusive use words or symbols which (in the application he is to make of them) are public property. The right of all to use descriptive words in their ordinary and usual meaning must not be restricted. No sign or form of words may be appropriated as a trade-mark, for use in its primary meaning, which, from the nature of the fact conveyed by that primary meaning, others may employ with equal truth, and with

de scutagio habendo (dee skyoo-tay-jee-oh hæ-ben-doh), n. [Law Latin "for having scutage"] Hist. 1. A writ ordering a tenant-in-chief by knight's service to serve in a war, send a substitute, or pay a sum of money. 2. A writ authorizing a lord who had served in the war or paid the required fine, to recover the scutage from his knights' fees. See SCUTAGE.

"Such a baron, having proved that he fulfilled his contract or paid his fine, will have a royal writ de scutagio habendo, whereby the sheriff will be ordered to cause him to have the scutage due from his tenants. Still, before he can get his scutage, he has to obtain something that the king is apt to treat as a favour." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 270 (2d ed. 1898).

desecrate, vb. (17c) To divest (a thing) of its sacred character; to defile or profane (a sacred thing).

de secta ad molendinum (dee sek-tə ad mə-len-dī-nəm), n. [Law Latin "of suit at mill"] Hist. A writ forcing a person to continue grinding corn at a particular mill, as was customary, or to give a good reason why the custom should not be continued.

"There are also other services, due by ancient custom and prescription only. Such is that of doing suit to another's mill: where the persons, resident in a particular place, by usage time out of mind have been accustomed to grind their corn at a certain mill; and afterwards any of them go to another mill, and withdraw their suit . . . from the ancient mill. This is not only a damage, but an injury, to the owner . . . And for this injury the owner shall have a writ de secta ad molendinum commanding the defendant to do his suit at that mill . . . or show good cause to the contrary: in which action the validity of the prescription may be tried, and if it be found for the owner, he shall recover damages against the defendant." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 234–35 (1768).

de sectis non faciendis (dee sek-tis non fay-shee-en-dis), n. [Law Latin "of not doing services"] Hist. A writ exempting a ward or dowress from performing certain services.

desegregation, n. (1951) 1. The abrogation of policies that separate people of different races into different institutions and facilities (such as public schools). [Cases: Schools ⇨ 13.] 2. The state of having had such policies abrogated. Cf. INTEGRATION (4). — desegregate, vb.

de seisin habenda (dee see-zin-ə hæ-ben-də), n. [Law Latin "of holding seisin"] Hist. A writ ordering the sovereign to deliver seisin of lands and tenements to a lord, after holding them for the allowed year and a day because the lord's tenant committed a felony.

deserter. Int'l law. A member of the armed forces who leaves national military service with the intention of reneging on military obligations either permanently or for the duration of a military operation; a member of the armed forces who illegally abandons a military force, often by seeking refuge in a foreign territory or by joining enemy forces. [Cases: Armed Services ⇨ 38; Military Justice ⇨ 661.]

desertion, n. (16c) The willful and unjustified abandonment of a person's duties or obligations, esp. to military service or to a spouse or family. • In family law, the five elements of spousal desertion are (1) a cessation of cohabitation, (2) the lapse of a statutory period, (3) an intention to abandon, (4) a lack of consent from the abandoned spouse, and (5) a lack of spousal misconduct that might justify the abandonment. — Also termed gross neglect of duty. Cf. ABANDONMENT. [Cases: Armed Services ⇨ 38; Divorce ⇨ 37; Military Justice ⇨ 661.] — desert, vb.

constructive desertion. (1894) One spouse's misconduct that forces the other spouse to leave the marital abode.

• The actions of the offending spouse must be serious enough that the spouse who is forced from the home finds the continuation of the marriage to be unendurable or dangerous to his or her safety and well-being, and finds it necessary to seek safety outside the marital domicile. — Also termed constructive abandonment. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 28, 37(22).]

criminal desertion. (18c) One spouse's willful failure without just cause to provide for the care, protection, or support of the other spouse who is in ill health or needy circumstances. [Cases: Husband and Wife ⇨ 302, 304.]

obstinate desertion. Desertion by a spouse who persistently refuses to return to the marital home, so that the other spouse has grounds for divorce. • Before the advent of no-fault divorce, this term was commonly used in divorce statutes. The term was often part of the longer phrase willful, continued, and obstinate desertion. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 37(15).]

willful, continued, and obstinate desertion. See obstinate desertion.

design, n. (16c) 1. A plan or scheme. 2. Purpose or intention combined with a plan.

formed design. Criminal law. The deliberate and fixed intention to kill, though not necessarily a particular person. See PREMEDITATION. [Cases: Homicide ⇨ 535.]

3. The pattern or configuration of elements in something, such as a work of art. 4. Patents. The drawing or the depiction of an original plan for a novel pattern, model, shape, or configuration that is chiefly decorative or ornamental. • If it meets other criteria, a design may also be protectable as a trademark. — design, vb.

design around, vb. Patents. To make something that performs the same function or has the same physical properties as (a patented product or process) but in a way different enough from the original that it does not infringe the patent. Cf. DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 237.]

designated public forum. See PUBLIC FORUM.

designating petition. A document used to designate a candidate for a political-party nomination at a primary election or for election to a party position. [Cases: Elections ⇨ 126(1).]

designatio personae (dez-əg-nay-shee-oh pər-sōh-nee). [Law Latin] Designation of the person by class or category rather than by name, as “the children of A.”

• This phrase was used to specifically identify a person in a contract or deed, often as a word of limitation (e.g., “to my eldest son”). Cf. DESCRIPTIO PERSONAE.

design claim. See PATENT CLAIM.

design defect. See DEFECT.

design-defect exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

designedly, adv. (17c) Willfully; intentionally.

designee. A person who has been designated to perform some duty or carry out some specific role. — Also termed designate (dez-ig-nət), n.

designer defense. See DEFENSE (1).

designer drug. See DRUG.

design patent. See PATENT (3).

design review. A process by which a building permit is withheld until the proposed building meets the architectural standards established by land-use regulations. — Also termed architectural review. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ◊431–446.]

design specification. See STATEMENT OF WORK.

design-specification contract. See build-to-print contract under CONTRACT.

desist. To stop or leave off. See CEASE-AND-DESIST ORDER.

desk audit. See AUDIT.

de solemnitate (dee sə-lem-ni-tay-tee). [Law Latin] Scots law. As a solemnity. • The phrase appeared in reference to certain deed requirements essential to the deed’s validity. Cf. EX SOLEMNITATE.

de son tort (də sawn [or son] tor[t]). [Law French “by his own wrongdoing”] Wrongful.

executor de son tort. See EXECUTOR.

trustee de son tort. See TRUSTEE.

de son tort demesne (də sawn tor[t] di-mayn). [Law French] Of a person’s own wrong. • This is the law French equivalent of the Latin phrase de injuria. See DE INJURIA.

desperate debt. See DEBT.

despitus (di-spi-təs or des-pi-təs). [Law Latin] 1. Contempt. 2. A contemptible person.

despoil (di-spoil), vb. (14c) To deprive (a person) of possessions illegally by violence or by clandestine means; to rob. — despoliation (di-spoh-lee-ay-shən), despoilment, n.

desponsation (dee-spon-say-shən). Archaic. The act of betrothal; the act of contracting for marriage.

despot (des-pət), n. (16c) 1. A ruler with absolute power and authority. 2. A tyrant. — despotic (di-spot-ik), adj.

despotism (des-pə-tiz-əm). (18c) 1. A government by a ruler with absolute, unchecked power. 2. Total power or controlling influence.

de statu defunctorum (dee stay-t[y]oo dee-fəngk-tor-əm). [Law Latin] Scots law. Concerning the status of the decedent. • The phrase was often used to refer to questions about the decedent’s legitimacy.

de statuto mercatorio (dee stə-tyoo-toh mər-kə-tor-ee-oh), n. [Law Latin “of statute merchant”] Hist. A writ ordering the imprisonment of someone who forfeits a statute-merchant bond until the debt has been paid. See STATUTE MERCHANT.

de statuto stapulae (dee stə-tyoo-toh stay-pyā-lee), n. [Law Latin “of statute staple”] Hist. A writ to seize the property of and imprison a person who forfeits a staple-statute bond. See STATUTE STAPLE.

destination. 1. The predetermined end of a course, as of a voyage or package. 2. The act of appointment, esp. in a will; a designation. 3. Scots law. The nomination of heirs — esp. in a certain order — by law or under a will.

4. Scots law. The line of successors so appointed.

destination bill of lading. See BILL OF LADING.

destination contract. See CONTRACT.

destination du père de famille (des-tee-nah-syawn doo pair də fa-mee). [French “destination of the father of the family”] 1. Civil law. The legal standing of the owner of two estates that would be subject to a servitude if they were not owned by the same person. • When the two estates cease to be owned by the same owner, a servitude comes into existence if (1) the servitude is apparent from external signs, such as a roadway or a pipeline, or (2) the common owner recorded a declaration establishing the destination. La. Civ. Code art. 741. 2. Hist. A property use that the owner has intentionally established on one part of the property in favor of another part.

destinatione (des-ti-nay-shee-oh-nee). [Law Latin] Hist. By destination or appointment of an heir. • The phrase appeared in reference to the process, made possible through a destination clause, by which an heir was appointed to a succession in a certain order. See DESTINATION.

destitute (des-ti-t[y]oot), adj. (14c) 1. Deprived; bereft. 2. Not possessing the necessities of life; lacking possessions and resources; indigent.

destitutive fact. See divestitive fact under FACT.

destructibility, n. (18c) The capability of being destroyed by some action, turn of events, or operation of law. — destructible, adj.

destructibility of contingent remainders. (1918)

Property. The common-law doctrine requiring a future interest to vest by the time it is to become possessory or else be totally destroyed, the interest then reverting to the grantor. • The doctrine could be avoided by the use of trustees to preserve contingent remainders. This doctrine has been abolished in all but a few American jurisdictions; the abolishing statutes are commonly termed anti-destructibility statutes. — Also termed destructibility rule. [Cases: Remainders ↻10.]

"The destructibility rule still exists in its old common-law form in Florida. Various authors have suggested that it also exists unchanged in Arkansas, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, and Tennessee; but there are no statutes or recent decisions to clarify the rule's status in these states." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 79 n.46 (2d ed. 1984).

destructible trust. See TRUST.

destruction. 1. The act of destroying or demolishing; the ruining of something. 2. Harm that substantially detracts from the value of property, esp. personal property. 3. The state of having been destroyed.

desuetude (des-wə-t[y]ood). (15c) 1. Lack of use; obsolescence through disuse. 2. The doctrine holding that if a statute or treaty is left unenforced long enough, the courts will no longer regard it as having any legal effect even though it has not been repealed. [Cases: Statutes ↻173.]

"[T]he doctrine of desuetude has had in all legal systems a very limited and cautious application. For the anachronistic statute a better remedy may be found through reinterpretation in the light of new conditions; as Gray remarks with some irony. 'It is not as speedy or as simple a process to interpret a statute out of existence as to repeal it, but with time and patient skill it can often be done.'" Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 38 (1968) (quoting John Chipman Gray, The Nature and Sources of Law 192 (1921)).

"There is no doctrine of desuetude in English law, so a statute never ceases to be in force merely because it is obsolete. Normally there must be an express repeal, but the whole or part of an enactment may be impliedly repealed by a later statute." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 3 (1976).

de superoneratione pasturae (dee soo-pə-roh-nə-ray-shee-oh-nee pas-tyə-ree), n. [Law Latin "of surcharge of pasture"] Hist. A judicial writ against a person who was initially brought into county court for putting too many cattle on pasture, and later was impleaded in the same court on the same charge, and the cause was removed to the superior court at Westminster.

de tabulis exhibendis (dee tab-yə-lis ek-si-ben-dis). [Latin] Roman law. Of producing the tablets of a will. • This was a subject covered under Roman exhibitory interdicts governing the production of documents. A will of a deceased person had to be produced and opened to determine whether the applicant had rights under it.

detachiare (di-tak-ee-air-ee or di-tash-ee-air-ee), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To seize a person or property by a writ of attachment or other legal remedy.

detainee. A person held in custody, confined, or delayed by an authority, such as law enforcement or a government.

ghost detainee. See secret detainee.

secret detainee. A person who is held, usu. without being formally charged with a crime or facing any other legal proceedings, in an undisclosed place, and whose detention is unknown to anyone other than the detaining authority. — Also termed ghost detainee. See secret detention under DETENTION.

detainer. (17c) 1. The action of detaining, withholding, or keeping something in one's custody.

forcible detainer. See FORCIBLE DETAINER.

unlawful detainer. (18c) The unjustifiable retention of the possession of real property by one whose original entry was lawful, as when a tenant holds over after lease termination despite the landlord's demand for possession. [Cases: Forcible Entry and Detainer ↻5.]

2. The confinement of a person in custody. 3. A writ authorizing a prison official to continue holding a prisoner in custody. [Cases: Extradition and Detainers ↻52.] 4. A person who detains someone or something.

de tallagio non concedendo (dee tə-lay-jee-oh non kon-sə-den-doh), n. [Law Latin "of not granting tallage"] Hist. The title of a statute declaring that no taxes will be imposed by the king or his heirs without the consent of the archbishops, bishops, earls, barons, knights, and other freemen of the realm. • The statute has been used to support the constitutional doctrine disallowing taxation except by Parliament. 34 Edw. 1 st. 4.

detection. The act of discovering or revealing something that was hidden, esp. to solve a crime.

"There is a clear distinction between inducing a person to do an unlawful act and setting a trap to catch him in the execution of a criminal plan of his own conception. There is also a distinction between the terms 'detection' and 'entrapment,' as applied to the activities of law enforcement officers. Legitimate detection of crime occurs when officers test a suspected person by offering him an opportunity to transgress the law in such manner as is usual in the activity alleged to be unlawful. On the other hand, entrapment occurs when officers induce a person to violate the law when he would not otherwise do so." 21 Am. Jur. 2d Criminal Law § 202 (1981).

de tempore cujus contrarium memoria hominum non existit (dee tem-pə-ree k[y]oo-jəs kon-trair-ee-əm mə-mor-ee-ə hom-ə-nəm non eg-zis-tit). [Latin] From time whereof the memory of man does not exist to the contrary. See LEGAL MEMORY.

de tempore in tempus et ad omnia tempora (dee tem-pə-ree in tem-pəs et ad om-nee-ə tem-pə-rə). [Latin] From time to time, and at all times.

de temps dont memorie ne court (də tahɛn dawn mem-ə-ree nə koor). [Law French] From time whereof memory does not run; time out of human memory. • This Law French phrasing was a forerunner of Blackstone's classic formulation: "time whereof the memory of man does not run to the contrary." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 460–61 (1765). See LEGAL MEMORY.

détente (day-tahnt). [French] 1. The relaxation of tensions between two or more parties, esp. nations. 2. A policy promoting such a relaxation of tensions. 3. A period during which such tensions are relaxed. Cf. ENTENTE; ALLIANCE.

detentio (di-ten-shee-oh), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. See possessio naturalis under POSSESSIO. 2. Hist. Detention; detainment, as opposed to captio ("taking"). See possessio naturalis under POSSESSIO.

detention, n. (15c) 1. The act or fact of holding a person in custody; confinement or compulsory delay. — detain, vb.

investigative detention. (1968) The holding of a suspect without formal arrest during the investigation of the suspect's participation in a crime. • Detention of this kind is constitutional only if probable cause exists. [Cases: Arrest ⇨63.5.]

pretrial detention. (1962) 1. The holding of a defendant before trial on criminal charges either because the established bail could not be posted or because release was denied. [Cases: Bail ⇨42.] 2. In a juvenile-delinquency case, the court's authority to hold in custody, from the initial hearing until the probable-cause hearing, any juvenile charged with an act that, if committed by an adult, would be a crime. • If the court finds that releasing the juvenile would create a serious risk that before the return date the juvenile might commit a criminal act, it may order the juvenile detained pending a probable-cause hearing. Juveniles do not have a constitutional right to bail. The Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of such statutes in Schall v. Martin, 467 U.S. 253, 104 S.Ct. 2403 (1984). — Also termed temporary detention. [Cases: Infants ⇨192.]

preventive detention. (1952) Confinement imposed usu. on a criminal defendant who has threatened to escape, poses a risk of harm, or has otherwise violated the law while awaiting trial, or on a mentally ill person who may cause harm.

secret detention. The holding of a suspect in an undisclosed place, without formal charges, a legal hearing, or access to legal counsel, and without the knowledge of anyone other than the detaining authority. See secret detainee under DETAINEE.

2. Custody of property; esp., an employee's custody of the employer's property without being considered as having legal possession of it.

detention hearing. See HEARING.

detention in a reformatory. A juvenile offender's sentence of being sent to a reformatory school for some period. [Cases: Infants ⇨223.1.]

determinable, adj. (15c) 1. Liable to end upon the happening of a contingency; terminable <fee simple determinable>. 2. Able to be determined or ascertained <the delivery date is determinable because she kept the written invoice>.

determinable easement. See EASEMENT.

determinable estate. See ESTATE (1).

determinable fee. 1. See fee simple determinable under FEE SIMPLE. 2. See base fee under FEE (2).

determinable freehold. See determinable estate under ESTATE (1).

determinate hospitalization. A fixed period of hospitalization, usu. by civil commitment.

determinate obligation. See OBLIGATION.

determinate sentence. See SENTENCE.

determinate sentencing. See mandatory sentencing under SENTENCING.

determination, n. (14c) 1. A final decision by a court or administrative agency <the court's determination of the issue>. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨489; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨928.]

initial determination. The first determination made by the Social Security Administration of a person's eligibility for benefits. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ⇨8.5, 142.15, 175.25.]

2. The ending or expiration of an estate or interest in property, or of a right, power, or authority <the easement's determination after four years>. — determine, vb.

determination letter. (1929) A letter issued by the Internal Revenue Service in response to a taxpayer's request, giving an opinion about the tax significance of a transaction, such as whether a nonprofit corporation is entitled to tax-exempt status. — Also termed ruling letter. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3049.]

determinative judgment. See final judgment under JUDGMENT.

determinism. (sometimes cap.) A philosophy that human behavior is governed primarily by preexisting conditions, such as family or environmental factors, and is not influenced by will. — deterministic, adj.

de termino moto (dee tər-mə-noh moh-toh). [Law Latin] Hist. The common-law offense of moving or defacing landmarks. • This was considered a serious crime because of the importance that agrarian laws attached to landmarks.

deterrence, n. (1861) The act or process of discouraging certain behavior, particularly by fear; esp., as a goal of criminal law, the prevention of criminal behavior by fear of punishment. Cf. REHABILITATION (1); RETRIBUTION (1). [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ⇨41.] — deter, vb. — deterrent, adj.

general deterrence. (1949) A goal of criminal law generally, or of a specific conviction and sentence, to discourage people from committing crimes.

special deterrence. (1955) A goal of a specific conviction and sentence to dissuade the offender from committing crimes in the future.

deterrent, n. (1824) Something that impedes; something that prevents .

deterrent danger. See DANGER.

deterrent punishment. See PUNISHMENT.

de theolonio (dee thee-ə-loh-nee-oh), n. [Law Latin “of toll”] Hist. A writ of trespass available to a person prevented from taking toll. See TOLL.

de tigno juncto (dee tig-noh jəngk-toh). See actio de tigno juncto under ACTIO.

detinet (det-i-net). [Latin “he detains”] A holding back; detention. • An action in debt may be in detinet when the plaintiff alleges that the defendant wrongfully kept goods, as distinguished from wrongfully taking them. An action in debt may also be in detinet when it is brought by or against someone other than an original party to the debt, such as an executor. An action of replevin is in detinet when the defendant retains possession of the property until after the judgment. Cf. DEBET ET DETINET.

detinue (det-i-nyoo or -noo). (15c) A common-law action to recover personal property wrongfully taken or withheld by another. Cf. REPLEVIN; TROVER. [Cases: Detinue ⇨ I.]

“A claim in detinue lies at the suit of a person who has an immediate right to the possession of the goods against a person who is in actual possession of them, and who, upon proper demand, fails or refuses to deliver them up without lawful excuse. Detinue at the present day has two main uses. In the first place, the plaintiff may desire the specific restitution of his chattels and not damages for their conversion. He will then sue in detinue, not in trover. In the second place, the plaintiff will have to sue in detinue if the defendant sets up no claim of ownership and has not been guilty of trespass; for the original acquisition in detinue sur bailment was lawful.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 111 (17th ed. 1977).

detinue of goods in frankmarriage. Hist. A writ allowing a divorced wife to obtain the goods given to her during the marriage.

detinue sur bailment (det-i-nyoo sər bayl-mənt) [Law French] Hist. An action to recover property that the defendant acquired by bailment but refuses to return.

detinuit (di-tin-yoo-it). [Latin “he has detained”] (Of property) the former condition of being withheld. • An action is said to be in the detinuit when the plaintiff finally recovers possession of the property claimed under a writ of replevin.

detour, n. Torts. An employee’s minor deviation from the employer’s business for personal reasons. • Because a detour falls within the scope of employment, the employer is still vicariously liable for the employee’s actions. Cf. FROLIC. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 3061(1); Workers’ Compensation ⇨ 666.]

detournement (di-tuurn-mənt), n. An employee’s misappropriation of the employer’s funds.

detractio, n. (14c) The removal of personal property from one state to another after transfer of title by a will or inheritance.

de transgressione (dee trans-gresh-ee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin “of trespass”] The general name of various writs of trespass. See TRESPASS.

de transgressione, ad audiendum et terminandum (dee trans-gresh-ee-oh-nee, ad aw-dee-en-dəm et tər-mi-nan-dəm), n. [Law Latin “of trespass, for determining and hearing a misdemeanor”] Hist. A commission for hearing and determining an outrage or misdemeanor.

detriment. (15c) 1. Any loss or harm suffered by a person or property. 2. Contracts. The relinquishment of some legal right that a promisee would have otherwise been entitled to exercise. — Also termed legal detriment. Cf. BENEFIT (2).

“A promise or an act may be a detriment although on balance the promisor is making a good bargain. Thus a promise to pay £10,000 for a Rolls Royce worth £12,000, is none the less a detriment, and a good consideration for a promise to deliver the car.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 101 (3d ed. 1981).

detriment to a promisee. Contracts. Consideration offered by a promisee to a promisor, esp. in a unilateral contract. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 52.]

detrimental reliance. See RELIANCE.

detunicari (di-tyoo-ni-kair-i), vb. [Latin “to be revealed”] To discover; to lay open.

de una parte (dee yoo-nə pahr-tee), n. [Latin] Of one party. • A deed is de una parte when only one party grants something to another, as distinguished from a deed inter partes. See INTER PARTES.

deuterogamy (d[y]oo-tər-og-ə-mee), n. [fr. Greek deuterogamia “second marriage”] A second marriage after the death of or divorce from the first spouse, or after an annulment of a first marriage. — Also termed digama; digamy.

de uxore rapta et abducta (dee ək-sər-ee rap-tə et ab-dək-tə), n. [Law Latin “of seizing and carrying away a man’s wife”] Hist. A writ of trespass for a man whose wife had been raped and carried away.

devadiatus (di-vad-ee-ay-təs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A defendant without a surety. — Also termed divadatus.

devaluation, n. The reduction in the value of one currency in relation to another currency. Cf. REVALUATION. — devalue, vb.

devastation. (17c) 1. An executor’s squandering or mismanagement of the deceased’s estate. 2. An act of destruction. 3. WASTE (1).

devastaverunt (di-vas-tə-veer-ənt). [Latin pl. of devastavit “he (or she) has wasted”] They have wasted. • This word usu. referred to both an executor’s waste of a decedent’s property and the action against the executor for that waste.

devastavit (dev-ə-stay-vit), n. [Latin “he (or she) has wasted”] A fiduciary’s failure to administer an estate or trust promptly and properly, esp. by spending extravagantly or misapplying assets. • A fiduciary who commits waste in this way becomes personally liable to those having claims on the assets, such as creditors and beneficiaries.

de vasto (dee vas-toh), n. [Law Latin "of waste"] A writ allowing a reversioner or remainderman to compel a tenant for life or for years to appear and answer for the waste and resulting damage to the plaintiff's inheritance. See WASTE (1).

developed water. See WATER.

developing country. Int'l law. A country that is not as economically or politically advanced as the main industrial powers. • Developing countries are located mostly in Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, the Middle East, and Latin and South America. — Also termed developing state; underdeveloped country; less-developed country; Third World country.

"Pertinent terminology has undergone extensive changes in the past 40 years. At the very start, before the category found its way into official texts, economic and political writings referred mainly to 'poor' or 'backward' countries. In the late 1940s, the term 'underdeveloped countries' came into common usage in economic literature and in the jargon of international organizations. It was replaced in the 1950s by the term 'less developed countries,' for which the current 'developing countries' was eventually substituted. These terms are essentially interchangeable as they refer to the same group and kind of countries. However, variations in the use of the term reflect significant changes in the perception of the central issue, namely, economic development, as well as responses to justified sensitivities on the part of the countries principally concerned." A.A. Fatouros, "Developing States," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 1017 (1992).

development. (1885) 1. A substantial human-created change to improved or unimproved real estate, including the construction of buildings or other structures. 2. An activity, action, or alteration that changes undeveloped property into developed property.

developmental disability. See DISABILITY (2).

developmental neglect. See NEGLECT.

development-stage company. See COMPANY.

de ventre inspiciendo (dee ven-tree in-spish-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin "of (or for) inspecting the belly"] Hist. 1. A writ allowing a presumptive heir to summon a jury of matrons to verify the pregnancy of a widow suspected of feigning the pregnancy to produce a supposed heir. — Also termed ad ventrem inspiciendum. See venire facias tot matronas under VENIRE FACIAS.

"And this gives occasion to a proceeding at common law, where a widow is suspected to feign herself with child, in order to produce a supposititious heir to the estate: an attempt which the rigor of the Gothic constitutions esteemed equivalent to the most atrocious theft, and therefore punished with death. In this case with us the heir presumptive may have a writ de ventre inspiciendo to examine whether she be with child, or not . . . and, if the widow be upon due examination found not pregnant, any issue she may afterwards produce, though within nine months, will be bastard." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 444 (1765).

2. A writ providing a temporary stay of execution if a jury of matrons determines that a woman scheduled for execution and claiming pregnancy is "quick with child." • The execution would be postponed until after the birth, but if the woman became pregnant a second time before execution, she had no remedy. — Sometimes shortened to ventre inspiciendo. — Also spelled de ventre in spiciendo.

de verbo in verbum (dee var-boh in var-bəm). [Law Latin] Word for word.

divest (di-vest), vb. 1. Hist. To deprive (a person) of possession, title, or property. 2. To take; to draw away. — Also spelled divest.

deviance, n. (1941) The quality or state of departing from established norms, esp. in social customs. — deviate (dee-vee-ayt), vb. — deviant, adj. & n. — deviate (dee-vee-ət), n.

deviation. 1. Generally, a change from a customary or agreed-on course of action. 2. Employment law. A departure from one's course of employment to tend to a personal matter. • A deviation from the course of employment may be an issue in disputes about workers' compensation or about the employer's tort liability to third parties based on the employee's actions. See COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT. Cf. FROLIC. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 3047; Workers' Compensation ⇨ 666.] 3. Insurance. A departure by an insured party from a routine course of action, resulting in increased risk of some loss that the insured is indemnified against. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 3059.] 4. Maritime law. A departure from the terms expressed in a bill of lading or other transportation contract.

"For both geographic deviations and quasi-deviations, the contractual voyage is the benchmark against which the carrier's performance is to be measured. If the parties agreed to an indirect route, the carrier commits no deviation in following it; if the parties agreed to deck carriage, the carrier may stow the cargo on deck. All deviations 'have one common, indispensable element — a violation of the terms of the bill of lading.'" Michael F. Sturley, "Deviation Defined," in 2A Benedict on Admiralty 122 (7th rev. ed. 2002) (quoting Rockwell Int'l Corp. v. M/V Incotrans Spirit, 707 F. Supp. 272, 273 (S.D. Tex. 1989), aff'd, 998 F.2d 316 (5th Cir. 1993)). [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 125.]

quasi-deviation. A deviation from an agreed-on shipping term other than a deviation in course or destination (e.g., an unreasonable delay or the unauthorized carriage of cargo on deck). [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 125.]

reasonable deviation. A deviation that is justified by circumstances. • If a deviation is reasonable, the carrier does not lose its usual limitations and exemptions under the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 125, 138.]

unreasonable deviation. A deviation that is not justified by circumstances. • An unreasonable deviation causes the carrier to lose the benefit of its usual limitations and exemptions under the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 125, 138.]

deviation doctrine. (1948) 1. A principle allowing variation from a term of a will or trust to avoid defeating the document's purpose. 2. A principle allowing an agent's activity to vary slightly from the scope of the principal's permission. 3. Maritime law. The rule that a carrier loses the benefit of its limitations and exemptions under the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act if a deviation from the terms of the bill of lading is unreasonable, but does not if it is reasonable. [Cases: Shipping ⇨138.]

deviation-well survey. An examination to determine whether a well is bottomed under another person's land.

device. (14c) 1. Patents. A mechanical invention, as differentiated in patent law from a chemical discovery. • A device may be an apparatus or an article of manufacture. — Also termed machine. [Cases: Patents ⇨11.] 2. A scheme to trick or deceive; a stratagem or artifice, as in the law relating to fraud. [Cases: Fraud ⇨3.]

de vicineto (dee vi-sin-ə-toh or -si-nə-toh). [Law Latin] From a vicinage; from a neighborhood. • This term was generally used in reference to a jury pool. See DE CORPORE COMITATUS.

de vi laica amovenda (dee vi lay-ə-kə ay-moh-ven-də), n. [Law Latin “of removing a lay force”] Hist. A writ allowing a parson claiming rights to a church to order a sheriff to remove a group of laymen who, with another parson, had taken control of the church and prevented the new parson from entering.

deviling (dev-ə-ling). 1. The act of a barrister's handing a brief over to another to handle a case. 2. The practice of a junior barrister (known as a “devil”) who drafts pleadings or other documents for a senior barrister who approves them, signs them, and is ultimately responsible for the work. — Also spelled devilling.

devil on the neck. Hist. A torture device made of irons that fastened to a person's neck and legs and then wrenched together to either gradually or quickly break the person's back. • It was often used to coerce confessions.

devisable, adj. (16c) 1. Capable of being bequeathed by a will. 2. Capable of being invented. 3. Feigned.

devisavit vel non (dev-ə-say-vit [or -zay-vit] vel non), n. [Law Latin “he (or she) devises or not”] Hist. An issue directed from a chancery court to a court of law to determine the validity of a will that has been contested, as by an allegation of fraud or testamentary incapacity. See VEL NON.

devise (di-viz), n. (15c) 1. The act of giving property by will. • Although this term traditionally referred to gifts of real property — and in British usage the term is still confined to real property — in American usage the term has been considerably broadened. In both the Restatement of Property and the Uniform Probate Code, a disposition of any property by will is a devise. In the United States today, it is pedantry to insist that the noun devise be restricted to real property. [Cases: Wills ⇨1.] 2. The provision in a will containing such a gift. 3. Property disposed of in a will. 4. A will disposing of property. Cf. TESTAMENT (1); BEQUEST; LEGACY. — devise, vb.

alternative devise. A devise that, under the terms of the will, is designed to displace another devise if one or more specified events occur. — Also termed secondary devise. [Cases: Wills ⇨553, 856.]

conditional devise. (18c) A devise that depends on the occurrence of some uncertain event. [Cases: Wills ⇨639–668.]

demonstrative devise. A devise, usu. of a specific amount of money or quantity of property, that is primarily payable from a designated source, but that may be payable from the estate's general assets if the designated property is insufficient. See Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 5.1 (1999). Cf. pecuniary devise. [Cases: Wills ⇨751, 755.]

executory devise. (17c) An interest in land, created by will, that takes effect in the future and depends on a future contingency; a limitation, by will, of a future estate or interest in land when the limitation cannot, consistently with legal rules, take effect as a remainder. • An executory devise, which is a type of conditional limitation, differs from a remainder in three ways: (1) it needs no particular estate to support it, (2) with it a fee simple or lesser estate can be limited after a fee simple, and (3) with it a remainder can be limited in a chattel interest after a particular estate for life is created in that interest. See conditional limitation under LIMITATION. [Cases: Wills ⇨7.]

failed devise. See lapsed devise.

general devise. (18c) 1. A devise, usu. of a specific amount of money or quantity of property, that is payable from the estate's general assets. See Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 5.1 (1999). 2. A devise that passes the testator's lands without specifically enumerating or describing them. [Cases: Wills ⇨583.]

lapsed devise. (18c) A devise that fails because the testator outlives the named recipient. — Also termed failed devise; failed gift.

pecuniary devise. A demonstrative devise consisting of money. Cf. demonstrative devise. [Cases: Wills ⇨750.]

primary devise. A devise to the first person named as taker. • For example, a devise of “Blackacre to A, but if A does not survive me then to B” names A as the recipient of the primary devise and B as the recipient of the secondary or alternative devise.

residuary devise. (18c) A devise of the remainder of the testator's property left after other specific devises are taken. [Cases: Wills ⇨586.]

secondary devise. See alternative devise.

specific devise. (18c) A devise that passes a particular piece of property. [Cases: Wills ⇨751.]

younger-generation devise. An alternative devise to a descendant of the recipient of a primary devise. Unif. Probate Code § 2-603. • A devise of "Blackacre to A, but if A does not survive me then to A's child B" creates a younger-generation devise in A's descendant, B. See alternative devise.

devise, vb. To give (property) by will. [Cases: Wills ⇨1.]

"The modern convention which sets apart 'devise' for 'realty' and 'bequeath' for 'personalty' is modern; in the middle ages, the English word . . . is the equivalent of the French word." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 338 (2d ed. 1899).

devisee (dev-ə-zee or di-vi-zee). (16c) A recipient of property by will. Cf. LEGATEE.

first devisee. The first devisee designated to receive an estate under a will.

next devisee. The devisee who receives the remainder of an estate in tail, as distinguished from the first devisee. See FEE TAIL. [Cases: Wills ⇨604.]

residuary devisee. The person named in a will to receive the testator's remaining property after the other devises are distributed.

deviser. (16c) One who invents or contrives <the deviser of these patents>.

devisor. (16c) One who disposes of property (usu. real property) in a will. [Cases: Wills ⇨1.]

devoir (də-vwahr or dev-wahr). Hist. A duty; a tax. — Also spelled devoire.

"Devoire is as much as to say a duty. It is used in the statute of 2 R. 2, cap. 3, where it is provided, that all the western merchants, being of the king's amity, shall pay all manner of customs and subsidies, and other devoire of Calais." Termes de la Ley 168 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

devolution (dev-ə-loo-shən), n. (16c) The act or an instance of transferring one's rights, duties, or powers to another; the passing of such rights, duties, or powers by transfer or succession <the federal government's devolution of police power to the states>. — devolutionary, adj. — devolutionist, n.

devolutive appeal. See APPEAL.

devolve (di-vahlv), vb. (16c) 1. To transfer (rights, duties, or powers) to another. 2. To pass (rights, duties, or powers) by transmission or succession. See DEVOLUTION.

devy (də-vi), vb. [Law French] To die.

de warrantia chartae (dee wə-ran-shee-ə kahr-tee), n. [Law Latin "of a warranty of charter"] Hist. A writ allowing a tenant enfeoffed with a warranty, who was impleaded in an assize or other action in which the

"This we still make use of in the form of common recoveries, which are grounded on a writ of entry; a species of action that we may remember relies chiefly on the weakness of the tenant's title, who therefore vouches another person to warrant it . . . In assises indeed, where the principal question is whether the demandant or his ancestors were or were not in possession till the ouster happened, and the title of the tenant is little (if at all) discussed, there no voucher is allowed; but the tenant may bring a writ of warrantia chartae against the warrantor, to compel him to assist him with a good plea or defence, or else to render damages and the value of the land, if recovered against the tenant." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 299 (1768).

de warrantia diei (dee wə-ran-shee-ə dī-ee-i), n. [Law Latin "of warranty of day"] Hist. A writ ordering a judge not to default a party for nonappearance because the Crown warranted that the party was busy in its service.

dextrarius (dek-strair-ee-əs), Hist. One at the right hand of another.

dextras dare (dek-strəs dair-ee), vb. [Latin "to give right hands"] 1. To shake hands to show friendship. 2. To give oneself up to the power of another.

DFA. abbr. DELAYED FUNDS AVAILABILITY.

DFAS. abbr. DEFENSE FINANCE AND ACCOUNTING SERVICE.

DHS. abbr. 1. DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY. 2. Department of human services. See DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE.

DIA. abbr. DEFENSE INTELLIGENCE AGENCY.

diaconate (di-ak-ə-nit), n. [Law Latin] A deacon's office.

diaconus (di-ak-ə-nəs), n. [Law Latin] A deacon. See DEACON.

diagnosis (di-əg-noh-sis). (17c) 1. The determination of a medical condition (such as a disease) by physical examination or by study of its symptoms. 2. The result of such an examination or study. Cf. PROGNOSIS.

clinical diagnosis. A diagnosis from a study of symptoms only.

physical diagnosis. A diagnosis from physical examination only.

diagnostic commitment. See COMMITMENT.

dialectic (di-ə-lek-tik), n. (16c) 1. A school of logic that teaches critical examination of the truth of an opinion, esp. by discussion or debate. • The method was applied by ancient philosophers, such as Plato and Socrates, primarily in the context of conversational discussions involving questions and answers, and also by more modern philosophers, such as Immanuel Kant, who viewed it as a theory of fallacies, and G.W.F. Hegel, who applied the term to his philosophy proceeding from thesis, to antithesis, to synthesis. 2. An argument made by critically examining logical consequences. 3.

A logical debate. 4. A disputant; a debater. Pl. dialectics.

diallage (dī-əl-ə-jee), n. [fr. Greek diallagē “interchange”] A rhetorical figure of speech in which arguments are placed in several points of view, and then brought to bear on one point.

Dialogus de Scaccario (dī-əl-ə-gəs dee skə-kair-ee-oh), n. [Law Latin “a dialogue of or about the Exchequer”] Hist. A treatise, written during the reign of Henry II, on the Court of Exchequer, set up in imaginary dialogue form between a master and a disciple. • Although some originally attributed the work to Gervase of Tilbury, it was probably written by Richard Fitz Nigel, the bishop of London under Richard I, and the former Treasurer of the Exchequer.

“The Dialogus de Scaccario is an anonymous book, but there can be little doubt that we are right in ascribing it to Richard Fitz Neal: that is to say, to Richard the son of that Nigel, bishop of Ely . . . The book stands out as an unique book in the history of medieval England, perhaps in the history of medieval Europe. A high officer of state, the trusted counsellor of a powerful king, undertakes to explain to all whom it may concern the machinery of government. He will not deal in generalities, he will condescend to minute details. Perhaps the book was not meant for the general public so much as for the numerous clerks who were learning their business in the exchequer, but still that such a book should be written, is one of the wonderful things of Henry’s wonderful reign.” I Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 161–62 (2d ed. 1898).

dianatic (dī-ə-nat-ik). See DIANOETIC.

dianoetic (dī-ə-noh-et-ik), n. [Greek dianoetikos, fr. dia- “through” + noein “to revolve in the mind”] Archaic. A form of logical reasoning that proceeds from one subject to another. — Also termed (erroneously) dianatic.

diarchy. See DYARCHY.

diarium (dī-air-ee-əm), n. [fr. Latin dies “day”] Roman law. An allowance (usu. of food) needed for a day; a daily allowance of food or pay. Pl. diaria (dī-air-ee-ə).

diatim (dī-ay-təm). [fr. Latin dies “day”] Every day; daily.

dica (dī-kə), n. [Law Latin] An account tally. See TALLY (1).

dicast (dī-kast or dik-ast), n. [Greek dikastes] Hist. An ancient Greek officer sitting as both judge and juror. • Each dicast was generally a free citizen over the age of 30. The dicasts sat together in groups of between 100 to 500, according to each case’s importance, and decided cases by a majority.

dicis causa (dī-sis kaw-zə). [Latin] Roman law. For form’s sake; on the surface. • The phrase appeared in reference to transactions completed in a certain form to conceal their true purpose.

dictate, vb. 1. To pronounce orally for transcription. 2. To order; to command authoritatively.

dictation. 1. The act of speaking words to be transcribed. 2. The words so transcribed.

dictator. 1. Roman law. An absolute ruler appointed in an emergency for a term of six months and subject to reappointment.

“In special emergencies, particularly in times of grave crisis, either consul might appoint a dictator who exercised supreme authority, but not beyond six months, unless reappointed. This was, in effect, a temporary reversion to monarchy.” R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 14 (4th ed. 1956).

2. A person, esp. a ruler, with absolute authority.

dictum (dik-təm), n. (16c) 1. A statement of opinion or belief considered authoritative because of the dignity of the person making it. 2. A familiar rule; a maxim. 3. OBITER DICTUM. Pl. dicta. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 92.]

“As a dictum is by definition no part of the doctrine of the decision, and as the citing of it as a part of the doctrine is almost certain to bring upon a brief maker adverse comment, lawyers are accustomed to speak of a dictum rather slightly, and sometimes they go so far as to intimate a belief that the pronouncing of a dictum is the doing of a wrong. Yet it must not be forgotten that dicta are frequently, and indeed usually, correct, and that to give an occasional illustration, or to say that the doctrine of the case would not apply to some case of an hypothetical nature, or to trace the history of a doctrine, even though it be conceded, as it must, that such passages are not essential to the deciding of the very case, is often extremely useful to the profession.” William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 307 (3d ed. 1914).

dictum proprium (dik-təm proh-pree-əm). A personal or individual dictum that is given by the judge who delivers an opinion but that is not necessarily concurred in by the whole court and is not essential to the disposition of the case. — Also termed (loosely) dictum propria.

gratis dictum (gray-tis dik-təm). 1. A voluntary statement; an assertion that a person makes without being obligated to do so. 2. A court’s stating of a legal principle more broadly than is necessary to decide the case. 3. A court’s discussion of points or questions not raised by the record or its suggestion of rules not applicable in the case at bar.

judicial dictum. An opinion by a court on a question that is directly involved, briefed, and argued by counsel, and even passed on by the court, but that is not essential to the decision. Cf. OBITER DICTUM.

obiter dictum. See OBITER DICTUM.

simplex dictum (sim-pleks dik-təm). An unproved or dogmatic statement. See IPSE DIXIT.

dictum de Kenilworth (dik-təm dee ken-əl-wərth), n. [Law Latin “edict of Kenilworth”] Hist. A declaration of an agreement between Edward I and the barons who had opposed him under the leadership of Simon de Montfort. • The agreement, which concerned rent on the lands forfeited in the rebellion, was so called because it was made at Kenilworth castle in Warwickshire in A.D. 1266. It was published in the Statutes of the Realm and 52 Hen. 3.

dictum page. See pinpoint citation under CITATION (3).

dictum propria. See dictum proprium under DICTIONARY.

diebus feriatis (dī-ə-bəs feer-ee-ay-tis). [Latin] Hist. On holidays.

diei dictio (dī-ee-ī dik-shee-oh). [Latin "appointing a day"] Roman law. 1. A magistrate's notice summoning the accused to appear on a fixed day for trial. 2. The service of a summons. — Also written diei dictio, diem dicere.

diem clausit extremum (dī-əm klaw-zit ek-stree-məm), n. [Law Latin "he closed his last day"] Hist. 1. A chancery writ, founded on the statute of Marlbury, ordering the county escheator, after the death of a chief tenant of the Crown, to summon a jury to determine the amount and value of land owned by the chief tenant, to determine the next heir, and to reclaim the property for the Crown. • It was a type of inquisition post mortem.

"Diem clausit extremum is a writ that lies where the king's tenant that holds in chief, dies; then this writ shall be directed to the excheator, to inquire of what estate he was seised, who is next heir, and his age, and of the certainty and value of the land, and of whom it is holden; and the inquisition shall be returned into the chancery, which is commonly called the office after the death of that person." Termes de la Ley 169 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

2. An Exchequer writ ordering a sheriff to summon a jury to investigate a Crown debtor's place of death and amount of property owned, and to levy the property of the deceased's heirs and executors. • It was repealed by the Crown Proceedings Act of 1947.

"And there is another writ of diem clausit extremum awarded out of the exchequer, after the death of an accountant or debtor of his majesty, to levy the debt of his heir, executor, administrator's lands or goods." Termes de la Ley 169 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

dies (dī-eez), n. [Latin] A day; days. Pl. dies.

dies ad quem (dī-eez ad kwem), n. [Latin "the day to which"] Civil law. An ending date for a transaction; the ending date for computing time, such as the day on which interest no longer accrues.

dies amoris (dī-eez ə-mor-is), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A day of favor; esp., a day set by the court for the defendant to make an appearance. • This was usu. the fourth day of the term, which was the first day the court normally sat for business. In addition, the defendant usu. had three days of grace from the summons to appear, but an appearance on the fourth day quarto die post ("on the fourth day thereafter") was usu. sufficient.

dies a quo (dī-eez ay kwoh), n. [Latin "the day from which"] Civil law. A transaction's commencement date; the date from which to compute time, such as a day when interest begins to accrue. La. Civ. Code art. 1784.

dies cedit (dī-eez see-dit). [Latin "the time begins to run"] Roman & Scots law. The day on which an interest, esp. a legacy, vests; the day on which a conditional obligation becomes due. • An interest usu., but not always, vested on the day of the testator's death. — Also termed dies cedens. Cf. dies venit.

"A legacy was due, or became a valid right, either at the death of the testator or the occurrence of a condition precedent. This vesting of the property or the accruing of an obligation determined the content and nature of the interests involved. What the legatary got was discovered by examining what the legacy actually carried with it on the day when it became vested. To express the fact that the legacy had become vested, the technical expression dies cedit was used." Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 434-35 (1927).

dies comitiales (dī-eez kə-mish-ee-ay-leez). [Latin] Roman law. The 190 days in the year when an election could be held or the people could assemble as a legislative body. • The praetors could not hold court while a legislative assembly was in session.

dies communes in banco (dī-eez kə-myoo-nee-z in bang-koh), n. [Law Latin "common days before the bench"] 1. Regular appearance dates in court. — Also termed common-return days. 2. An enactment printed under the Statutes of Henry III, regulating continuances and writ return dates.

dies datus (dī-eez day-təs), n. [Law Latin "a given day"] A continuance, esp. for a defendant before a declaration is filed; a time of respite in a case. • A continuance granted after the filing of the declaration is called an imparlance. See IMPARLANCE.

dies datus in banco (dī-eez day-təs in bang-koh), n. [Law Latin] A day given before the bench, as distinguished from a day at nisi prius.

dies datus partibus (dī-eez day-təs pahr-tə-bəs), n. [Law Latin "a day given to the parties"] A continuance; an adjournment.

dies datus prece partium (dī-eez day-təs pree-see pahr-shee-əm), n. [Law Latin "a day given at the prayer of the parties"] A day given at the parties' request.

dies Dominicus (dī-eez də-min-i-kəs), n. [Latin] The Lord's day; Sunday.

dies excrescens (dī-eez ek-skree-sənz), n. [Law Latin "the increasing day"] The additional day in a leap year.

dies fasti (dī-eez fas-tī). [Latin] Roman law. A day when justice could be administered; a day when the praetor could officially pronounce the three words "do," "dico," and "addico." — Also called triverbial days. Cf. NEFASTUS.

dies feriati (dī-eez fer-ee-ay-tī), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. A holiday; holidays.

dies gratiae (dī-eez gray-shee-ee), n. [fr. Law French jour de grace] Hist. A day of grace, usu. granted to the plaintiff.

dies in banco. See DAYS IN BANK.

dies intercesi (dī-eez in-tər-sī-zī). [Latin "divided days"] Roman law. A day when the courts were open for only part of the day.

dies iudicis (dī-eez juu-rid-i-kəs), n. [Latin] A day when justice can be administered. • This term was derived from the civil-law term dies fasti. See dies fasti.

dies legitimus (dī-eez lə-jit-i-məs). [Latin] Roman law. A lawful day; a law day.

dies marchiae (dī-eez mah-ree-ee), n. [Law Latin “a day of the march”] Hist. In the reign of Richard II, the annual day set aside for the wardens of the English and Scottish borders to hold peace talks and resolve differences.

dies nefasti (dī-eez nee-fas-tī), n. 1. NEFASTUS (2). 2. See dies non juridicus.

dies non (dī-eez non). See dies non juridicus.

dies non juridicus (dī-eez non juu-rid-i-kəs), n. [Law Latin “a day not juridical”] A day exempt from court proceedings, such as a holiday or a Sunday. — Often shortened to dies non.

dies pacis (dī-eez pay-sis), n. [Law Latin “day of peace”] Hist. A day of peace. • The days were originally divided into two categories: dies pacis ecclesiae (“a day of the peace of the church”) and dies pacis regis (“a day of the Crown’s peace”).

dies religiosi (dī-eez ri-lij-ee-oh-sī). [Latin] Roman law. Religious days on which it was unlawful to transact legal or political business.

dies solaris (dī-eez sə-lair-is), n. [Law Latin “a solar day”] See solar day under DAY.

dies solis (dī-eez soh-lis). [Latin “day of the sun”] Roman law. Sunday.

dies utiles (dī-eez yoo-tə-leez). [Latin “available days”] Roman law. A day when something can be legally done, such as an application to the praetor to claim an inheritance.

dies venit (dī-eez vee-nit). [Latin “the day has come”] Roman & Scots law. The date when an interest is both vested and actionable. • It is usu. the day when the heir accepts the inheritance and a legatee can claim payment of a legacy. — Also termed dies veniens. Cf. dies cedit.

dies votorum (dī-eez voh-tor-əm), n. [Latin “a day of vows”] A wedding day.

diet. 1. A regimen, esp. of food. 2. (cap.) A nation’s parliamentary assembly, as in Israel, Japan, or some eastern European nations. 3. A governing body’s meeting day for legislative, political, or religious purposes; specif., a national assembly of various European countries, such as the diet of the German empire, which was summoned by the emperor regularly to perform various functions, including levying taxes, enacting laws, and declaring war. 4. Scots law. A day to perform a duty, such as a court sitting day, an appearance day, and a criminal pleading or trial day. — Also spelled dyet.

“In procedure on indictment there are two diets, the pleading diet, when the accused is called to plead, and the trial diet when, if he has pled not guilty, he is tried.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 357 (1980).

dieta (dī-ee-tə), n. [fr. Latin dies “day”] Hist. 1. A day’s journey. 2. A day’s work. 3. A day’s expenses.

dietary law. Any of the body of laws observed by members of various faiths regulating what foods may be eaten, how the foods must be prepared and served, and what combinations and contacts (e.g., between meat and milk) are prohibited.

di. et fi. (dī et fī). abbr. DILECTO ET FIDELI.

Dieu et mon droit (dyuu ay mawn drwah). [French “God and my right”] The motto of the royal arms of England. • It was first used by Richard I and, with the exception of Elizabeth I, was continually used from Edward III to William III, who used the motto je maintiendrey. Queen Anne used Elizabeth I’s motto, semper eadem, but Dieu et mon droit has been used since her death.

Dieu son acte (dyuu sawn akt), n. [Law Latin “an act of God”] Hist. An act of God, beyond human control.

diffacere (di-fay-sə-ree), vb. [fr. Old French deffacer] Hist. To deface; to mutilate. — Also termed disfacere; defacere.

different-department rule. A doctrine holding that people who work for the same employer are not fellow servants if they do not do the same work or do not work in the same department. • This rule, which creates an exception to the fellow-servant doctrine, has been rejected by many jurisdictions. See FELLOW-SERVANT DOCTRINE; fellow servant under SERVANT. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻ 2921.]

differential pricing. (1946) The setting of the price of a product or service differently for different customers. See PRICE DISCRIMINATION.

difforciare (di-for-shee-air-ee), vb. [Law Latin “to deny”] Hist. To keep (something) from someone; to deny (something) to someone.

diffused surface water. See WATER.

DIF system. See DISCRIMINANT FUNCTION.

digama (dig-ə-mə). See DEUTEROGAMY.

digamy (dig-ə-mee). See DEUTEROGAMY.

digest, n. (14c) 1. An index of legal propositions showing which cases support each proposition; a collection of summaries of reported cases, arranged by subject and subdivided by jurisdiction and court. • The chief purpose of a digest is to make the contents of reports available and to group together those cases bearing on some specific point. The American Digest System covers the decisions of all American courts of last resort, state and federal, from 1658 to present. — Abbr. D.; Dig.

“An important and numerous class of books included in the general division designated as books of secondary authority is the group known by the generic name of ‘Digests.’ A Digest is essentially an index to Cases. But it is much more than an ordinary index, for it indicates the holdings and (in some, though not all, publications) the facts of each case. Any particular digest is a summary of the case law coming within its scope, and its units are summaries of particular points of particular cases. What the syllabi of a reported case are to that case, a digest is to many cases. Were a digest simply a collection of citations to cases, arranged logically according to the contents of such cases, it would be a search book; but, being a summary of the case law, it is a book of secondary authority." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 68 (3d ed. 1914).

2. Civil law. (cap.) A compilation and systematic statement of the various areas of law; chiefly, the Pandects of Justinian in 50 books, known as the Digest. — Also termed digesta; digests. See PANDECT (2).

digital agenda. Copyright. A series of 10 proposed changes to copyright law announced by WIPO in 1999 and designed to protect intellectual-property rights on the Internet while promoting e-commerce. — Also termed WIPO digital agenda.

digital cash. See e-money under MONEY.

digital certificate. A publicly available computer-based record that identifies the certifying authority and the subscriber who was issued a digital signature for electronically transmitted documents and that also provides the person's public key for decrypting the digital signature. • Subscribers register with certification authorities to obtain digital signatures. Certificates may include additional information, including issuance and expiration dates, and recommended reliance limits for transactions relying on the certificate. The certificate also serves as an electronic notarization when attached to an electronic document by the sender.

digital fingerprinting. See STEGANOGRAPHY.

Digital Millennium Copyright Act. A 1998 federal law harmonizing United States copyright protection with international law, limiting copyright liability for Internet service providers, and expanding software owners' ability to copy programs. • Among many other provisions, the statute extends copyright protection to computer programs, movies, and other audiovisual works worldwide; attempts to regulate cyberspace; forbids devices whose purpose is to evade digital antipiracy tools; and bars the production or distribution of falsified copyright-management information. 17 USCA §§ 1301–1332. — Abbr. DMCA. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻ 34, 67.3.] dignitary, adj. Of or relating to one's interest in personal dignity, as contrasted with one's interest in freedom from physical injury and property damage. • Tort actions that compensate a plaintiff for a dignitary insult rather than physical injury or property damage include false-light privacy and negligent infliction of emotional distress.

dignitary, n. 1. A person who holds a high rank or honor.
2. Eccles. law. A person who, by virtue of holding a superior office stands above ordinary priests and canons.

dignitary tort. See TORT.

dignity, n. 1. The state of being noble; the state of being dignified. 2. An elevated title or position. 3. A person holding an elevated title; a dignitary. 4. A right to hold a title of nobility, which may be hereditary or for life.

"Dignities may be hereditary, such as peerages . . . or for life, such as life peerages and knighthoods. The dignities of peerages and baronetcies are created by writ or letters patent, that of knighthood by dubbing as knight. A dignity of inheritance may also exist by prescription. Dignities of inheritance are incorporeal hereditaments having been originally annexed to the possession of certain lands or created by a grant of those lands and are generally limited to the grantee and his heirs or his heirs of the body. If heirs are not mentioned, the grantee holds for life only. The heirs are determined by the rules which governed the descent of land prior to 1926." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 358 (1980).

dijudication (di-joo-də-kay-shən). Archaic. A judicial determination.

dilapidation. (often pl.) Damage to a building resulting from acts of either commission or omission. • A dilapidation may give rise to liability if it constitutes an act of waste, a breach of contract, or a statutory violation. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↻ 55, 125, 154, 166.]

dilapidations, action for (də-lap-ə-day-shənʒ). Hist. An action brought by a new incumbent of a benefice for damages rising from the disrepair of the houses or buildings on the benefice. • The incumbent — whether of a rectory, a vicarage, or a chapel — sued the executors or administrators of the incumbent's deceased predecessor (who was not liable for the disrepairs while living). The incumbent of a benefice was bound to maintain the parsonage, farm buildings, and chancel in good and substantial repair, restoring and rebuilding when necessary, according to the original plan. But the incumbent did not have to supply or maintain anything in the nature of ornament.

dilatory (dil-ə-tor-ee), adj. (15c) Tending to cause delay <the judge's opinion criticized the lawyer's persistent dilatory tactics>.

dilatory defense. See DEFENSE (1).

dilatory exception. See EXCEPTION (1).

dilatory fiduciary. See FIDUCIARY.

dilatory motion. 1. See MOTION (1). 2. See MOTION (2).

dilatory plea. See PLEA (3).

dilecto et fideli (di-lek-toh et fi-dee-lee). [Law Latin] To his beloved and faithful. • This phrase was used in various writs. — Abbr. dī. et fi.

diligence. (14c) 1. A continual effort to accomplish something. 2. Care; caution; the attention and care required from a person in a given situation. • The Roman-law equivalent is diligentia. See DILEGENTIA.

"Care, or the absence of negligentia, is diligentia. The use of the word diligence in this sense is obsolete in modern English, though it is still retained as an archaism of legal diction. In ordinary usage, diligence is opposed to idleness, not to carelessness." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 393 n.(i) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

common diligence. 1. See due diligence (1). 2. See ordinary diligence.

due diligence. (18c) 1. The diligence reasonably expected from, and ordinarily exercised by, a person who seeks to satisfy a legal requirement or to discharge an obligation. — Also termed reasonable diligence; common diligence. 2. Corporations & securities. A prospective buyer's or broker's investigation and analysis of a target company, a piece of property, or a newly issued security. • A failure to exercise due diligence may sometimes result in liability, as when a broker recommends a security without first investigating it adequately. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇨ 25.21(4), 25.62(2).] extraordinary diligence. Extreme care that a person of unusual prudence exercises to secure rights or property.

great diligence. The diligence that a very prudent person exercises in handling his or her own property like that at issue. — Also termed high diligence.

low diligence. See slight diligence.

necessary diligence. The diligence that a person is required to exercise to be legally protected.

ordinary diligence. (18c) The diligence that a person of average prudence would exercise in handling his or her own property like that at issue. — Also termed common diligence.

reasonable diligence. (18c) 1. A fair degree of diligence expected from someone of ordinary prudence under circumstances like those at issue. 2. See due diligence (1).

slight diligence. (1836) The diligence that a person of less than common prudence takes with his or her own concerns. — Also termed low diligence.

special diligence. The diligence expected from a person practicing in a particular field of specialty under circumstances like those at issue.

to denote a warrant that may be granted to compel a witness's attendance or to compel production of documents. See EXECUTION (3).

diligence against the heritage. Scots law. A writ of execution allowing a creditor to proceed against a debtor's real property.

diligent, adj. Careful; attentive; persistent in doing something.

diligentia (dil-ə-jen-shee-ə), n. [Latin] Roman law. Carefulness; diligence. • The failure to exercise diligentia might make a person liable if contractually obliged to look after another's interests, or it might result in tort liability. See DILIGENCE. Cf. NEGLIGENTIA.

"The texts distinguish two standards of diligence, a higher and a lower. The higher is the diligence which the good father of a family habitually exhibits in his own affairs (diligentia exacta or exactissima — diligentia boni patrisfamilias). The lower is the diligence which the person in question exhibits in his own affairs (diligentia quam suis rebus). This may, in fact, reach a high degree of diligence or it may not. But, at least, where this standard is applied nothing extraordinary is expected. It is a concrete standard. It is enough that the person in question pursues his normal course. According to a traditional terminology, where the first standard is applied, there is said to be liability for culpa levis in abstracto — slight negligence in the abstract; in the second case there is liability for culpa levis in concreto — slight negligence in the concrete." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 288 (4th ed. 1956).

diligentia exactissima (dil-ə-jen-shee-ə eks-ak-tis-ə-mə). [Latin] Extraordinary diligence that a head of a family habitually exercises in business. — Also termed diligentia exacta; diligentia boni patrisfamilias. See extraordinary diligence under DILIGENCE.

diligentia media (dil-i-jen-shee-ə mee-dee-ə). [Law Latin] Scots law. Middle level of diligence; the level of diligence that a person of ordinary prudence exercises in his or her own affairs. — Also termed diligentia quam suis rebus (dil-ə-jen-shee-ə kwam s[y]oo-is-ree-bəs). See ordinary diligence under DILIGENCE.

diligentia quam suis rebus. See diligentia media.

exacta diligentia (eg-zak-tə dil-ə-jen-shee-ə). [Latin] Roman law. Great care.

diligent inquiry. A careful and good-faith probing to ascertain the truth of something.

diligentibus (də-lij-ee-ay-təs), n. [fr. Latin dis- "apart" + ligius "under legal protection"] A person cast out of the law's protection; an outlaw.

Dillon's rule. The doctrine that a unit of local government may exercise only those powers that the state expressly grants to it, the powers necessarily and fairly implied from that grant, and the powers that are indispensable to the existence of the unit of local government. • For the origins of this rule, see 1 John F. Dillon, The Law of Municipal Corporations § 89, at 115 (3d ed. 1881). [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨ 57.]

dilution. (17c) 1. The act or an instance of diminishing a thing's strength or lessening its value. 2. Corporations. The reduction in the monetary value or voting power of stock by increasing the total number of outstanding shares. 3. Constitutional law. The limitation of the effectiveness of a particular group's vote by legislative reapportionment or political gerrymandering. • Such dilution violates the Equal Protection Clause. — Also termed vote dilution. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷ 3658.] 4. Trademarks. The impairment of a famous trademark's strength, effectiveness, or distinctiveness through the use of the mark on an unrelated product, usu. blurring the trademark's distinctive character or tarnishing it with an unsavory association. • Trademark dilution may occur even when the use is not competitive and when it creates no likelihood of confusion. The elements of trademark dilution are (1) ownership of a famous mark and (2) actual dilution. But a plaintiff does not have to prove actual loss of sales or profits. Moseley v. V Secret Catalogue, Inc., 537 U.S. 418, 123 S.Ct. 1115 (2003). See BLURRING; TARNISHMENT. [Cases: Trademarks ↷ 1458.]

dilution doctrine. Trademarks. The rule protecting a trademark from a deterioration in strength, as when a person seeks to use the mark for an unrelated product.

dimidietas (dim-ə-dī-ə-tas), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Half of something; a moiety.

dimidium (di-mid-ee-əm), n. [Latin "half"] Hist. 1. Half; a half — as in dimidium unius libratae ("half a pound"). 2. An undivided half of something.

dimidius (di-mid-ee-əs), adj. [Latin "half"] Hist. 1. Half; doubled. 2. Loosely, incomplete.

diminished capacity. See CAPACITY (3).

diminished responsibility. See diminished capacity under CAPACITY (3).

diminutio. See DEMINUTIO.

diminution (dim-ə-n[y]oo-shən), n. (14c) 1. The act or process of decreasing, lessening, or taking away. 2. An incompleteness or lack of certification in a court record sent from a lower court to a higher one for review. 3. Trademarks. BLURRING. — diminish (for sense 1), vb.

diminution-in-value method. (1980) A way of calculating damages for breach of contract based on a reduction in market value that is caused by the breach. [Cases: Damages ↷ 123.]

dimissoriae litterae (dim-ə-sor-ee-ee lit-ər-ee), n. [Latin "dimissory letters"] Eccles. law. See DIMISSORY LETTERS.

dimissory letters (dim-ə-sor-ee). 1. Hist. Eccles. law. Documents allowing a clergy member to leave one diocese for another. 2. Eccles. law. Documents provided by one bishop to enable another bishop to ordain a candidate already ordained in the former bishop's diocese.

dimpled chad. See CHAD.

diocesan (dī-ōs-ə-sən), adj. Of or belonging to a diocese; of or relating to the relationship between a bishop and the clergy within the diocese.

diocesan court. See COURT.

diocesan mission. A mission performing its work in a single diocese.

diocesan synod. See SYNOD.

diocese (dī-ə-sees or -sis). 1. Roman law. A division of the later Roman empire into groups of provinces. 2. Eccles. law. A territorial unit of the church, governed by a bishop, and further divided into parishes. 3. Eccles. law. A bishop's jurisdiction. • Several dioceses together are governed by an archbishop.

dioichia (dī-oy-kee-ə), n. [fr. Latin diocesis "a diocese"] A district over which a bishop exercises his spiritual functions.

DIP. abbr. DEBTOR-IN-POSSESSION.

diploma. 1. Roman law. A letter giving permission to use the imperial post. 2. Hist. A royal charter; letters patent. 3. A document that evidences or memorializes graduation from a school or society. Cf. DEGREE (6). [Cases: Schools ↷ 178.] 4. A document that evidences a license or privilege to practice a profession, such as medicine.

diplomacy, n. Int'l law. 1. The art and practice of conducting negotiations between national governments.

open diplomacy. Diplomacy carried on with free access to interested observers and members of the press.

parliamentary diplomacy. The negotiations and discussions carried out in international organizations according to their rules of procedure.

secret diplomacy. Diplomacy carried on behind closed doors. — Also termed quiet diplomacy.

shuttle diplomacy. Diplomatic negotiations assisted by emissaries, who travel back and forth between negotiating countries. • In legal contexts, the term usu. refers to a similar approach used by a mediator in negotiating the settlement of a lawsuit. The mediator travels back and forth between different rooms, one of which is assigned to each side's decision-makers and counsel. The mediator relays offers and demands between the rooms and, by conferring with the parties about their positions and about the uncertainty of litigation, seeks to reach an agreed resolution of the case. The mediator does not bring the parties together in the same room.

2. Loosely, foreign policy. 3. The collective functions performed by a diplomat. — diplomatic, adj. — diplomat, n.

diplomatic, n. See DIPLOMATICS.

diplomatic agent. See AGENT (2).

diplomatic bag. See DIPLOMATIC POUCH.

diplomatic corps. Int'l law. The ambassador and other diplomatic personnel assigned by their government to a foreign capital.

diplomatic immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

diplomatic pouch. 1. A bag containing official correspondence, documents, or articles intended exclusively for official communications of a nation with its missions, consular posts, or delegations. 2. The contents of the bag. — Also termed diplomatic bag; valise diplomatique.

diplomatic protection. Protection given by one country's representatives to a person, usu. its citizen, against another country's alleged violation of international law.

"The term diplomatic protection is not altogether precise. First, not only diplomatic agents and missions and other foreign offices may and do exercise diplomatic protection, but also, at a different level, consuls, and, although very rarely, military forces. Secondly, the term diplomatic protection does not clearly denote the boundary line to other diplomatic activities for the benefit of individuals, such as mere promotion of interests in one's own nationals in a foreign State, or friendly intercessions with foreign authorities. Thus, diplomatic or consular actions to obtain concessions or other government contracts for nationals from the receiving State, or the arrangement of legal defense for a justly imprisoned national are not diplomatic protection in our sense; they are usually neither directed against the other State nor based on a real or alleged violation of international law. All these last-mentioned activities may be called diplomatic protection only if the term is taken in a very broad sense." William Karl Geck, "Diplomatic Protection," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 1046 (1992).

diplomatic relations. Int'l law. The customary form of permanent contact and communication between sovereign countries. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls ◊ 3; International Law ◊ 10–10.2.] diplomatic representation. See REPRESENTATION (5).

diplomats. The science of deciphering and authenticating ancient writings. • The principles were largely developed by the Benedictine Dom Mabillon in his 1681 work entitled De re diplomatica. — Also termed diplomatic (n.).

"Diplomatics, the science derived from the study of ancient diplomas, so called from being written on two leaves, or on double tablets. The Romans used the term more specially for the letters of license to use the public conveyances provided at the different stations, and generally for public grants. Subsequently it attained a more extended signification, and in more modern times has been used as a general term for ancient imperial and ecclesiastical acts and grants, public treaties, deeds of conveyance, letters, wills, and similar instruments, drawn up in forms and marked with peculiarities varying with their dates and countries. With the revival of literature, the importance of such documents in verifying facts and establishing public and private rights led to their being brought together from the historical works and the monastic registers in which they had been copied, or, in rarer instances, from public and ecclesiastical archives where the originals were still preserved. Then arose questions of authenticity, and doubts of the so-called originals; disputants defended or condemned them; and, in order to establish principles for distinguishing the genuine from the forged, treatises were written on the whole subject of these diplomas." 7 Encyclopaedia Britannica 220 (9th ed. 1907).

Diplomatic Security Service. See BUREAU OF DIPLOMATIC SECURITY.

diptych (dip-tik), n. [fr. Latin diptycha fr. Greek diptycha "two-leaved"] 1. Roman law. Two tablets usu. made of wood or metal and tied with string through holes at the edges so that they could fold over (like a book with two leaves). • Diptychs were often used to send letters, and the text was sometimes written using a stylus, once on the inside waxed leaves and again on the outside, so that it could be read without opening the tablets. 2. Hist. Eccles. law. Tablets used by the church, esp. to register names of those making supplication, and to record births, marriages, and deaths. 3. Hist. Eccles. law. The registry of those names.

"The recitation of the name of any prelate or civil ruler in the diptychs was a recognition of his orthodoxy; its omission, the reverse. The mention of a person after death recognized him as having died in the communion of the church, and the introduction of his name into the list of saints or martyrs constituted canonization. In liturgics the diptychs are distinguished as the diptychs of the living and the diptychs of the dead, the latter including also the commemoration of the saints. . . . In the Western Church the use of the diptychs died out between the ninth and the twelfth century; in the Eastern Church it still continues." 2 The Century Dictionary and Cyclopaedia (1895).

"Diptychs were used in the time of the Roman empire for sending letters. . . . The consula and quaestors used, on assuming office, to send diptychs containing their names and portraits to their friends. . . . The early Christians used tablets thus made in the celebration of divine worship. . . . They were placed on. . . the pulpits, or reading desks, which may still be seen in ancient basilicas at the west end of the choir or presbytery; and from them were read to the congregation of the faithful the names of the celebrating priests, of those who occupied the superior positions in the Christian hierarchy, of the saints, martyrs, and confessors, and, in process of time, also of those who had died in the faith. . . . The inscription on the diptychs of deaths and baptisms, naturally led to the insertion of dates, and the diptychs seem thus to have grown into calendars, and to have been the germ from which necrologies, lists of saints, and almanacs have been developed." 7 Encyclopaedia Britannica 223–24 (9th ed. 1907).

dirationare (di-ray-shee-ə-nair-ee), vb. [fr. Latin dis "thoroughly" + rationari "to reason"] 1. To prove; to establish one's right. 2. To disprove; to refute (an allegation).

direct (di-rekt), adj. 1. (Of a thing) straight; undeviating . 2. (Of a thing or a person) straightforward  <direct instructions>. 3. Free from extraneous influence; immediate <direct injury>. 4. Of or relating to passing in a straight line of descent, as distinguished from a collateral line  . 5. (Of a political action) effected by the public immediately, not through representatives <direct resolution> <direct nomination>.

direct, n. See DIRECT EXAMINATION.

direct, vb. (14c) 1. To aim (something or someone). 2. To cause (something or someone) to move on a particular course. 3. To guide (something or someone); to govern. 4. To instruct (someone) with authority. 5. To address (something or someone).

direct action. (1912) 1. A lawsuit by an insured against his or her own insurance company rather than against the tortfeasor and the tortfeasor's insurer. 2. A lawsuit by a person claiming against an insured but suing the insurer directly instead of pursuing compensation indirectly through the insured. [Cases: Insurance ◊ 3542.] 3. A lawsuit to enforce a shareholder's rights against a corporation. Cf. DERIVATIVE ACTION (1). [Cases: Corporations ↷202.]

direct-action statute. A statute that grants an injured party direct standing to sue an insurer instead of the insured tortfeasor. • Under Rhode Island's direct-action statute, for example, an injured party may bring a direct action against an insurer when good-faith efforts to serve process on the insured are unsuccessful. These statutes exist in several states, including Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, Minnesota, New York, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin. [Cases: Insurance ↷3542.] direct adoption. See private adoption under ADOPTION.

direct affinity. See AFFINITY.

direct aggression. See AGGRESSION.

direct and proximate cause. See proximate cause under CAUSE (1).

direct appeal. See APPEAL.

direct attack. 1. An attack on a judgment made in the same proceeding as the one in which the judgment was entered; specif., seeking to have the judgment vacated or reversed or modified by appropriate proceedings in either the trial court or an appellate court. • Examples of direct attacks are motions for new trial and appeals. Cf. COLLATERAL ATTACK. 2. The taking of independent proceedings in equity to prevent the enforcement of a judgment.

direct infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

direct injury. See INJURY.

direct interest. See INTEREST (2).

direction (di-rek-shən). 1. The course taken in relation to the point toward or away from which something or someone is moving; a point to or from which a person or thing moves <the storm moved in a northerly direction>. 2. The course on which something is aimed <the direction of the trial>. 3. An act of guidance <under the chair's direction>. 4. An order; an instruction on how to proceed <the judge's direction to the jury>. See JURY INSTRUCTION. 5. The address to the court contained on a bill of equity <the direction on the bill>. [Cases: Equity ↷131.] 6. A board of directors; a board of managers <the direction met on Wednesday>.

directive. See ADVANCE DIRECTIVE.

Directive Harmonizing the Term of Copyright and Certain Related Rights. Copyright. A 1993 European Commission initiative setting the term of most copyright protection at the life of the author plus 70 years. • The directive extended coverage in most member countries to match that of Germany, whose term was the longest on the Continent. In 2006, it was repealed. Its provisions were incorporated into the Directive on the Term of Protection of Copyright and Certain Related Rights. — Also termed Duration Directive.

Directive on Certain Aspects of Electronic Commerce in the Internal Market. Copyright. A 2000 European Commission initiative that harmonizes members' laws governing commercial use of the Internet, including electronic contracts, the liability of service providers, unsolicited commercial e-mail, and related issues. — Also termed Electronic Commerce Directive; E-Commerce Directive.

Directive on Rental, Lending and Certain Neighboring Rights. Copyright. A 1992 European Commission initiative setting rules for reimbursing copyright owners for home rental and public lending of videotapes and other copies of works, and establishing the rights of performers, producers, broadcasters, and cable distributors. — Also termed Rental and Related Rights Directive; Rental Directive.

Directive on the Coordination of Certain Rules Concerning Copyright and Neighbouring Rights Applicable to Satellite Broadcasting and Cable Retransmission. Copyright. A 1993 European Commission initiative requiring members, among other things, to (1) recognize the right of a copyright owner to decide whether the work may be relayed by either cable or satellite, and (2) define the "place" of a satellite broadcast as the location where the signal originates. — Also termed Cable and Satellite Directive.

Directive on the Legal Protection of Computer Programs. Copyright. A 1991 European Commission initiative requiring members to protect computer software by copyright rather than by patent or some sui generis set of legal rights. • The purpose of the Directive was to harmonize copyright laws among the members of the European Commission. It standardized the degree of originality required for software to qualify for copyright protections. — Also termed Computer Programs Directive; Software Directive.

Directive on the Legal Protection of Databases. Copyright. A 1996 European Commission initiative that sets uniform copyright protection among members for databases of original content and requires a sui generis system of protection for databases that do not qualify for copyright protection because their content is not original. — Also termed Database Directive.

Directive on the Term of Protection of Copyright and Certain Related Rights. See DIRECTIVE HARMONIZING THE TERM OF COPYRIGHT AND CERTAIN RELATED RIGHTS.

directive to physicians. See LIVING WILL.

direct notice. See NOTICE.

director (di-rek-tər). (15c) 1. One who manages, guides, or orders; a chief administrator. 2. A person appointed or elected to sit on a board that manages the affairs of a corporation or other organization by electing and exercising control over its officers. — Also termed trustee. See BOARD OF DIRECTORS. Cf. OFFICER (1).

affiliated director. See outside director.

class director. 1. A director whose term on a corporate board is staggered with those of the other directors to make a hostile takeover more difficult. 2. A director elected or appointed to a corporate board to represent a special interest group, e.g., the preferred stockholders.

dummy director. A board member who is a mere figurehead and exercises no real control over the corporation's business. — Also termed accommodation director; nominal director.

inside director. A director who is also an employee, officer, or major shareholder of the corporation. [Cases: Corporations ⇨310(1).] interlocking director. A director who simultaneously serves on the boards of two or more corporations that deal with each other or have allied interests.

outside director. A nonemployee director with little or no direct interest in the corporation. — Also termed affiliated director. [Cases: Corporations ⇨310(1).]

provisional director. A director appointed by a court to serve on a close corporation's deadlocked board of directors.

public director. A director elected from outside a corporation's shareholders or an organization's membership to represent the public interest.

direct order of alienation. (1852) Real estate. The principle that a grantee who assumes the debt on a mortgaged property is required to pay the mortgage debt if the original mortgagor defaults. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨279.]

Director of Public Prosecutions. An officer (usu. a barrister or solicitor of ten years' standing) who advises the police and prosecutes criminal cases in England, Wales, and Northern Ireland under the supervision of the Attorney General. • This title, or a similar one, is used in various countries, including Australia, Canada, China, Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland, and South Africa. In Scotland, the equivalent officer is the procurator fiscal.

Director of the Mint. An officer appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to control and manage the U.S. Mint and its branches. [Cases: United States ⇨34.]

Director of the United States Patent and Trademark Office. The presidential appointee in charge of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. • Until a 2000 reorganization, the PTO chief was the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks. The Director is also the Under Secretary of Commerce for Intellectual Property. — Formerly termed Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks. [Cases: Patents ⇨111.]

directors' and officers' liability insurance. See INSURANCE.

directory, n. 1. A book containing an alphabetical list of names, addresses, and telephone numbers, esp. those of a city's or area's residents and businesses. [Cases: Telecommunications ⇨875.] 2. Any organization's publication containing information on its members or business, such as a legal directory. 3. Eccles. law. A church's book of directions for conducting worship. • One of the primary directories is the Directory for the Public Worship of God, prepared by the Assembly of Divines in England in 1644 to replace the Book of Common Prayer, which had been abolished by Parliament (and was later reinstated). The Directory was ratified by Parliament in 1645 and adopted by the Scottish Parliament and General Assembly of the Church of Scotland that same year. A directory in the Roman Catholic Church contains instructions for saying the mass and offices each day of the year. 4. A small governing body; specif., the five-member executive body that governed France from 1795–1799 during the French Revolution until it was overthrown by Napoleon and succeeded by the consulate.

directory call. (1812) Property. In a land description, a general description of the areas in which landmarks or other calls are found. See CALL (5); LOCATIVE CALLS.

directory provision. A statutory or contractual sentence or paragraph in which a directory requirement appears. [Cases: Statutes ⇨227.]

directory requirement. (1865) A statutory or contractual instruction to act in a way that is advisable, but not absolutely essential — in contrast to a mandatory requirement. • A directory requirement is frequently introduced by the word should or, less frequently, shall (which is more typically a mandatory word). [Cases: Statutes ⇨227.]

directory statute. See STATUTE.

directory trust. See TRUST.

direct-participation program. An investment vehicle that is financed through the sale of securities not traded on an exchange or quoted on NASDAQ and that provides flow-through tax consequences to the investors.

direct payment. See PAYMENT.

direct placement. 1. The sale by a company, such as an industrial or utility company, of an entire issue of securities directly to a lender (such as an insurance company or group of investors), instead of through an underwriter. • This type of offering is exempt from SEC filing requirements. 2. PRIVATE PLACEMENT (1).

direct-placement adoption. See private adoption under ADOPTION.

IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2601–2602. See GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER; generation-skipping transfer tax under TAX; SKIP PERSON. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨4224.]

direct tax. See TAX.

Direct Tax Clauses. The provisions in the U.S. Constitution requiring direct taxes to be apportioned among the states according to their respective numbers (U.S. Const. art. I, § 2, cl. 3) and prohibiting capitation or other direct taxes except in proportion to the census (U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cl. 4). • An additional provision of Article I, § 2 concerning computation of taxes is affected by § 2 of the Fourteenth Amendment, and both clauses are affected by the Sixteenth Amendment concerning income taxes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨3059.] direct trust. See express trust under TRUST.

diribitores (di-rib-ə-tor-eez), n. pl. [Latin “sorters of votes”] Roman law. Officers who distributed voting ballots to the citizens in a comitia. See COMITIA.

diriment impediment. See IMPEDIMENT.

diritto comessi. [Italian] NEIGHBORING RIGHT.

diritto d' autore. [Italian] AUTHOR'S RIGHT.

dirt-for-debt transfer. A transaction in which a bankrupt debtor satisfies all or part of a secured debt by transferring the collateral to the creditor. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨3564.]

DISA. abbr. DEFENSE INFORMATION SYSTEMS AGENCY.

disability. (16c) 1. The inability to perform some function; esp., the inability of one person to alter a given relation with another person. 2. An objectively measurable condition of impairment, physical or mental <his disability entitled him to workers'-compensation benefits>. — Also termed handicap; incapacity. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨1019, 1218; Workers' Compensation ⇨802.]

developmental disability. (1973) An impairment of general intellectual functioning or adaptive behavior.

partial disability. A worker's inability to perform all the duties that he or she could do before an accident or illness, even though the worker can still engage in some gainful activity on the job. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ⇨856–862.]

permanent disability. (1804) A disability that will indefinitely prevent a worker from performing some or all of the duties that he or she could do before an accident or illness. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ⇨863, 864.]

physical disability. (1826) An incapacity caused by a physical defect or infirmity, or by bodily imperfection or mental weakness.

temporary disability. (18c) A disability that exists until an injured worker is as far restored as the nature of the injury will permit. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ⇨863, 864.]

temporary total disability. Total disability that is not permanent.

total disability. (18c) A worker's inability to perform employment-related duties because of a physical or mental impairment. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ⇨846–855.]

3. Incapacity in the eyes of the law <most of a minor's disabilities are removed when he or she turns 18>. — Also termed incapacity.

canonical disability. A canonical impediment (usu. impotence). See canonical impediment under IMPEDIMENT.

civil disability. (18c) The condition of a person who has had a legal right or privilege revoked as a result of a criminal conviction, as when a person's driver's license is revoked after a DWI conviction. Cf. civil death (2) under DEATH.

disability benefits. See DISABILITY COMPENSATION.

disability clause. Insurance. A life-insurance-policy provision providing for a waiver of premiums during the policyholder's period of disability, and sometimes providing for monthly payments equal to a percentage of the policy's face value. [Cases: Insurance ↻2035.]

disability compensation. Payments from public or private funds to a disabled person who cannot work, such as social-security or workers'-compensation benefits. — Also termed disability benefits. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ↻140.5–140.85; Workers' Compensation ↻836–902.]

disability insurance. See INSURANCE.

disability retirement plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

disable, vb. 1. To deprive (someone or something) of the ability to function; to weaken the capability of (someone or something). 2. To impair; to diminish. 3. To legally disqualify (someone); to render (someone) legally incapable.

disabled person. See PERSON (1).

disablement, n. (15c) 1. The act of incapacitating or immobilizing. 2. The imposition of a legal disability.

disabling restraints. (1963) Limits on the alienation of property. • These restraints are sometimes void as being against public policy. [Cases: Perpetuities ↻6(1).] disabling statute. See STATUTE.

disadvocate (dis-ad-və-kair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] To deny; to disavow.

disaffirm (dis-ə-fərm), vb. (16c) 1. To repudiate; to revoke consent; to disclaim the intent to be bound by an earlier transaction. 2. To declare (a voidable contract) to be void.

disaffirmance (dis-ə-fərm-ənts). 1. An act of denial; a repudiation, as of an earlier transaction. [Cases: Contracts ↻272.] 2. A declaration that a voidable contract (such as one entered into by a minor) is void. — Also termed disaffirmation. [Cases: Infants ↻58(1).]

"Disaffirmance is an operative act whereby the legal relations created by an infant's contract are terminated and discharged and other legal relations substituted. Inasmuch as the infant's executory promise does not operate to create any legal duty in him (the infant being at all times at liberty or privileged not to perform), his disaffirmance is not the discharge of such a duty. A return promise by an adult, however, creates a legal duty and the infant has a correlative right in personam. A disaffirmance terminates these." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 181 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

disafforest (dis-ə-for-əst or -fahr-əst), vb. [fr. French desaforester] Hist. To free lands from the restrictions of the forest laws and return them to the status of ordinary lands. — Also termed deafforest.

disagreement. 1. A difference of opinion; a lack of agreement. 2. A quarrel. 3. An annulment; a refusal to accept something, such as an interest in an estate.

disallow, vb. (14c) 1. To refuse to allow (something). 2. To reject (something).

disalt (dis-awlt), vb. Hist. To disable (a person).

disappeared person. (1944) 1. A person who has been absent from home for a specified number of continuous years (often five or seven) and who, during that period, has not communicated with the person most likely to know his or her whereabouts. See SEVEN-YEARS'-ABSENCE RULE; MISSING PERSON. [Cases: Absentees ↻2.] 2. Human-rights law. A person who has been illegally detained or kidnapped, often by governmental authorities or soldiers, and whose current whereabouts and condition are unknown and undiscoverable.

disappearing quorum. See QUORUM.

disappropriation. 1. Eccles. law. The alienation of church property from its original use; the severance of property from church ownership or possession. 2. The release of property from individual ownership or possession.

disapprove, vb. 1. To pass unfavorable judgment on (something). 2. To decline to sanction (something).

disarmament. Int'l law. The negotiated or voluntary reduction of military arms, esp. nuclear weapons, to a greatly reduced level or to nil. Cf. ARMS CONTROL.

disaster. A calamity; a catastrophic emergency.

disaster area. (1953) A region officially declared to have suffered a catastrophic emergency, such as a flood or hurricane, and therefore eligible for government aid. [Cases: United States ↻82(5).]

disaster loss. See LOSS.

Disaster Relief Act. A federal statute that provides a means by which the federal government can help state and local governments to relieve suffering and damage resulting from disasters such as hurricanes, tornadoes, floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, landslides, mudslides, drought, fire, and explosions. • A 1974 amendment established a process for the President to declare affected communities disaster areas. [Cases: United States ↻82(5).]

disavow (dis-ə-vow), vb. To disown; to disclaim knowledge of; to repudiate <the company disavowed the acts of its agent>. — disavowal, n.

disbarment, n. (1862) The action of expelling a lawyer from the bar or from the practice of law, usu. because of some disciplinary violation. • One who has passed the bar, been called to the bar, or been admitted to the bar is privileged to stand inside the wooden barrier that separates the gallery from the actual courtroom, particularly the judge's bench, and conduct business with the court. So this term literally describes the loss of the privilege. Although disbarment is typically a permanent removal from the practice of law, in some jurisdictions a disbarred attorney may (after a certain period) petition for readmission. In England and Wales, only a barrister is disbarred; a solicitor is struck off the roll, so the expulsion of a solicitor is termed striking off the roll. See STRUCK OFF. [Cases: Attorney and Client ↻59.14.] — disbar, vb.

disbocatio (dis-bə-kay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Law Latin dis- + boscus "wood"] Hist. The conversion of forest to pasture.

disbursement (dis-bərs-mənt), n. The act of paying out money, commonly from a fund or in settlement of a debt or account payable <dividend disbursement>. — disburse, vb.

DISC. abbr. DOMESTIC INTERNATIONAL SALES CORPORATION.

discarcare (dis-kahr-kair-ee), vb. [fr. Latin dis- + carcare "to charge"] Hist. To unload (cargo), usu. from a ship. — Also termed discargare.

disceptatio causae (di-sep-tay-shee-oh kaw-zee). [Latin "debate about a case"] Roman law. The argument by the advocates of both sides of a dispute.

discharge (dis-chahrj), n. (15c) 1. Any method by which a legal duty is extinguished; esp., the payment of a debt or satisfaction of some other obligation. 2. Bankruptcy. The release of a debtor from monetary obligations upon adjudication of bankruptcy; DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY. Cf. RELEASE (1). [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3251.] 3. The dismissal of a case. 4. The canceling or vacating of a court order. 5. The release of a prisoner from confinement.

unconditional discharge. (18c) 1. A release from an obligation without any conditions attached. 2. A release from confinement without any parole requirements to fulfill.

6. The relieving of a witness, juror, or jury from further responsibilities in a case. 7. The firing of an employee. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 825.]

constructive discharge. (1830) A termination of employment brought about by making the employee's working conditions so intolerable that the employee feels compelled to leave. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1123; [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 825.]

"Most constructive discharges fall into one of two basic fact patterns. First, the employer can cause a constructive discharge by breaching the employee's contract of employment in some manner short of termination. Second, the employer can make working conditions so intolerable that the employee feels compelled to quit." Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 9.7, at 539 (1994).

retaliatory discharge. (1967) A discharge that is made in retaliation for the employee's conduct (such as reporting unlawful activity by the employer to the government) and that clearly violates public policy. • Federal and state statutes may entitle an employee who is dismissed by retaliatory discharge to recover damages. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1247, 1249(2); Labor and Employment ⇨ 771.]

wrongful discharge. (1825) A discharge for reasons that are illegal or that violate public policy. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1122; Labor and Employment ⇨ 758.]

8. The dismissal of a member of the armed services from military service <the sergeant was honorably discharged>. [Cases: Armed Services ⇨ 11, 22.]

administrative discharge. A military-service discharge given by administrative means and not by court-martial.

bad-conduct discharge. A punitive discharge that a court-martial can give a member of the military, usu. as punishment for repeated minor offenses. — Abbr. BCD.

dishonorable discharge. The most severe punitive discharge that a court-martial can give to a member of the military. • A dishonorable discharge may result from conviction for an offense recognized in civilian law as a felony or of a military offense requiring severe punishment. Only a general court-martial can give a dishonorable discharge.

general discharge. One of the administrative discharges given to a member of the military who does not qualify for an honorable discharge.

honorable discharge. A formal final judgment passed by the government on a soldier's entire military record, and an authoritative declaration that he or she has left the service in a status of honor. • Full veterans' benefits are given only to a person honorably discharged.

undesirable discharge. One of the administrative discharges given to a member of the military who does not qualify for an honorable discharge.

9. Parliamentary law. A motion by which a deliberative assembly, having referred a matter to a committee, takes the matter's further consideration out of the committee and back into its own hands. — Also termed discharge a committee; withdrawal. — discharge (dis-chahrj), vb.

dischargeability proceeding. Bankruptcy. A hearing to determine whether a debt is dischargeable or is subject to an exception to discharge. 11 USCA § 523. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3395.]

dischargeable claim. Bankruptcy. A claim that can be discharged in bankruptcy. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3341-3378.] discharged contract. See void contract (2) under CONTRACT.

discharge hearing. Bankruptcy. A hearing at which the court informs the debtor either that a discharge has been granted or the reasons why a discharge has not been granted. See REAFFIRMATION HEARING. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3318.1.]

discharge in bankruptcy. (1820) 1. The release of a debtor from personal liability for prebankruptcy debts; specif., discharge under the United States Bankruptcy Code. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3251.] 2. A bankruptcy court's decree releasing a debtor from that liability.

discharging bond. See BOND (2).

disciplinary proceeding. (1900) An action brought to reprimand, suspend, or expel a licensed professional or other person from a profession or other group because of unprofessional, unethical, improper, or illegal conduct. • A disciplinary proceeding against a lawyer may result in the lawyer's being suspended or disbarred from practice. [Cases: Licenses ⇨38.]

disciplinary rule. (often cap.) (1890) A mandatory regulation stating the minimum level of professional conduct that a professional must sustain to avoid being subject to disciplinary action. • For lawyers, the disciplinary rules are found chiefly in the Model Code of Professional Responsibility. — Abbr. DR. Cf. ETHICAL CONSIDERATION. [Cases: Licenses ⇨25.]

disclaimer, n. (15c) 1. A renunciation of one's legal right or claim; esp., a renunciation of a patent claim, usu. to save the remainder of the application from being rejected. 2. A repudiation of another's legal right or claim. 3. A writing that contains such a renunciation or repudiation. 4. RENUNCIATION (2). — disclaim, vb.

disclaimer of warranty. (1881) An oral or written statement intended to limit a seller's liability for defects in the goods sold. • In some circumstances, printed words must be specific and conspicuous to be effective. [Cases: Sales ⇨267.]

statutory disclaimer. Patents. A patent applicant's amendment of a specification to relinquish one or more claims to the invention. 35 USCA § 253. • Before the statute was enacted, a single invalid claim was grounds for denying a patent. — Also termed patent disclaimer. See SPECIFICATION (3). [Cases: Patents ⇨149, 154.]

terminal disclaimer. A patent applicant's statement shortening the term of the patent. • To revive an abandoned application for a design application or for a utility or plant application filed before June 8, 1995, the applicant must disclaim a period equal to the duration of abandonment. A terminal disclaimer may also be required in an application for an obvious variation on an existing patent with a common inventor or owner: to avoid a double-patenting rejection the inventor agrees that both patents will expire on the same day. 37 CFR 1.321. [Cases: Patents ⇨131.]

disclosed principal. See PRINCIPAL (1).

disclosure, n. (16c) 1. The act or process of making known something that was previously unknown; a revelation of facts . See DISCOVERY.

defensive disclosure. See DEFENSIVE DISCLOSURE.

full disclosure. A complete revelation of all material facts.

public disclosure of private facts. (1964) The public revelation of some aspect of a person's private life without a legitimate public purpose. • The disclosure is actionable in tort if the disclosure would be highly objectionable to a reasonable person. See INVASION OF PRIVACY. [Cases: Torts ⇨350.]

voluntary disclosure of offense. A person's uncoerced admission to an undiscovered crime. • Under the federal sentencing guidelines, a lighter sentence may be allowed. See USSG 5K2.16. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ⇨861.]

2. The mandatory divulging of information to a litigation opponent according to procedural rules. — Also termed compulsory disclosure; automatic disclosure. See DISCOVERY (2). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1261; Pretrial Procedure ⇨11.] — disclose, vb. — disclosural, adj.

"Rule 26(a) [of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure] reflects a shift away from the traditional method of obtaining discovery through the service of written demands toward requiring automatic disclosure by the parties of information that would invariably be requested. The goal of automatic disclosure is the creation of a more efficient and expeditious discovery process. . . . Rule 26(a)(1) provides for the initial disclosure of specified information relating to witnesses, documents, and insurance agreements. Rule 26(a)(2) provides for the disclosure of information regarding experts who may be used at trial. Rule 26(a)(3) provides for specified pretrial disclosures regarding witnesses, evidence, and objections." Jay E. Grenig & Jeffrey S. Kinsler, Handbook of Federal Civil Discovery and Disclosure § 1.15, at 65-66 (2d ed. 2002).

accelerated disclosure. See accelerated discovery under DISCOVERY.

initial disclosure. Civil procedure. In federal practice, the requirement that parties make available to each other the following information without first receiving a discovery request: (1) the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of persons likely to have relevant, discoverable information, (2) a copy or description of all relevant documents, data compilations, and tangible items in the party's possession, custody, or control, (3) a damages computation, and (4) any relevant insurance agreements. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(1)(A)-(D). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨1261, 1272.]

3. Patents. A document explaining how an invention works in sufficient detail for one skilled in the art to be able to understand and duplicate the invention; everything revealed about an invention in the patent application, including drawings, descriptions, specifications, references to prior art, and claims. • An invention disclosure statement is sometimes attested by a knowledgeable witness, who signs and dates the disclosure document to establish the inventor's identity and the date of the invention before the patent application is prepared. An inventor can file a disclosure document with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office before submitting a patent application, but the document's date has no relationship to the later application's effective filing date. See ENABLEMENT REQUIREMENT. Cf. ENABLING SOURCE; DEFENSIVE DISCLOSURE. [Cases: Patents ↻99.] 4. Patents. PUBLICATION (1).

Disclosure Document Program. Patents. A U.S. Patent and Trademark Office program allowing an inventor to file a preliminary description of an invention and establish its date of conception before applying for a patent. • The document can help establish a date of inventive effort for use in a later interference. — Abbr. DDP. Cf. PROVISIONAL PATENT APPLICATION. [Cases: Patents ↻97.]

discommon (dis-kom-ən), vb. 1. To deprive of the right of common (e.g., the right to pasture). 2. To deprive (something, esp. land) of commonable character. • A person could discommon land by separating or enclosing it. 3. To deprive (someone) of the privileges of a place, such as the right to use common land or to enjoy a church fellowship.

disconformity. See NEW MATTER.

discontinuance (dis-kən-tin-yoo-ənts), n. (14c) 1. The termination of a lawsuit by the plaintiff; a voluntary dismissal or nonsuit. See DISMISSAL; NONSUIT (1); judgment of discontinuance under JUDGMENT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻1691; Pretrial Procedure ↻501.] 2. The termination of an estate-tail by a tenant in tail who conveys a larger estate in the land than is legally allowed. [Cases: Estates in Property ↻12.]

"Such is . . . the injury of discontinuance; which happens when he who hath an estate-tail, maketh a larger estate of the land than by law he is entitled to do: in which case the estate is good, so far as his power extends who made it, but no farther. As if tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee-simple, or for the life of the feoffee, or in tail; all which are beyond his power to make, for that by the common law extends no farther than to make a lease for his own life: the entry of the feoffee is lawful during the life of the feoffor: but if he retains the possession after the death of the feoffor, it is an injury, which is termed a discontinuance; the ancient legal estate, which ought to have survived to the heir in tail, being gone, or at least suspended, and for a while discontinued." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 171-72 (1768).

discontinuee, n. A person whose acquisition of an entailed estate causes a discontinuance of the fee tail heirs' right to the estate. Cf. DISCONTINUOR.

discontinuing easement. See discontinuous easement under EASEMENT.

discontinuor, n. A tenant in tail whose conveyance of the entailed estate causes a discontinuance. Cf. DISCONTINUEE.

discontinuous easement. See EASEMENT.

discontinuous servitude. See discontinuous easement under EASEMENT.

disconvenable (dis-kən-vee-nə-bəl), adj. [Law French] Archaic. Unfit; improper.

discount, n. (17c) 1. A reduction from the full amount or value of something, esp. a price. 2. An advance deduction of interest when a person lends money on a note, bill of exchange, or other commercial paper, resulting in its present value. See PRESENT VALUE. 3. The amount by which a security's market value is below its face value. — Also termed bond discount. Cf. PREMIUM (3). — discount, vb.

bulk discount. See volume discount.

cash discount. (1889) 1. A seller's price reduction in exchange for an immediate cash payment. 2. A reduction from the stated price if the bill is paid on or before a specified date.

functional discount. 1. A supplier's price discount given to a purchaser based on the purchaser's role (such as warehousing or advertising) in the supplier's distributive system. • This type of discount typically reflects the value of services performed by the purchaser for the supplier. If a functional discount constitutes a reasonable reimbursement for the purchaser's actual marketing functions, it does not constitute unlawful price discrimination and does not violate antitrust laws. 2. A supplier's price discount based on the purchaser's relative distance from the supplier in the chain of distribution. • For example, a wholesaler or distributor usu. receives a greater discount than a retailer.

quantity discount. See volume discount.

trade discount. (1889) 1. A discount from list price offered to all customers of a given type — for example, a discount offered by a lumber dealer to building contractors. 2. The difference between a seller's list price and the price at which the dealer actually sells goods to the trade.

volume discount. (1939) A price decrease based on a large-quantity purchase. — Also termed bulk discount; quantity discount.

discount bond. See BOND (3).

discount broker. See BROKER.

discounted cash flow. See CASH FLOW.

discounted-cash-flow method. See discounted cash flow under CASH FLOW.

discount interest. See INTEREST (3).

discount loan. See LOAN.

discount market. See MARKET.

discount rate. See INTEREST RATE.

discount share. See discount stock under STOCK.

discount stock. See STOCK.

discount yield. See YIELD.

discoverable, adj. Subject to pretrial discovery <the defendant's attorney argued that the defendant's income-tax returns were not discoverable during the liability phase of the trial>. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻1272; Pretrial Procedure ↻27.]

discovered-peril doctrine. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

discoveree. A party who is required to respond to a litigant's discovery request or order. Cf. DISCOVERER (1).

discoverer. 1. A litigant who seeks information or materials from another party by means of a discovery request. — Also termed discovering party. Cf. DISCOVEREE. 2. Patent law. See INVENTOR. See 35 USCA § 101. [Cases: Patents ↻1.]

discovering party. See DISCOVERER (1).

discover (dis-kāv-ərt), adj. 1. Archaic. Uncovered; exposed. 2. Not married, esp. a widow or a woman who has never married.

discovery, n. (16c) 1. The act or process of finding or learning something that was previously unknown <after making the discovery, the inventor immediately applied for a patent>. 2. Compulsory disclosure, at a party's request, of information that relates to the litigation <the plaintiff filed a motion to compel discovery>. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26–37; Fed. R. Crim. P. 16. • The primary discovery devices are interrogatories, depositions, requests for admissions, and requests for production. Although discovery typically comes from parties, courts also allow limited discovery from nonparties. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻1261; Pretrial Procedure ↻11.] 3. The facts or documents disclosed <the new associate spent all her time reviewing discovery>. 4. The pretrial phase of a lawsuit during which depositions, interrogatories, and other forms of discovery are conducted. — discover, vb. — discoverable, adj.

"Discovery has broad scope. According to Federal Rule 26, which is the model in modern procedural codes, inquiry may be made into 'any matter, not privileged, that is relevant to the subject matter of the action.' Thus, discovery may be had of facts incidentally relevant to the issues in the pleadings even if the facts do not directly prove or disprove the facts in question." Geoffrey C. Hazard Jr. & Michele Taruffo, American Civil Procedure: An Introduction 115 (1993).

accelerated discovery. A party's production of relevant evidence to an opponent at a time earlier than would otherwise be required by rule or standing order of the court. • The accelerated discovery is usu. carried out in compliance with a specific court order or the parties' agreement. — Also termed accelerated disclosure. [Cases: Pretrial Procedure ↻25.]

jurisdictional discovery. Discovery that is limited to finding facts relevant to whether the court has jurisdiction. • A court may allow limited jurisdictional discovery before it rules on a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻1269.1; Pretrial Procedure ↻24.]

postjudgment discovery. (1967) Discovery conducted after judgment has been rendered, usu. to determine the nature of the judgment debtor's assets or to obtain testimony for use in future proceedings. — Also termed posttrial discovery. [Cases: Execution ↻373–400; Federal Civil Procedure ↻2713.]

pretrial discovery. (1939) Discovery conducted before trial to reveal facts and develop evidence. • Modern procedural rules have broadened the scope of pretrial discovery to prevent the parties from surprising each other with evidence at trial. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻1261; Pretrial Procedure ↻11.]

reciprocal discovery. See reverse Jencks material under JENCKS MATERIAL.

reverse discovery. See reverse Jencks material under JENCKS MATERIAL.

discovery abuse. (1975) 1. The misuse of the discovery process, esp. by making overbroad requests for information that is unnecessary or beyond the scope of permissible disclosure or by conducting discovery for an improper purpose. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻1278; Pretrial Procedure ↻28.]

"The term 'discovery abuse' has been used as if it were a single concept, but it includes several different things. Thus, it is useful to subdivide 'abuse' into 'misuse' and 'overuse.' What is referred to as 'misuse' would include not only direct violation of the rules, as by failing to respond to a discovery request within the stated time limit, but also more subtle attempts to harass or obstruct an opponent, as by giving obviously inadequate answers or by requesting information that clearly is outside the scope of discovery. By 'overuse' is meant asking for more discovery than is necessary or appropriate to the particular case. 'Overuse,' in turn, can be subdivided into problems of 'depth' and of 'breadth,' with 'depth' referring to discovery that may be relevant but is simply excessive and 'breadth' referring to discovery requests that go into matters too far removed from the case." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 81, at 580 (5th ed. 1994).

2. The failure to respond adequately to proper discovery requests. — Also termed abuse of discovery. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻1278; Pretrial Procedure ↻44.1.] discovery immunity. (1975) An exemption provided by statute, caselaw, or court rules to exclude certain documents and information from being disclosed during discovery.

discovery policy. See claims-made policy under INSURANCE POLICY.

discovery rule. (1916) Civil procedure. The rule that a limitations period does not begin to run until the plaintiff discovers (or reasonably should have discovered) the injury giving rise to the claim. • The discovery rule usu. applies to injuries that are inherently difficult to detect, such as those resulting from medical malpractice. See STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. Cf. OCCURRENCE RULE. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↻95, 100.]

discovery vein. See VEIN.

discredit, vb. To destroy or impair the credibility of (a witness, a piece of evidence, or a theory); to lessen the degree of trust to be accorded to (a witness or document). [Cases: Witnesses ⇨ 330.] — discredit, n.

discreet (di-skreet), adj. Exercising discretion; prudent; judicious; discerning.

discrete (di-skreet), adj. Individual; separate; distinct.

discretion (di-skresh-ən). (14c) 1. Wise conduct and management; cautious discernment; prudence. 2. Individual judgment; the power of free decision-making.

sole discretion. An individual's power to make decisions without anyone else's advice or consent.

3. Criminal & tort law. The capacity to distinguish between right and wrong, sufficient to make a person responsible for his or her own actions. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 46.] 4. A public official's power or right to act in certain circumstances according to personal judgment and conscience, often in an official or representative capacity. — Also termed discretionary power.

administrative discretion. A public official's or agency's power to exercise judgment in the discharge of its duties. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨ 324, 754.]

judicial discretion. (17c) The exercise of judgment by a judge or court based on what is fair under the circumstances and guided by the rules and principles of law; a court's power to act or not act when a litigant is not entitled to demand the act as a matter of right. — Also termed legal discretion. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 26.]

prosecutorial discretion. (1966) A prosecutor's power to choose from the options available in a criminal case, such as filing charges, prosecuting, not prosecuting, plea-bargaining, and recommending a sentence to the court. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 29(3); District and Prosecuting Attorneys ⇨ 8.]

discretion, abuse of. See ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

discretionary (di-skresh-ə-ner-ee), adj. (18c) (Of an act or duty) involving an exercise of judgment and choice, not an implementation of a hard-and-fast rule. • Such an act by a court may be overturned only after a showing of abuse of discretion.

discretionary account. An account that allows a broker access to a customer's funds to purchase and sell securities or commodities for the customer based on the broker's judgment and without first having to obtain the customer's consent to the purchase or sale. [Cases: Brokers ⇨ 19.]

discretionary act. A deed involving an exercise of personal judgment and conscience. — Also termed discretionary function. See DISCRETION; ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

discretionary bail. See BAIL (3).

discretionary commitment. See COMMITMENT.

discretionary damages. See DAMAGES.

discretionary duty. See DUTY (2).

discretionary function. See DISCRETIONARY ACT.

discretionary immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

discretionary order. See ORDER (8).

discretionary power. 1. See POWER (3). 2. See DISCRETION (4).

discretionary review. See REVIEW.

discretionary sentencing. See indeterminate sentencing under SENTENCING.

discretionary-transfer statute. See TRANSFER STATUTE.

discretionary trust. See TRUST.

discretion statement. Hist. English law. In an action for divorce or judicial separation, a written request for the court to consider granting a judgment favorable to a spouse who has admittedly committed a matrimonial offense, esp. adultery.

"In a suit for divorce or judicial separation, the defendant's own adultery is a discretionary bar. The petitioner asking the court to exercise its discretion to grant a decree notwithstanding his own adultery must lodge in the Divorce Registry a statement, known as a 'discretion statement,' dated and signed by him or his solicitor, stating that the court will be asked to exercise its discretion on his behalf notwithstanding his own adultery, and setting forth particulars of his acts of adultery and of the facts which is material for the court to know for the purpose of exercising its discretion." N. Simon Tussy, Is a Discretion Statement Really Necessary?, 21 Mod. L. Rev. 48, 48 (1958).

discriminant function (di-skrim-ə-nənt). An IRS method of selecting tax returns to be audited. • The method consists of (1) using a computer program to identify returns with a high probability of error (such as those showing a disproportionate amount of deductible expenses), and (2) having examiners manually review the selected returns to determine which ones should be audited. — Also termed DIF system. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4443.]

discriminatee (di-skrim-ə-nə-tee). A person unlawfully discriminated against. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1007.]

discrimination, n. (1866) 1. The effect of a law or established practice that confers privileges on a certain class or that denies privileges to a certain class because of race, age, sex, nationality, religion, or disability. • Federal law, including Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, prohibits employment discrimination based on any one of those characteristics. Other federal statutes, supplemented by court decisions, prohibit discrimination in voting rights, housing, credit extension, public education, and access to public facilities. State laws provide further protections against discrimination. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1001–1263.] 2. Differential treatment; esp., a failure to treat all persons equally when no reasonable distinction can be found between those favored and those not favored. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1033, 1138.]

"The dictionary sense of 'discrimination' is neutral while the current political use of the term is frequently non-neutral, pejorative. With both a neutral and a non-neutral use of the word having currency, the opportunity for confusion in arguments about racial discrimination is enormously multiplied. For some, it may be enough that a practice is called discriminatory for them to judge it wrong. Others may be mystified that the first group condemns the practice without further argument or inquiry. Many may be led to the false sense that they have actually made a moral argument by showing that the practice discriminates (distinguishes in favor of or against). The temptation is to move from 'X distinguishes in favor of or against' to 'X discriminates' to 'X is wrong' without being aware of the equivocation involved." Robert K. Fullinwider, The Reverse Discrimination Controversy 11-12 (1980).

age discrimination. Discrimination based on age. • Federal law prohibits discrimination in employment against people who are age 40 or older. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1014, 1199.]

content-based discrimination. A state-imposed restriction on the content of speech, esp. when the speech concerns something of slight social value and is vastly outweighed by the public interest in morality and order. • Types of speech subject to content-based discrimination include obscenity, fighting words, and defamation. R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377, 383-84, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 2543 (1992).

gender discrimination. See sex discrimination.

invidious discrimination (in-vid-ee-əs). (1856) Discrimination that is offensive or objectionable, esp. because it involves prejudice or stereotyping.

racial discrimination. Discrimination based on race. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1009, 1107.] reverse discrimination. (1964) Preferential treatment of minorities, usu. through affirmative-action programs, in a way that adversely affects members of a majority group. See AFFIRMATIVE ACTION. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1033(3), 1232.]

sex discrimination. Discrimination based on gender, esp. against women. • The Supreme Court has established an intermediate-scrutiny standard of review for gender-based classifications, which must serve an important governmental interest and be substantially related to the achievement of that objective. Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 97 S.Ct. 451 (1976). — Also termed gender discrimination. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1011, 1164, 1236.]

viewpoint discrimination. Content-based discrimination in which the government targets not a particular subject, but instead certain views that speakers might express on the subject; discrimination based on the content of a communication. • If restrictions on the content of speech are reasonable and not calculated to suppress a particular set of views or ideas, a governmental body may limit speech in a nonpublic forum to expressions that serve a specific purpose. For example, an agency holding a workshop to inform state employees of laws related to the agency's functions may reasonably prohibit the expression of opinions regarding the motives of the legislators. But if speech favorable to the legislators' intent is allowed and opponents are denied the opportunity to respond, the restriction would constitute viewpoint discrimination. —

Also termed viewpoint-based discrimination. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 1507, 1516.]

3. The effect of state laws that favor local interests over out-of-state interests. • Such a discriminatory state law may still be upheld if it is narrowly tailored to achieve an important state interest. Cf. FAVORITISM. [Cases: Commerce ⇨ 54.1.] — discriminate, vb. — discriminatory, adj.

discriminatory tariff. See TARIFF (2).

discussion. 1. The act of exchanging views on something; a debate. 2. Civil law. A creditor's act of exhausting all remedies against the principal debtor before proceeding with a lawsuit against the guarantor. See BENEFIT OF DISCUSSION. [Cases: Guaranty ⇨ 42, 77; Principal and Surety ⇨ 138, 168.]

disease. 1. A deviation from the healthy and normal functioning of the body <the drug could not be linked to his disease>. 2. (pl.) Special classes of pathological conditions with similar traits, such as having similar causes and affecting similar organs <respiratory diseases> <occupational diseases>. 3. Any disorder; any depraved condition.

functional disease. A disease that prevents, obstructs, or interferes with an organ's special function, without anatomical defect or abnormality in the organ itself.

industrial disease. See OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE.

occupational disease. See OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE.

organic disease. A disease that is caused by an injury to, or lesion or malfunction in, an organ.

disembarrass, vb. To free from embarrassment; to extricate or disentangle one thing from another.

disembodied technology. Intellectual property. Know-how or knowledge that is in the form of information only. • Disembodied technology includes proprietary technology and information in the public domain. Cf. EMBODIED TECHNOLOGY.

disenfranchise (dis-ən-fran-chīz), vb. (17c) To deprive (a person) of the right to exercise a franchise or privilege, esp. to vote. — Also termed disfranchise.

disenfranchisement (dis-ən-fran-chīz-mənt or -fran-chīz-mənt). 1. The act of depriving a member of a corporation or other organization of a right, as by expulsion. 2. The act of taking away the right to vote in public elections from a citizen or class of citizens. — Also termed disfranchisement. [Cases: Elections ⇨ 87.]

disentailing assurance. See DISENTAILMENT.

disentailing deed. See DEED.

disentailing statute (dis-ən-tayl-ing). A statute regulating or prohibiting disentailing deeds. See disentailing deed under DEED. [Cases: Deeds ⇨ 127.]

disentailment (dis-ən-tayl-mənt), n. (1886) The act or process by which a tenant in tail bars the entail on an estate and converts it into a fee simple, thereby nullifying the rights of any later claimant to the fee tail. — Also termed disentailing assurance. See BARRING OF disentitle (dis-ən-tīt-əl), vb. (17c) To deprive (someone) of a title or claim <the plaintiffs' actions disentitled them to recover damages>.

disfacere. See DIFFACERE.

disfigurement (dis-fig-yər-mənt). An impairment or injury to the appearance of a person or thing.

disfranchise. See DISENFRANCHISE.

disfranchisement. See DISENFRANCHISEMENT.

disgavel (dis-gav-əl), vb. Hist. To convert (gavelkind land) into ordinary freehold land. See GAVELKIND.

disgorgement, n. (15c) The act of giving up something (such as profits illegally obtained) on demand or by legal compulsion. [Cases: Securities Regulation ↻150.] — disgorge, vb.

disgrading. Hist. 1. The act of degrading. 2. The depriving of an order; the depriving of a dignity.

"Disgrading, or degrading, is when a man having taken upon him a dignity temporal or spiritual, is afterwards thereof deprived, be he knight, clerk or other. Whereof if a clerk be delivered to his ordinary, and cannot clear himself of the offence whereof he is convicted by the jury, he shall be disgraded for it; which is nothing else but the deprivation of him from those orders he hath taken upon him, as priesthood, deaconship, or otherwise. . . . In like manner there is disgrading of a knight . . . And it is worthy the observation, that by the canon law there are two kinds of disgradings; the one summary, by word only, and the other solemn, by devesting the party disgraded from those ornaments and rites which are the ensigns of his order or degree." Termes de la Ley 175-76 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

disguised dividend. See informal dividend under DIVIDEND.

disguised installment sale. See INSTALLMENT SALE.

disherison (dis-her-ə-zən). See DISINHERITANCE.

disheritor (dis-her-ə-tər or -tōr). Archaic. A person who deprives someone of an inheritance.

dishonest act. See FRAUDULENT ACT.

dishonor, vb. (1814c) 1. To refuse to accept or pay (a negotiable instrument) when presented. See NOTICE OF DISHONOR; WRONGFUL DISHONOR. [Cases: Banks and Banking ↻137; Bills and Notes ↻385-424.] 2. To deface or defile (something, such as a flag). — dishonor, n.

dishonorable discharge. See DISCHARGE (8).

disimprisonment. The release of a prisoner; the removal of a prisoner from confinement. — Also termed disincarceration; decarceration. Cf. INCARCERATION. [Cases: Prisons ↻14.]

disincarcerate, vb. To release (a person) from jail; to set free.—Also termed disimprison.

disincarceration. See DISIMPRISONMENT.

disincentive, n. (1946) A deterrent (to a particular type of conduct), often created, intentionally or unintentionally, through legislation <federal tax law creates a disin-centive to marriage> <sales taxes provide a disincentive to excessive consumer spending>.

disinflation. A period or process of slowing down the rate of inflation. Cf. DEFLATION.

disinherison (dis-in-her-ə-zən), n. See DISINHERITANCE.

disinheritance, n. (16c) 1. The act by which an owner of an estate deprives a would-be heir of the expectancy to inherit the estate. ● A testator may expressly exclude or limit the right of a person or a class to inherit property that the person or class would have inherited through intestate succession, but only if the testator devises all the property to another. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↻47(2); Wills ↻11, 82.] 2. The state of being disinherited. See forced heir under HEIR. — Also termed disherison; disinherison; deherison. — disinherit, vb.

negative disinheritance. The act by which a testator attempts to exclude a person from inheritance without disposing of the property to another. ● Negative disinheritance is ineffective at common law, although today it may be permitted by statute.

disinter (dis-in-tər), vb. (17c) 1. To exhume (a corpse). [Cases: Dead Bodies ↻5.] 2. To remove (something) from obscurity. — disinterment (dis-in-tər-mənt), n.

disinterested, adj. (17c) Free from bias, prejudice, or partiality; not having a pecuniary interest . — disinterest, disinterestedness, n.

disinterested witness. See WITNESS.

disintermediation. The process of bank depositors' withdrawing their funds from accounts with low interest rates to put them into investments that pay higher returns.

disinvestment, n. (1936) 1. The consumption of capital. 2. The withdrawal of investments, esp. on political grounds. — Also termed (in sense 2) divestment. — disinvest, vb.

disjoinder (dis-joyn-dər). (1936) The undoing of the joinder of parties or claims. See JOINDER. Cf. MISJOINER (1); NONJOINER (1).

disjuncta (dis-jŏngk-tə), n. pl. [Latin] Roman & civil law. Things (usu. words or phrases) that are separated or opposed. — Also spelled disiuncta. Cf. CONJUNCTA.

disjunctim (dis-jŏngk-təm), adv. [Latin] Roman law. Separately; severally. ● A condition imposed disjunctim, for example, would bind the persons severally, rather than jointly. — Also spelled disiunctim. Cf. CONJUNCTIM.

disjunctive allegation. See ALLEGATION.

disjunctive condition. See CONDITION (2).

disjunctive denial. See DENIAL.

disjunctive obligation. See alternative obligation under OBLIGATION.

disme (dm), n. [Law French] A tithe; a tenth part, as in a tithe due the clergy equal to the tenth of all spiritual livings as required by the statute 25 Edw. 3, st. 7. ● This is the Law French equivalent to the Latin decimae. It was once the spelling of the American 10-cent piece, the dime. See DECIMAE. Pl. dismes.

dismemberment. 1. The cutting off of a limb or body part. 2. Int'l law. The disappearance of a country as a result of a treaty or an annexation, whereby it becomes part of one or more other countries. 3. Int'l law. The reduction of a country's territory by annexation or cession, or the secession of one part. 4. Int'l law. The extinguishment of a country and the creation of two or more new countries from the former country's territory.

dismemberments of ownership. Civil law. The three elements composing the right of ownership, namely the usus, the fructus, and the abusus. • The right of ownership may be dismembered and its components conveyed in the form of independent real rights, such as the right of use, the right of usufruct, and the right of security. See ABUSUS; FRUCTUS; USUS.

dismiss, vb. 1. To send (something) away; specif., to terminate (an action or claim) without further hearing, esp. before the trial of the issues involved. 2. To release or discharge (a person) from employment. See DISMISSAL.

dismissal, n. (1885) 1. Termination of an action or claim without further hearing, esp. before the trial of the issues involved. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1691–1842; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 501–699.]

dismissal agreed. A court's dismissal of a lawsuit with the acquiescence of all parties. • Among other possibilities, the parties may have settled out of court or chosen to have their dispute arbitrated or mediated. — Also termed agreed dismissal.

dismissal for failure to prosecute. See dismissal for want of prosecution.

dismissal for lack of prosecution. See dismissal for want of prosecution.

dismissal for want of equity. (1859) A court's dismissal of a lawsuit on substantive, rather than procedural, grounds, usu. because the plaintiff's allegations are found to be untrue or because the plaintiff's pleading does not state an adequate claim. [Cases: Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 552, 622.]

dismissal for want of prosecution. (1831) A court's dismissal of a lawsuit because the plaintiff has failed to pursue the case diligently toward completion. — Abbr. DWOP. — Also termed dismissal for failure to prosecute; dismissal for lack of prosecution. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 303.30(1); Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1758; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 581–602.]

dismissal without prejudice. (1831) A dismissal that does not bar the plaintiff from refileing the lawsuit within the applicable limitations period. See WITHOUT PREJUDICE. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1713, 1837.1; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 517, 690.]

dismissal with prejudice. (1898) A dismissal, usu. after an adjudication on the merits, barring the plaintiff from prosecuting any later lawsuit on the same claim.

• If, after a dismissal with prejudice, the plaintiff files a later suit on the same claim, the defendant in the later suit can assert the defense of res judicata (claim preclusion). See RES JUDICATA; WITH PREJUDICE. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1713, 1837.1; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 517, 690.]

involuntary dismissal. (1911) A court's dismissal of a lawsuit because the plaintiff failed to prosecute or failed to comply with a procedural rule or court order. Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(b). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1721–1842; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 531–699.]

voluntary dismissal. (1834) A plaintiff's dismissal of a lawsuit at the plaintiff's own request or by stipulation of all the parties. Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(a). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1691–1715; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 501–520.]

2. A release or discharge from employment. See DISCHARGE (7). [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 825.]

dismissal for cause. (1877) A dismissal of a contract employee for a reason that the law or public policy has recognized as sufficient to warrant the employee's removal. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 762.]

3. Military law. A court-martial punishment for an officer, commissioned warrant officer, cadet, or midshipman, consisting of separation from the armed services with dishonor. • A dismissal can be given only by a general court-martial and is considered the equivalent of a dishonorable discharge. [Cases: Military Justice ⇨ 1322.1.] — dismiss, vb.

dismissal compensation. See SEVERANCE PAY.

dismissal order. See ORDER (2).

dismissed for want of equity. (Of a case) removed from the court's docket for substantive reasons, usu. because the plaintiff's allegations are found to be untrue or because the plaintiff's pleading does not state an adequate claim. See dismissal for want of equity under DISMISSAL (1). [Cases: Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 552, 622.]

dismissed for want of prosecution. (Of a case) removed from the court's docket because the plaintiff has failed to pursue the case diligently toward completion. See dismissal for want of prosecution under DISMISSAL (1). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1758; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 581–602.]

dismissed without prejudice. (Of a case) removed from the court's docket in such a way that the plaintiff may refile the same suit on the same claim. See dismissal without prejudice under DISMISSAL (1); WITHOUT PREJUDICE. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1713, 1837.1; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 517.1, 690.]

dismissed with prejudice. (Of a case) removed from the court's docket in such a way that the plaintiff is foreclosed from filing a suit again on the same claim or claims. See dismissal with prejudice under DISMISSAL (1); WITH PREJUDICE. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1713, 1837.1; Pretrial Procedure ⇨ 517.1, 690.]

dismission. Archaic. 1. An act of dismissing <dismission of the jury>. 2. A removal, esp. from office or position <dismission of the employee>. 3. A decision that a suit cannot be maintained <dismission of the case>.

dismortgage. See REDEMPTION (4).

Disneyland parent. See PARENT.

disobedient child. See incorrigible child under CHILD.

disorder. (1877) 1. A lack of proper arrangement <disorder of the files>. 2. An irregularity . 3. A public disturbance; a riot <civil disorder>. 4. A disturbance in mental or physical health <an emotional disorder> .

disorderly conduct. See CONDUCT.

disorderly house. (16c) 1. A dwelling where people carry on activities that are a nuisance to the neighborhood. [Cases: Disorderly House ⇨1.] 2. A dwelling where people conduct criminal or immoral activities. • Examples are brothels and drug houses. — Also termed (more narrowly) bawdy house; house of prostitution; house of ill fame; house of ill repute; lewd house; assignment house; house of assignation.

"The keeping of one type of disorderly house — the bawdy house — is punished because it violates the social interest in maintaining proper standards of morality and decency. . . . As included here a house may be disorderly for other reasons. Any house in which disorderly persons are permitted to congregate, and to disturb the tranquillity of the neighborhood by fighting, quarreling, swearing or any other type of disorder, is a disorderly house; and the keeping thereof is a misdemeanor at common law." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 487 (3d ed. 1982).

disorderly person. (18c) 1. A person guilty of disorderly conduct. [Cases: Disorderly Conduct ⇨108–140.] 2. A person who breaches the peace, order, decency, or safety of the public, as defined by statute. • The offense of being a disorderly person is usu. a misdemeanor.

"Ordinarily, a person who is guilty of disorderly conduct is a 'disorderly person,' but where statutes define 'a disorderly person' and distinguish acts which may constitute the offense of disorderly conduct, the distinction is to be preserved and the different provisions relative to the different offenses particularly followed." 27 C.J.S. Disorderly Conduct § 1(1), at 509 (1959).

disparagare (di-spar-ə-gair-ee), vb. [Law Latin fr. Law French disparager "to disparage"] Hist. 1. To disparage. 2. To bring together unequal persons, as in a marriage between persons of unequal lineage. Cf. PARAGE.

disparagatio (di-spar-ə-gay-shee-oh), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Disparagement in marriage.

disparagation (di-spar-ə-gay-shən), n. [Law French] Hist. 1. Disparagement. 2. A marriage below one's station.

disparagement (di-spar-ij-mənt), n. (16c) 1. A derogatory comparison of one thing with another <the disparagement consisted in comparing the acknowledged liar to a murderer>. 2. The act or an instance of castigating or detracting from the reputation of, esp. unfairly or untruthfully <when she told the press the details of her husband's philandering, her statements amounted to disparagement>. 3. A false and injurious statement that discredits or detracts from the reputation of another's character, property, product, or business. • To recover in tort for disparagement, the plaintiff must prove that the statement caused a third party to take some action resulting in specific pecuniary loss to the plaintiff. — Also termed injurious falsehood. — More narrowly termed slander of title; trade libel; slander of goods. See TRADE DISPARAGEMENT. Cf. commercial defamation under DEFAMATION. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⇨130, 133.] 4. Reproach, disgrace, or indignity <self-importance is a disparagement of greatness>. 5. Hist. The act or an instance of pairing an heir in marriage with someone of an inferior social rank <the guardian's arranging for the heir's marriage to a chimney sweep amounted to disparagement>. — disparage, vb.

disparaging instruction. See JURY INSTRUCTION.

disparaging mark. See disparaging trademark under TRADEMARK.

disparaging trademark. See TRADEMARK.

disparate impact (dis-pə-rit). (1973) The adverse effect of a facially neutral practice (esp. an employment practice) that nonetheless discriminates against persons because of their race, sex, national origin, age, or disability and that is not justified by business necessity. • Discriminatory intent is irrelevant in a disparate-impact claim. — Also termed adverse impact. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨1033, 1140.]

disparate treatment. The practice, esp. in employment, of intentionally dealing with persons differently because of their race, sex, national origin, age, or disability. • To succeed on a disparate-treatment claim, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant acted with discriminatory intent or motive. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨1033, 1138.]

disparity (di-spar-ə-tee). (16c) Inequality; a difference in quantity or quality between two or more things.

dispatch (di-spach also dis-pach), n. 1. A prompt sending off of something . 2. A prompt completion of something <dispatch of a business transaction>. 3. Something quickly sent <the dispatch was mailed>. 4. Maritime law. The required diligence in discharging cargo <dispatch is required on all charters>. [Cases: Shipping ⇨47, 49(6).]

customary dispatch. Dispatch that follows the rules, customs, and usages of the port where cargo is discharged. [Cases: Shipping ⇨47, 49(6).]

quick dispatch. A speedy dispatch that does not strictly follow the customs of the port, esp. to avoid delays resulting from a crowded wharf. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 47, 49(6).]

5. Maritime law. DISPATCH MONEY.

dispatch money. Maritime law. An amount paid by a shipowner to a vessel's charterer if the vessel's cargo is unloaded at the port sooner than provided for in the agreement between the charterer and the shipowner. — Also termed dispatch. Cf. contract demurrage under DEMURRAGE. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 49(6).]

"Some charters contain a provision for 'dispatch money,' which is in the nature of a reward to the charterer for loading or unloading more rapidly than provided for — i.e., in less time than the stipulated 'lay days.' Dispatch, where payable, is usually stated, just as is demurrage, in terms of a rate per day and pro rata part thereof." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 4-8, at 212 (2d ed. 1975).

dispatch rule. See MAILBOX RULE.

dispauper (dis-paw-pər), vb. To disqualify from being a pauper; to deprive (a person) of the ability to sue in forma pauperis. See IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

dispensary (di-spen-sər-ee), n. 1. A place where drugs are prepared or distributed. 2. An institution, usu. for the poor, where medical advice and medicines are distributed for free or at a discounted rate.

dispensation (dis-pen-say-shən). An exemption from a law, duty, or penalty; permission to do something that is ordinarily forbidden.

dispense with the reading of the minutes. Parliamentary law. To forgo reciting the secretary's proposed minutes at the regular time. • The reading is not foregone altogether, but simply postponed. If the proposed minutes have been printed and circulated, then their correction and approval is in order without reading them aloud, and a motion to dispense with reading them is superfluous.

dispersonare (dis-pər-sə-nair-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. To scandalize, disparage, or slander.

displaced person. See PERSON (1).

displaced-persons camp. Int'l. law. In a nation in the throes of war, natural disaster, ethnic cleansing, or some similar extraordinary event, a temporary settlement where citizens who have become homeless are temporarily provided with the basic necessities of life and given assistance in resettling or emigrating.

displacement. 1. Removal from a proper place or position <displacement of a file> <displacement of an officer>. 2. A replacement; a substitution <displacement of one lawyer with another>. 3. A forced removal of a person from the person's home or country, esp. because of war <displacement of refugees>. 4. disposable portion. The portion of property that can be willed to anyone the testator chooses. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 11.]

disposal. Patents. A patent application's termination by withdrawal, rejection, or grant. • In some countries, the meaning is limited to rejection. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 108.] disposing capacity. See testamentary capacity under CAPACITY (3).

Disposing Clause. The clause of the U.S. Constitution giving Congress the power to dispose of property belonging to the federal government. U.S. Const. art. IV, § 3, cl. 2. [Cases: United States ⇨ 58.]

disposing mind. See testamentary capacity under CAPACITY (3).

disposition (dis-pə-zish-ən), n. (14c) 1. The act of transferring something to another's care or possession, esp. by deed or will; the relinquishing of property .

testamentary disposition. A disposition to take effect upon the death of the person making it, who retains substantially entire control of the property until death. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 1.]

2. A final settlement or determination <the court's disposition of the case>.

ambulatory disposition. 1. A judgment or sentence that is subject to amendment or revocation. 2. A testamentary provision that is subject to change because the testator is still alive and capable of making a new will. • Sense 2 corresponds to the first sense of disposition above. See AMBULATORY.

informal disposition. The termination of a case by means other than trial; any action that leads to disposition without conviction and without a judicial determination of guilt, such as guilty pleas and decisions not to prosecute.

3. Temperament or character; personal makeup . — dispose, vb. — dispositive, adj.

dispositional hearing. See disposition hearing and permanency hearing under HEARING.

disposition hearing. See HEARING.

disposition without a trial. (1888) The final determination of a criminal case without a trial on the merits, as when a defendant pleads guilty or admits sufficient facts to support a guilty finding without a trial.

dispositive (dis-poz-ə-tiv), adj. (17c) 1. Being a deciding factor; (of a fact or factor) bringing about a final determination. 2. Of, relating to, or effecting the disposition of property by will or deed.

dispositive clause. Scots law. In a deed, the clause of conveyance by which the grantor describes the property conveyed, its conditions or burdens, the name of the grantee, and the destination to heirs. See DESTINATION (3).

dispossess (dis-pə-zes), vb. To oust or evict (someone) from property. See DISPOSSESSION.

dispossession (dis-pə-zesh-ən), n. Deprivation of, or eviction from, rightful possession of property; the wrongful taking or withholding of possession of land from the person lawfully entitled to it; OUSTER (1). [Cases: Property ↷10.]

dispossessor. A person who dispossesses.

dispossess proceeding. (1888) A summary procedure initiated by a landlord to oust a defaulting tenant and regain possession of the premises. See FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷293.]

disprove, vb. To refute (an assertion); to prove (an allegation) false.

dispunishable, adj. Hist. (Of an offense) not punishable; not answerable.

disputable presumption. See rebuttable presumption under PRESUMPTION.

disputatio fori (dis-pyoo-tay-shee-oh for-i). [Latin] Roman law. Argument before a court; the practice of legal advocacy.

dispute, n. (16c) A conflict or controversy, esp. one that has given rise to a particular lawsuit. — dispute, vb.

major dispute. Labor law. Under the Railway Labor Act, a disagreement about basic working conditions, often resulting in a new collective-bargaining agreement or a change in the existing agreement. • Under the Act, two classes of disputes — major and minor — are subject to mandatory arbitration. 45 USCA § 155. — Also termed new-contract dispute. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷1524.]

minor dispute. Labor law. Under the Railway Labor Act, a disagreement about the interpretation or application of a collective-bargaining agreement, as opposed to a disagreement over the formation of a new agreement. 45 USCA § 155. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷1524.]

dispute resolution. See ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION.

dispute-resolution procedure. Intellectual property. A mechanism for resolving international grievances over intellectual-property protection, conducted by the World Trade Organization under the TRIPs agreement.

• The procedure begins with a complaint by one nation against another, followed by consultations between the nations, a WTO panel report on the issue, and (potentially) trade sanctions against one of the nations.

disqualification, n. (18c) 1. Something that makes one ineligible; esp., a bias or conflict of interest that prevents a judge or juror from impartially hearing a case, or that prevents a lawyer from representing a party. [Cases: Judges ↷39; Jury ↷97.]

vicarious disqualification. (1949) Disqualification of all the lawyers in a firm or in an office because one of the lawyers is ethically disqualified from representing the client at issue. — Also termed imputed disqualification. [Cases: Attorney and Client ↷21.15.]

"In general, disqualification of a lawyer from representation, at least in multiple client-conflict scenarios, means disqualification of that lawyer's entire firm from the same representation. When a lawyer has been exclusively or chiefly responsible for the representation of a client and that lawyer changes jobs, there is little question but that the imputed-disqualification rule will apply to disqualify the new firm from representing the opponent of the first client. But because lawyers often work for large organizations, . . . a question may arise about the application of the imputation rule when a lawyer has left employment . . . If the lawyer had little or no responsibility in the first organization for the representation or if the lawyer can be effectively shielded from the representation in the new organization, or both, there may be no useful purpose served by imputing the lawyer's disqualification to the new organization . . ." James E. Moliterno & John M. Levy, Ethics of the Lawyer's Work 151 (1993).

2. The act of making ineligible; the fact or condition of being ineligible. Cf. RECUSAL. — disqualify, vb.

disrate, vb. To reduce to a lower rank, esp. to reduce a ship or petty officer's rank.

disrationare (dis-ray-shee-ə-nair-ee), n. [Law Latin fr. Law French desreigner "to deraign"] Hist. To prove; to establish a title.

dissenters' right. See APPRAISAL REMEDY.

dissentiente (di-sen-shee-en-tee). [Latin] Dissenting. • When used with a judge's name, it indicates a dissenting opinion.

dissenting opinion. See OPINION (1).

dissignare (di-sig-nair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] To break open a seal.

dissipation, n. (17c) The use of an asset for an illegal or inequitable purpose, such as a spouse's use of community property for personal benefit when a divorce is imminent. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 252.2, 252.3(1).] — dissipate, vb.

dissociative amnesia. See REPRESSED-MEMORY SYNDROME.

dissolute, adj. (Of a person or thing) lacking restraint; wanton; devoted to pleasure <dissolute person> .

dissolution (dis-ə-loo-shən), n. (14c) 1. The act of bringing to an end; termination. 2. The cancellation or abrogation of a contract, with the effect of annulling the contract's binding force and restoring the parties to their original positions. See RESCISSION. 3. The termination of a corporation's legal existence by expiration of its charter, by legislative act, by bankruptcy, or by other means; the event immediately preceding the liquidation or winding-up process. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 592.]

de facto dissolution. The termination and liquidation of a corporation's business, esp. because of an inability to pay its debts.

involuntary dissolution. The termination of a corporation administratively (for failure to file reports or pay taxes), judicially (for abuse of corporate authority, management deadlock, or failure to pay creditors), or through involuntary bankruptcy. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 612.]

voluntary dissolution. A corporation's termination initiated by the board of directors and approved by the shareholders. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 610(1).]

4. The termination of a previously existing partnership upon the occurrence of an event specified in the partnership agreement, such as a partner's withdrawal from the partnership, or as specified by law. Cf. WINDING UP. [Cases: Partnership ⇨ 263.] 5. Patents. The dismissal of an interference contest before a final judgment and an express award of priority. • The effect of dissolving an interference is that junior parties fail to meet their burden of proof, so the senior party retains priority. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 106(5).] 5. Parliamentary law. An adjournment sine die without any provision for reconvening the same deliberative assembly, even if another assembly of the same kind (such as a legislative body or a convention) will eventually convene. — dissolve, vb.

dissolution bond. See discharging bond under BOND (2).

dissolution of marriage. 1. DIVORCE. 2. Archaic. A divorce-like remedy available when both spouses have signed a separation agreement that deals with (1) the issue of alimony (providing either some or none), and (2) if there are children, the issues of support, custody, and visitation. • Under a dissolution of marriage in this sense, the court is bound by the separation agreement and cannot later modify alimony payments. Courts in jurisdictions where the term has been used in this specific sense traditionally distinguish it from divorce, which was formerly available only on certain grounds and which allowed the court to modify alimony payments.

dissolved corporation. See CORPORATION.

dissolving condition. See resolutive condition under CONDITION (2).

dissuade, vb. To persuade (someone) not to do something <to dissuade the expert from testifying>.

distaff right. Hist. A woman's legal right.

distinctiveness, n. Trademarks. The quality of a trademarked word, symbol, or device that identifies the goods of a particular merchant and distinguishes them from the goods of others. — Also termed acquired distinctiveness. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1029.] — distinctive, adj.

distinctive trademark. See TRADEMARK.

distinguish, vb. (15c) 1. To note a significant factual, procedural, or legal difference in (an earlier case), usu. to minimize the case's precedential effect or to show that it is inapplicable <the lawyer distinguished the cited case from the case at bar>.

"In practice, courts do not concede to their predecessors the power of laying down very wide rules; they reserve to themselves the power to narrow such rules by introducing into them particular facts of the precedent case that were treated by the earlier court as irrelevant. This process is known as 'distinguishing.'" John Salmond, Jurisprudence 192 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

2. To make a distinction <the court distinguished between willful and reckless conduct>. — distinction, n.

distinguishable, adj. (Of a case or law) different from, and thereby not controlling or applicable in, a given case or situation.

distinguishable variation. Copyright. A detectable difference between two works. • Distinguishable variation is the standard for determining whether a work that is based on a work in the public domain can itself be copyrighted. Examples include translations of books and mezzotints of paintings. Some nontrivial originality is also required: exact copies are not protectable.

distinguishing mark. A physical indication or feature that identifies or delineates one person or thing from another <the voting ballots contained distinguishing marks so that they could not be counted>. See DISTINCTIVENESS.

distracted, adj. 1. (Of a person) not concentrating. 2. (Of a person) disordered.

distractio (di-strak-shee-oh), n. [Latin fr. distrahere "to draw apart"] Roman law. A separation or division into parts; an alienation or sale, such as a creditor's sale of a pledge.

distractio bonorum (di-strak-shee-oh bə-nor-əm). [Latin "the sale of goods"] Roman law. A curator bonorum's sale of the property in an insolvent estate to satisfy creditors' claims.

distractio doctrine. (1999) The rule that a plaintiff may not be guilty of contributory negligence if the plaintiff's attention was diverted from a known danger by a sufficient cause. See contributory negligence under NEGLIGENCE. [Cases: Negligence ⇨ 506(3), 1286(3).]

distractio pignoris (di-strak-shee-oh pig-nor-is). [Latin "the sale of something pledged"] Roman law. A creditor's sale of something pledged or hypothecated to obtain satisfaction on a debt.

distrahere (dis-tray-hə-ree), vb. [fr. Latin dis "apart" + trahere "to draw"] To draw apart; to sell; to dissolve, as in a contract.

distrain, vb. (13c) 1. To force (a person, usu. a tenant), by the seizure and detention of personal property, to perform an obligation (such as paying overdue rent). [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨ 270.] 2. To seize (goods) by distress, a legal remedy entitling the rightful owner to recover property wrongfully taken. — Also spelled distrein. — distrain, n.

distrainee. One who is, or whose property is, distrained.

distrainer. Someone who seizes property under a distress. — Also spelled distrainor; distreinor.

distrain. See DISTRESS.

distrein, vb. See DISTRAIN.

distress, n. (13c) 1. The seizure of another's property to secure the performance of a duty, such as the payment of overdue rent. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨ 263–270.] 2. The legal remedy authorizing such a seizure; the procedure by which the seizure is carried out.

"Distress . . . may be defined as the taking, either with legal process, or extra-judicially subject to the performance of some necessary condition precedent, by a private individual or by an officer of the court, of a personal chattel, out of the possession of a wrongdoer or defaulter and into the custody of the law to be impounded as a pledge in order to bring pressure to bear upon the owner of the chattel to redress an injury, to perform a duty, or to satisfy a lawful demand, subject, however, to the right of the owner to have the chattel returned to him [up]on the injury being redressed, or the duty performed, or the demand satisfied or [up]on security being given so to do." F.A. Enever, History of the Law of Distress 7-8 (1931).

"The word distress is derived from distringere, meaning to put into a strait or pound. In early English customs the word used is nam, which is of Scandinavian derivation and indicates a taking. In the Latin legal documents of early medieval times pignorare is used as well as distringere to denote the act of distraining, but whereas distringere is used in relation to distress for rent and services, pignorare is applied to distress for debts." F.A. Enever, History of the Law of Distress 3 (1931).

distress damage feasant. The right to seize animals or inanimate chattels that are damaging or encumbering land and to keep them as security until the owner pays compensation. [Cases: Animals ⇨95.]

distress infinite. A distress that the sheriff can repeat from time to time to enforce the performance of something, as in summoning a juror or compelling a party to appear in court. • The goods must be returned after the delinquent person performs his or her duty.

"[F]or the most part it is provided that distresses be reasonable and moderate; but, in the case of distress for fealty or suit of court, no distress can be unreasonable, immoderate, or too large: for this is the only remedy to which the party aggrieved is entitled, and therefore it ought to be such as is sufficiently compulsory; and, be it of what value it will, there is no harm done, especially as it cannot be sold or made away with, but must be restored immediately on satisfaction made. A distress of this nature, that has no bounds with regard to its quantity, and may be repeated from time to time until the stubbornness of the party is conquered, is called a distress infinite." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 231 (1768).

grand distress. Hist. In a quare impedit action in which the defendant has failed to appear, a distress of the defendant's goods and lands to compel the defendant's appearance.

second distress. A supplementary distress allowed when goods seized under the first distress are insufficient to satisfy the claim.

3. The property seized. — Also termed distrain.

distribution right. (1936) Copyright. A copyright holder's exclusive right to sell, lease, or otherwise transfer copies of the protected work to the public. Cf. FIRST-SALE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 36.]

distributive (di-s-trib-yə-tiv), adj. Of or relating to apportioning, dividing, and assigning in separate items or shares; of or relating to distributing.

distributive clause. (1821) A will or trust provision governing the distribution of income and gifts.

distributive deviation. A trustee's authorized or unauthorized departure from the express distributional terms of a trust. • A trustee must apply to the court for authority to deviate from the terms of a trust. In American law, courts rarely authorize deviation unless all the beneficiaries consent and there is no material purpose of the settlor yet to be served. Some state statutes provide that deviation is permitted if the court finds that deviation would effectuate the settlor's intention, though the modification is not expressly authorized by the trust's provisions. The Pulitzer trust illustrates the possibility that extraordinary circumstances not anticipated by the settlor may justify deviation, despite an express prohibition within the trust. Joseph Pulitzer set up a testamentary trust with shares of World newspaper stock; his will directed that the sale of these shares was not authorized under any circumstances. Nonetheless, the court later approved the stock sale when given evidence that because of hemorrhaging losses, the trust's continuation was jeopardized. In re Pulitzer's Estate, 249 N.Y.S. 87 (Sur. Ct. 1931).

distributive finding. A jury's decision partly in favor of one party and partly in favor of another.

distributive justice. See JUSTICE (1).

distributive share. (18c) 1. The share that an heir or beneficiary receives from the legal distribution of an estate. [Cases: Descent and Distribution ⇨ 20–51; Wills ⇨ 521–535.] 2. The portion (as determined in the partnership agreement) of a partnership's income, gain, loss, or deduction that is passed through to a partner and reported on the partner's tax return. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3921; Taxation ⇨ 3487.] 3. The share of assets or liabilities that a partner or partner's estate acquires after the partnership has been dissolved. [Cases: Partnership ⇨ 86, 305.]

distributor. (1884) A wholesaler, jobber, or other manufacturer or supplier that sells chiefly to retailers and commercial users.

distributorship. A franchise held by a person or company who sells merchandise, usu. in a specific area to individual customers . [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 202(1).]

dual distributorship. A business structure in which one party operates a branch or dealership on the same market level as one or more of its customers.

district. (17c) 1. A territorial area into which a country, state, county, municipality, or other political subdivision is divided for judicial, political, electoral, or administrative purposes. 2. A territorial area in which similar local businesses or entities are concentrated, such as a theater district or an arts district. — Abbr. D.

assessment district. Tax. A usu. municipal subdivision in which separate assessments of taxable property are made. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨ 450.]

congressional district. (1804) A geographical unit of a state from which one member of the U.S. House of Representatives is elected. [Cases: United States ⇨ 10.]

consolidated school district. See SCHOOL DISTRICT.

election district. A subdivision of a state, county, or city that is established to facilitate an election or to elect governmental representatives for that subdivision. [Cases: Elections ⇨ 48.]

floterial district (floh-teer-ee-əl). A legislative district that includes several separate districts or political subdivisions that independently would not be entitled to additional representation, but whose conglomerate population entitles the district to another seat in the legislative body being apportioned. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 3658(8); States ⇨ 27(7).]

influence district. A voting district in which a racial or ethnic minority group does not constitute a majority of the voters, but does make up a sufficient proportion of the voters to constitute an influential minority, thus being able to elect its preferred candidate with a reasonable number of crossover votes from other groups. Cf. majority-minority district. [Cases: Elections ⇨ 12(6).]

land district. A federally created state or territorial division containing a U.S. land office that manages the disposition of the district's public lands. [Cases: Public Lands ⇨ 94.]

legislative district. (1840) A geographical subdivision of a state for the purpose of electing legislative representatives. [Cases: States ⇨ 27.]

levee district. A local or regional political subdivision organized to construct and maintain levees within its territory at public expense. [Cases: Levees and Flood Control ↷4.] majority-minority district. A voting district in which a racial or ethnic minority group makes up a majority of the voting citizens. [Cases: Elections ↷12(6).]

metropolitan district. A special district, embracing parts of or entire cities and towns in a metropolitan area, created by a state to provide unified administration of one or more common services, such as water supply or public transportation. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ↷2.]

mineral district. (1812) A particular region of the country where valuable minerals are typically found and mined.

municipal utility district. (1921) A publicly owned corporation, or a political subdivision, that provides the public with a service or services, such as water, electricity, gas, transportation, or telecommunications. — Abbr. MUD. — Also termed public utility district (PUD). [Cases: Electricity ↷1.5.]

school district. See SCHOOL DISTRICT.

special district. A political subdivision that is created to bypass normal borrowing limitations, to insulate certain activities from traditional political influence, to allocate functions to entities reflecting particular expertise, and to provide a single service within a specified area . [Cases: Municipal Corporations ↷2.]

stock-law district. A district in which cattle or other stock are prohibited from running free. [Cases: Animals ↷50.]

taxing district. A district — constituting the whole state, a county, a city, or other smaller unit — throughout which a particular tax or assessment is ratably apportioned and levied on the district's inhabitants. [Cases: Taxation ↷2017, 2077.]

water district. A geographical subdivision created by a state or local government entity to provide the public with a water supply. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↷183.5.]

district attorney. (18c) A public official appointed or elected to represent the state in criminal cases in a particular judicial district; PROSECUTOR (1). — Abbr. D.A. — Also termed public prosecutor; state's attorney; prosecuting attorney. Cf. UNITED STATES ATTORNEY. [Cases: District and Prosecuting Attorneys ↷1.]

district clerk. See CLERK (2).

district court. See COURT.

district-court magistrate. See MAGISTRATE.

districting. The act of drawing lines or establishing boundaries between geographic areas to create voting districts. See APPORTIONMENT (3); GERRYMANDERING. [Cases: Elections ↷12(6).]

districtio (di-strik-shee-oh), n. [Law Latin “distrain”] Hist. 1. A distress; a distraint. 2. The right of distress. 3. Something (such as a good or animal) that can be distrained. 4. A territory within which distraint can be exercised. 5. Any compulsory proceeding.

district judge. See JUDGE.

District of Columbia. The seat of the U.S. government, situated on the Potomac River between Maryland and Virginia. • Neither a state nor a territory, it is constitutionally subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress. — Abbr. D.C. [Cases: District of Columbia ↷1-36.]

district parish. See PARISH.

district school. See SCHOOL.

distringas (di-string-gas), n. [Law Latin “you are to distrain”] 1. A writ ordering a sheriff to distrain a defendant's property to compel the defendant to perform an obligation, such as appearing in court or giving up a chattel to a plaintiff awarded judgment in a detainee action. 2. A writ ordering the sheriff to seize jurors' goods to compel them to appear for jury service. 3. An equitable process of execution against a corporation that has refused to obey a summons. [Cases: Execution ↷15.] 4. Hist. An order, issued initially from the Court of Exchequer, then the Court of Chancery, and finally the High Court of Justice, for someone interested in purchasing Bank of England stock, temporarily restraining the bank officers from transferring the stock or paying a dividend on it. • This proceeding was used to prevent fraudulent dealing by a trustee or other stockholder. The relief was only temporary, and if the bank received a request from the stockholder to permit a stock deal, the bank had to warn the distringing party to promptly obtain a restraining order or a writ of injunction, or else the stock deal would go through.

distringas juratores (di-string-gas joor-ə-tor-eez), n. [Law Latin “you are to distrain the jurors”] Hist. A writ ordering the sheriff to distrain jurors or their property to compel their appearance before the judges of assize and nisi prius for jury duty on an appointed day.

distringas nuper vicecomitem (di-string-gas n[y]oo-pər vi-see-kom-i-təm), n. [Law Latin “you are to distrain the late sheriff”] Hist. 1. A writ ordering a sheriff's successor to distrain the former sheriff's property until the former sheriff brings in a defendant to answer the plaintiff's charge, sells goods attached under a feri facias, or performs some other obligation that the former sheriff should have completed while still in office. 2. A writ calling on an ex-sheriff to account for the proceeds taken in execution.

distringas vice comitem (di-string-gas vi-see kom-i-təm), n. [Law Latin “you are to distrain the sheriff”] Hist. A distringas writ ordering the coroner to distrain the sheriff for not executing a writ of venditioni exponas. See VENDITIONI EXPONAS.

distringere (di-strinj-ə-ree), vb. [Latin] To distrain; to coerce; to compel. • The first-person form of the verb was distingo (“I distrain”).

disturbance, n. (13c) 1. An act causing annoyance or disquiet, or interfering with a person’s pursuit of a lawful occupation or the peace and order of a neighborhood, community, or meeting. [Cases: Disorderly Conduct ↻106.] 2. At common law, a wrong done to an incorporeal hereditament by hindering the owner’s enjoyment of it.

disturbance of a public meeting. The unlawful interference with the proceedings of a public assembly. [Cases: Breach of the Peace ↻1(4).]

“Generally speaking, any conduct which, being contrary to the usages of the particular sort of meeting and class of persons assembled, interferes with its due progress and services, or is annoying to the congregation in whole or in part, is a disturbance; and a meeting may be said to be ‘disturbed’ when it is agitated, aroused from a state of repose, molested, interrupted, hindered, perplexed, disquieted, or diverted from the object of the assembly.” 27 C.J.S. Disturbance of Public Meetings § 1, at 817 (1959).

disturbance of common. At common law, a wrongful interference with, or impediment to, another’s right to commonable property, such as a wrongful fencing or surcharge on the common.

“The disturbance of common comes next to be considered; where any act is done, by which the right of another to his common is incommoded or diminished. This may happen, in the first place, where one who hath no right of common, puts his cattle into the land; and thereby robs the cattle of the commoners of their respective shares of the pasture. Or if one, who hath a right of common, puts in cattle which are not commonable, as hogs and goats; which amounts to the same inconvenience” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 237 (1768).

disturbance of franchise. At common law, a wrongful interference with a liberty or privilege.

“Disturbance of franchises happens when a man has the franchise of holding a court-leet, of keeping a fair or market, of free-warren, of taking toll, of seizing waifs or estrays, or (in short) any other species of franchise whatsoever, and he is disturbed or incommoded in the lawful exercise thereof.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 236 (1768).

disturbance of patronage. A wrongful obstruction of a patron from presenting a clerk to a benefice.

disturbance of public worship. Any conduct that interferes with the peaceful, lawful assembly of people for religious exercises. [Cases: Disturbance of Public Assemblage ↻1.]

disturbance of tenure. A stranger’s ouster of a tenant from a tenancy. • The tenant’s lord could recover damages for the ouster.

disturbance of the peace. See BREACH OF THE PEACE.

disturbance of ways. An impediment to a person’s lawful right-of-way, as by an obstruction.

disturber. See IMPEDITOR.

disturbing the peace. See BREACH OF THE PEACE.

ditay (dit-ay), n. Scots law. 1. The grounds for an indictment. 2. An indictment.

divadiatus. See DEVADIATUS.

diverse, adj. 1. Of or relating to different types <the attorney handles diverse cases ranging from probate matters to criminal law>. 2. (Of a person or entity) having a different citizenship from the party or parties on the other side of the lawsuit <the parties are diverse because the plaintiffs are citizens of Illinois and the defendant is a New York citizen>. See diversity jurisdiction under JURISDICTION. [Cases: Federal Courts ↻281.] 3. (Of a group of people) including people of different races, sexes, nationalities, and cultural backgrounds <the school has a diverse student body>.

diversification, n. 1. A company’s movement into a broader range of products, usu. by buying firms already serving the market or by expanding existing operations <the soft-drink company’s diversification into the potato-chip market has increased its profits>. 2. The act of investing in a wide range of companies to reduce the risk if one sector of the market suffers losses <the prudent investor’s diversification of the portfolio among 12 companies>. — diversify, vb.

diversified holding company. See COMPANY.

diversion, n. (17c) 1. A deviation or alteration from the natural course of things; esp., the unauthorized alteration of a watercourse to the detriment of a lower riparian owner, or the unauthorized use of funds. 2. A distraction or pastime. — divert, vb.

diversion program. (1972) 1. Criminal law. A program that refers certain criminal defendants before trial to community programs on job training, education, and the like, which if successfully completed may lead to the dismissal of the charges. — Also termed pretrial diversion; pretrial intervention. Cf. deferred judgment under JUDGMENT. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻2051–2054.] 2. A community-based program or set of services designed to prevent the need for court intervention in matters of child neglect, minor juvenile delinquency, truancy, or incorrigibility. • Sustained by government funding, the program provides services quickly and in a nonadversarial manner so that there is no need for a formal court trial.

Diversité des courts (di-vər-si-tay də koort). [Law French] A treatise on courts written in French, supposedly by Fitzherbert during the reign of Edward III. • It was printed initially in 1525 and again in 1534. — Also spelled Diversité des courtes.

“[F]or in the ancient treatise, entitled diversité de courtes . . . we have a catalogue of the matters of conscience then cognizable by subpoena in chancery, which fall within a very narrow compass.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 53 (1768).

diversity, n. 1. DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP. 2. Ethnic, socioeconomic, and gender heterogeneity within a group; the combination within a population of people with different backgrounds. • The Supreme Court has found diversity in education to be a compelling government interest that can support a narrowly tailored affirmative-action plan. Grutter v. Bollinger, 123 S.Ct. 2325

(2003). 3. Hist. A plea that a prisoner to be executed is not the one that was accused and found guilty, at which point a jury is immediately impaneled to try the issue of the prisoner's identity.

diversity, adj. Of, relating to, or involving diversity jurisdiction .

diversity jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

diversity of citizenship. (1876) A basis for federal-court jurisdiction that exists when (1) a case is between citizens of different states, or between a citizen of a state and an alien, and (2) the matter in controversy exceeds a specific value (now $75,000). 28 USCA § 1332.

• For purposes of diversity jurisdiction, a corporation is considered a citizen of both the state of incorporation and the state of its principal place of business. An unincorporated association, such as a partnership, is considered a citizen of each state where at least one of its members is a citizen. — Often shortened to diversity. See diversity jurisdiction under JURISDICTION. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨ 281–360.]

complete diversity. (1925) In a multiparty case, diversity between both sides to the lawsuit so that all plaintiffs have different citizenship from all defendants. • Complete diversity must exist for a federal court to have diversity jurisdiction over the matter. The rule of complete diversity was first laid down by Chief Justice Marshall in Strawbridge v. Curtiss, 7 U.S. (3 Cranch) 267 (1806). [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨ 286.]

manufactured diversity. (1968) Improper or collusively created diversity of citizenship for the sole or primary purpose of creating federal jurisdiction. • Manufactured diversity is prohibited by 28 USCA § 1359. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨ 303.]

divertee. A defendant who participates in a diversion program. See DIVERSION PROGRAM.

dives costs (di-veez), n. Ordinary court costs granted to a successful party, as distinguished from limited costs (such as out-of-pocket costs) allowed to a successful pauper who sued or defended in forma pauperis. • The term derives from the name of Dives, the supposed name of the rich man in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16:19–31). Dives is a Latin word meaning “rich.”

divestitive fact. See FACT.

divestitive publication. See PUBLICATION.

divestiture (di-ves-tə-chər or di-), n. (17c) 1. The loss or surrender of an asset or interest. 2. A court order to a party to dispose of assets or property. 3. Antitrust. A court order to a defendant to rid itself of property, securities, or other assets to prevent a monopoly or restraint of trade. — divest, vb.

divestment, n. (1844) 1. Property. The cutting short of an interest in property before its normal termination. 2. The complete or partial loss of an interest in an asset, such as land or stock. 3. DISINVESTMENT (2). — divest, vb.

divide-and-pay-over rule. (1916) Wills & estates. The principle that if the only provisions in a testamentary disposition are words ordering that payment be made at some time after the testator's death, time will be of the essence and the interest is future and contingent rather than vested and immediate. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 630(6).]

divided court. (18c) An appellate court whose opinion or decision in a particular case is not unanimous, esp. when the majority is slim, as in a 5-to-4 decision of the U.S. Supreme Court. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 1123; Courts ⇨ 102(2); Federal Courts ⇨ 462, 928.]

divided-damages rule. Maritime law. The obsolete principle that when two parties are jointly liable to a third party for a tort, each party is liable for only half the damages. • The courts now apply a comparative-negligence standard. [Cases: Collision ⇨ 143.]

“For over a hundred years admiralty law embraced the rule of ‘divided damages’ in collision cases In 1975, in United States v. Reliable Transfer Co., 421 U.S. 397, 95 S.Ct. 1708, 44 L.Ed.2d 251 (1975), the Supreme Court jettisoned that inequitable and illogical rule in favor of proportionate allocation of fault among joint-tortfeasors in collision cases. Each vessel now is liable to the other offending vessel in contribution for that part of the total damages proportionate to its fault, and is liable for its per capita (virile) share only when the respective faults of the vessels are equal, or when proportionate fault can not be ascertained.” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 165 (2d ed. 1988).

dividend. (17c) A portion of a company's earnings or profits distributed pro rata to its shareholders, usu. in the form of cash or additional shares. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 155(1).] accumulated dividend. A dividend that has been declared but not yet paid. — Also termed accrued dividend. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 68, 151.]

accumulative dividend. See cumulative dividend.

asset dividend. A dividend paid in the form of property, usu. the company's product, rather than in cash or stock. — Also termed property dividend.

bond dividend. A dividend in which a shareholder receives a bond instead of scrip, property, or money.

capital-gain dividend. A taxable payment to a mutual-fund shareholder. • The payment is the shareholder's proportional share of the net capital gains realized by securities sales from the mutual fund's portfolio. — Also termed capital-gain distribution.

cash dividend. A dividend paid to shareholders in the form of money. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 152.]

consent dividend. A dividend that is not actually paid to the shareholders, but is taxed to the shareholders and increases the basis in their stock investment. • A corporation declares a consent dividend to avoid or reduce an accumulated-earnings or personal-holding-company penalty tax.

constructive dividend. A taxable benefit derived by a shareholder from the corporation even though the benefit was not designated a dividend. • Examples include excessive compensation, bargain purchases of corporate property, or shareholder use of corporate property for personal reasons. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3750-3768.]

cumulative dividend. A dividend that grows from year to year when not paid. ● A cumulative dividend is usu. on preferred shares, and it must be paid in full before common shareholders may receive any dividend. If the corporation does not pay a dividend in a particular year or period, it is carried over to the next year or period and must be paid before the common shareholders receive any payment. — Also termed accumulative dividend. Cf. noncumulative dividend. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 68, 156.] deferred dividend. A dividend that is declared, but is payable at a future date.

deficiency dividend. A dividend paid to reduce or avoid personal-holding-company tax in a prior year.

disguised dividend. See informal dividend.

extraordinary dividend. A dividend paid in addition to a regular dividend, usu. because of exceptional corporate profits during the dividend period. — Also termed extra dividend; nonrecurring dividend; special dividend. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 155(1).]

fixed-return dividend. A dividend that is constant throughout the investment's life.

informal dividend. A payment of salary, rent, interest, or the like to or for a shareholder as a substitute for a dividend. — Also termed disguised dividend.

liability dividend. See scrip dividend.

liquidation dividend. A dividend paid to a dissolving corporation's shareholders, usu. from the capital of the corporation, upon the decision to suspend all or part of its business operations. — Also termed liquidating dividend. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 629.]

nimble dividend. A dividend paid out of current earnings when there is a deficit in the account from which dividends may be paid. ● Some state statutes prohibit nimble dividends.

noncumulative dividend. A dividend that does not accrue for the benefit of a preferred shareholder if there is a passed dividend in a particular year or period. Cf. cumulative dividend. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 152.]

nonrecurring dividend. See extraordinary dividend.

passed dividend. A dividend that is not paid when due by a company that has a history of paying regular dividends.

preferred dividend. A dividend paid to preferred shareholders, who are generally paid a fixed amount and take priority over common shareholders. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 151, 156.]

property dividend. See asset dividend.

reinvested dividend. A dividend that is used to purchase additional shares in the corporation, instead of being taken in cash by the shareholder. See DIVIDEND-REINVESTMENT PLAN.

scrip dividend. A dividend paid in certificates entitling the holder to ownership of capital stock to be issued in the future. ● This type of dividend may signal that the corporation's cash flow is poor. — Also termed liability dividend.

special dividend. See extraordinary dividend.

stock dividend. A dividend paid in stock expressed as a percentage of the number of shares already held by a shareholder. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 157.]

unpaid dividend. A declared but unpaid dividend.

year-end dividend. An extra dividend paid at the end of the fiscal year depending on the amount of the profits.

dividenda (div-i-dēn-də), n. [fr. Latin dividere "to divide"] Hist. Something to be divided; an indenture.

dividend addition. An amount added to the face value of a life-insurance policy and purchased by using a dividend as a single premium payment. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2037.] dividend-credit rule. The principle that a corporate reserve fund amassed from unpaid dividends on preferred stock must be used to pay subsequent dividends on preferred stock before dividend payments on common stock. — Also termed cast-iron-pipe doctrine.

dividend date. The date on which a corporation distributes dividends to record owners of stock shares. See record date under DATE. Cf. EX-DIVIDEND DATE.

dividend income. See INCOME.

dividend-payout ratio. A profitability ratio computed by dividing annual dividends per share by earnings per share.

dividend preference. The right of a holder of preferred shares to receive a dividend before the company pays dividends to holders of common shares. See preferred stock under STOCK. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 156.]

dividend-received deduction. (1957) A deduction allowed to a corporate shareholder for dividends received from a domestic corporation. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 243-247. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3777.]

dividend-reinvestment plan. (1969) A stock-purchase program that allows investors to reinvest their dividends, and perhaps convert additional voluntary payments, into shares of the entity's common stock, usu. with no sales charge, and sometimes at a discount from the stock's market price. ● Although the investor never receives the cash, it is still treated as income to the investor. An investor may be allowed to make optional cash purchases of additional stock. — Abbr. DRIP; DRP.

brokerage-run dividend-reinvestment plan. A formal or informal program managed by a brokerage and allowing shareholders to reinvest dividends in a portfolio, often at no cost. • Brokerage-run plans are usually limited to dividend reinvestment.

company-run dividend-reinvestment plan. A program operated by a corporation for its own shareholders.

• Company-run plans may offer additional features such as IRAs.

transfer-agent-run dividend-reinvestment plan. A program administered by a financial institution for several companies. • An investor can participate in more than one DRIP program simultaneously and also make additional cash investments in multiple companies.

dividend yield. The current annual dividend divided by the market price per share.

divide the assembly. Parliamentary law. To order that votes in a meeting be counted. — Also termed challenge the vote; divide the house; doubt the vote. See counted vote under VOTE (4).

divide the house. See DIVIDE THE ASSEMBLY.

divide the question. Parliamentary law. To break a long or complex motion, usu. one covering more than one subject, into shorter motions that the assembly considers independently.

divinare (div-i-nair-ee), vb. [Latin] To foretell or divine (something).

divinatio (div-i-nay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman law. A preliminary process for deciding which of two or more applicants had the best claim to conduct a criminal prosecution against an accused.

divine law. Law that emanates from a supernatural source, such as a deity. Cf. NATURAL LAW.

divine right of kings. The political theory that the sovereign is a direct representative of God and has the right to rule absolutely by virtue of royal birth.

"Divine Right of Kings . . . originated in the mediaeval concept of God's award of temporal power to civil rulers and spiritual power to the Church. It was claimed by the earlier Stuart kings in England, and explains many of their attitudes in the struggle which developed between them and Parliament for political sovereignty . . . The principle of divine right was submerged during the Commonwealth but re-emerged under James II, but disappeared with his flight and abdication." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 366 (1980).

divine service. 1. Hist. A feudal tenure in which the tenants were obligated to perform special divine functions, such as singing at a certain number of masses or distributing a specified amount in alms. 2. A public worship service.

divisa (di-vi-zə), n. [fr. French diviser "to divide"] 1. A division, as of goods by a will; a devise. 2. A boundary of neighboring lands. 3. A court held on such a boundary to settle the tenants' disputes.

divisible contract. See severable contract under CONTRACT.

divisible divorce. See DIVORCE.

divisible obligation. See OBLIGATION.

divisible offense. See OFFENSE (1).

divisible promises. See PROMISE.

divisim (di-vi-zəm). [Law Latin] Hist. Severally; separately.

division. 1. Parliamentary law. A counted vote. See counted vote under VOTE (4); DIVIDE THE ASSEMBLY. — Also termed division of the assembly; division of the house; division vote. 2. Parliamentary law. The separation of a long or complex motion, usu. one covering more than one subject, into shorter motions that the assembly considers independently. — Also termed division of the question. See DIVIDE THE QUESTION.

standing division. See standing vote under VOTE (4).

3. RESTRICTION (4).

divisional application. See PATENT APPLICATION.

divisional bond. See BOND (3).

divisional court. See COURT.

divisional security. See SECURITY.

division of fees. See FEE-SPLITTING.

division of powers. (18c) The allocation of power between the national government and the states. • Under the Tenth Amendment, powers not delegated to the federal government are reserved to the states or to the people. But today the Tenth Amendment provides only a limited check on Congress's power to regulate the states. Cf. SEPARATION OF POWERS. [Cases: States ↷4.16.]

division of property. See PROPERTY SETTLEMENT (1).

division of the assembly. See DIVISION (1).

division of the house. See DIVISION (1).

division of the question. See DIVISION (2).

division order. Oil & gas. A contract for the sale of oil or gas, specifying how the payments are to be distributed. • Royalty owners enter into division orders to sell minerals and to instruct how payments are to be made under a mineral lease. Working-interest owners also commonly sign division orders to instruct purchasers how payments are to be divided. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷79.1(3).]

division vote. See DIVISION (1).

divisum imperium (di-vi-zəm im-peer-ee-əm), n. [Latin "a divided empire"] Divided jurisdiction; alternate jurisdiction, as of courts.

"This main sea begins at the low-water-mark. But between the high-water-mark and the low-water-mark, where the sea ebbs and flows, the common law and admiralty have divisum imperium, an alternate jurisdiction; one upon the water, when it is full sea; the other upon the land, when it is an ebb." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 107 (1765).

divorce. (14c) The legal dissolution of a marriage by a court. — Also termed marital dissolution; dissolution of marriage. Cf. ANNULMENT. [Cases: Divorce ↷1.] — divorce, vb.

"When used without qualification, the term [divorce] imports a dissolution of the marriage relation between husband and wife, that is, a complete severance of the tie by which the parties were united. However, in its common and wider use, the term includes the dissolution of a valid marriage, a formal separation of married persons, and the annulment of a marriage void from the beginning.

"So, while the term 'divorce' has sometimes been broadly defined or applied to include both decrees of nullity and decrees of dissolution of marriage, especially where the marriage was not void but only voidable at the option of the injured party, this has been declared to be not in accord with modern usage, and generally, the term denotes only dissolution or suspension of a marital relation, and does not include annulment of an invalid marriage." 27A CJS Divorce § 2, at 31-32 (1986).

absolute divorce. See divorce a vinculo matrimonii.

bifurcated divorce. See divisible divorce.

collaborative divorce. A divorce negotiated in a non-adversarial forum, usu. between spouses who, with or without a lawyer, are assisted as needed by a team of experts in law, mental health, and financial matters (such as taxes and real estate).

conditional divorce. See conversion divorce.

contested divorce. 1. A divorce that one spouse opposes in court. 2. A divorce in which the spouses litigate. • In this sense, although both spouses may want the divorce, they disagree on the terms of the divorce decree. Cf. uncontested divorce.

conversion divorce. A divorce granted after (1) a legal separation has been granted or the parties have signed a separation agreement, and (2) the parties have lived separately for a statutorily prescribed period. — Also termed convertible divorce; conditional divorce. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 36.]

divisible divorce. (1943) A divorce whereby the marriage itself is dissolved but the issues incident to the divorce, such as alimony, child custody, and visitation, are reserved until a later proceeding. • This type of divorce can be granted when the court has subject-matter jurisdiction but lacks personal jurisdiction over the defendant-spouse. The doctrine of divisible divorce was recognized by the Supreme Court in Estin v. Estin, 334 U.S. 541, 68 S.Ct. 1213 (1948), and Vanderbilt v. Vanderbilt, 354 U.S. 416, 77 S.Ct. 1360 (1957). — Also termed bifurcated divorce. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 8, 146.]

divorce a mensa et thoro (ay men-sə et thor-oh). [Latin "(divorce) from board and hearth"] (18c) Hist. A partial or qualified divorce by which the parties were separated and allowed or ordered to live apart, but remained technically married. • This type of divorce, abolished in England in 1857, was the forerunner of modern judicial separation. — Also termed separation a mensa et thoro; separation from bed and board; limited divorce; legal separation; judicial separation. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 155.]

"[The Ecclesiastical Courts] grant also what is called a divorce a mensa et thoro, or rather what we should call a judicial separation, i.e. they release the parties from the duty of living together on grounds of cruelty or misconduct . . ." William Geldart, Introduction to English Law 38 (D.C.M. Yardley ed., 9th ed. 1984).

divorce a vinculo matrimonii (ay ving-kyə-loh ma-trə-moh-nee-i). [Latin "(divorce) from the chains of marriage"] (17c) A total divorce of husband and wife, dissolving the marriage tie and releasing the parties wholly from their matrimonial obligations. • At common law, but not always in canon law, this type of divorce bastardized any children from the marriage and was granted on grounds that existed before the marriage. In England, the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1857 introduced statutory divorce a vinculo matrimonii. — Usu. shortened to divorce. — Also termed absolute divorce. Cf. limited divorce. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 157.]

Dominican divorce. See Mexican divorce.

ex parte divorce (eks pah-tee). (1870) A divorce proceeding in which only one spouse participates or appears in court. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 146.]

fault divorce. A divorce granted to one spouse on the basis of some proven wrongful act (grounds for divorce) by the other spouse. • Although all states now have some form of no-fault divorce, some jurisdictions still consider a spouse's fault in precipitating the divorce, esp. when dividing marital property or when awarding alimony. Traditionally, the common grounds for a fault divorce were adultery, abandonment, imprisonment, and physical or mental cruelty; the defenses to alleged fault in a petition for divorce were condonation, connivance, collusion, recrimination, and insanity. Section 303(e) of the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act has abolished the defenses to divorce. Cf. no-fault divorce.

foreign divorce. (1831) A divorce obtained outside the state or country in which one spouse resides. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 351-420.]

hotel divorce. Slang. A form of collusive divorce — occurring before widespread passage of no-fault divorce laws — in which the spouses agree to fake an adultery scene to create "fault." Cf. no-fault divorce.

"Clearly a lawyer may not originate or participate in a scheme to make it appear to the court that a ground for divorce has occurred when this is not the fact. Such is the case in the so-called 'hotel divorces,' prevalent in jurisdictions where adultery is the only ground for divorce, and based on the principle that intercourse will be presumed from apparently uninhibited opportunity." Henry S. Drinker, Legal Ethics 123-24 (1953).

legislative divorce. Hist. The legal termination of a particular marriage, through a statute enacted by the legislature rather than by a court's decree. • In the 18th century, Colonial American legislatures granted these special statutes. In 1816, the House of Burgesses of Virginia granted a divorce to Rachel Robards Jackson, the wife of then President Andrew Jackson, from a former spouse. Mrs. Jackson's untimely death was attributed to her reaction to the scandal that she had married Jackson before the divorce was procured. Now only state courts have authority to grant decrees of divorce. — Also termed parliamentary divorce. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 5.]

limited divorce. (1831) 1. A divorce that ends the legal relationship of marriage by court order but does not address financial support, property distribution, or care and custody of children. • In the days before no-fault divorce, a spouse might seek a quick divorce in a state with a short residency requirement (such as Nevada). Then courts in the home state would give full faith and credit only to the dissolution of the marital res, while maintaining sole jurisdiction over property-division, support, and custody issues. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 155.] 2. Loosely, a legal separation. 3. See divorce a mensa et thoro. Cf. divorce a vinculo matrimonii.

mail-order divorce. (1922) Slang. A divorce obtained by parties who are not physically present or domiciled in the jurisdiction purporting to grant the divorce. • Such a divorce is not recognized in the United States because of the absence of the usual bases for jurisdiction.

Mexican divorce. A divorce obtained in Mexico by mail order or by the appearance of one spouse who does not have a Mexican domicile. • Neither type is recognized in the United States. — Also termed Dominican divorce (if granted in the Dominican Republic); Haitian divorce (if granted in Haiti).

migratory divorce. (1911) A divorce obtained in a jurisdiction other than the marital domicile; esp., a divorce obtained by a spouse who moves to, or temporarily resides in, another state or country to get the divorce.

no-fault divorce. (1969) A divorce in which the parties are not required to prove fault or grounds beyond a showing of the irretrievable breakdown of the marriage or irreconcilable differences. • The system of no-fault divorce has been adopted throughout the United States. By 1974, 45 states had adopted no-fault divorce; by 1985, every state but New York had adopted some form of it. In New York — one of the last bastions of fault grounds for divorce — the closest equivalent is a conversion divorce one year after legal separation or a legal-separation agreement. Cf. fault divorce; hotel divorce. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 12.] parliamentary divorce. See legislative divorce.

pro-con divorce. Slang. An uncontested divorce granted after only the plaintiff appears at the proceeding (since the defendant contests nothing).

quickie divorce. Slang. A fast divorce granted with minimal paperwork. — Also termed quick divorce.

rabbinical divorce. A divorce granted under the authority of a rabbi. • This type of divorce affects the relationship of the parties under the tenets of Judaism. It affects particularly a Jewish woman's ability to remarry in accordance with Judaic law. In the United States, it is not generally a divorce recognized in civil courts. — Also termed get.

uncontested divorce. A divorce that is unopposed by the spouse who did not initiate it. Cf. contested divorce.

divorce agreement. A contractual agreement that sets out divorcing spouses' rights and responsibilities regarding property, alimony, custody, visitation, and child support. • The divorce agreement usu. becomes incorporated by court order as a part of the divorce decree and thus is enforceable by contempt, among other remedies. — Also termed agreement incident to divorce; marital settlement agreement; separation agreement. Cf. PROPERTY SETTLEMENT. [Cases: Husband and Wife ⇨ 277.]

divorce decree. See DECREE.

divorce proctor. A person (such as a guardian) who is appointed to protect the interest of the state or children in a divorce action. — Sometimes shortened to proctor. [Cases: Infants ⇨ 76.]

divortium (di-vor-shee-əm), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. Divorce; a severance of the marriage tie. • In classical law, no grounds were required. Cf. REPUDIUM. 2. Eccles. law. A decree allowing spouses to separate or declaring their marriage invalid.

"Owing to the fact that the church had but slowly made up her mind how to know no such thing as a divorce in our acceptance of that term (i.e., the dissolution of a valid marriage) the term divortium is currently used to signify two very different things, namely (1) the divortium quoad torum, which is the equivalent of our 'judicial separation,' and (2) what is very often called the divortium quoad vinculum but is really a declaration of nullity. The persistence of the word divortium in the latter case is a trace of an older state of affairs, but in medieval practice the decree of nullity often served the purpose of a true divorce; spouses who had quarrelled began to investigate their pedigrees and were unlucky if they could discover no impedimentum dirimens." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 393 n.5 (2d ed. 1899; repr. 1959).

D.J. See district judge under JUDGE.

DJIA. abbr. DOW JONES INDUSTRIAL AVERAGE.

DLA. abbr. DEFENSE LOGISTICS AGENCY.

DL/C. See documentary letter of credit under LETTER OF CREDIT.

DLOP. abbr. Dismissal for lack of prosecution. See dismissal for want of prosecution under DISMISSAL (1).

DLOP docket. See DWOP docket under DOCKET (2).

DLSA. abbr. DEFENSE LEGAL SERVICES AGENCY.

DMCA. abbr. DIGITAL MILLENNIUM COPYRIGHT ACT.

DNA. abbr. Deoxyribonucleic acid; the double-helix structure in cell nuclei that carries the genetic information of most living organisms.

DNA identification. (1987) A method of scientific identification based on a person's unique genetic makeup; specif., the comparison of a person's deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) — a patterned chemical structure of genetic information — with the DNA in a biological specimen (such as blood, tissue, or hair) to determine whether the person is the source of the specimen. • DNA evidence is used in criminal cases for purposes such as identifying a victim's remains, linking a suspect to a crime, and exonerating an innocent suspect. — Also termed DNA fingerprinting; genetic fingerprinting; DNA profiling; DNA typing. Cf. HUMAN-LEUKOCYTE ANTIGEN TEST. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 388.2; Evidence ⇨ 150.]

DNR order. abbr. DO-NOT-RESUSCITATE ORDER.

do (doh). [Latin] Hist. I give. • This term was considered the oldest and aptest for a feoffment and gift.

DOC. abbr. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

dock, n. 1. A structure that encloses water, often between two piers, in which ships are received for loading, unloading, safekeeping, or repair. [Cases: Wharves ⇨ 4.] 2. The part of a warehouse or other building (usu. elevated with oversized doors) at which trucks are received for loading and unloading. 3. English law. In a criminal court, the enclosure in which the prisoner is placed during trial <it was through his own deliberate choice that Mr. Bourne found himself in the dock at the Old Bailey, charged with a felony>. See BAIL DOCK.

dockage. A charge for the use of a dock, esp. while a vessel is undergoing repairs.

docket, n. (15c) 1. A formal record in which a judge or court clerk briefly notes all the proceedings and filings in a court case <review the docket to determine the filing date>. — Also termed judicial record; bench docket; docket sheet. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 493-543; Criminal Law ⇨ 1086.1-1088.20.]

appearance docket. (18c) A list of the parties and lawyers participating in an action, together with a brief abstract of the successive steps in the action. [Cases: Appearance ⇨ 5; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 561.]

judgment docket. (1826) A book that a court clerk keeps for the entry or recordation of judgments, giving official notice of existing judgment liens to interested parties. — Also termed judgment book; judgment file; judgment record; judgment roll. [Cases: Judgment ⇨ 277, 284.]

2. A schedule of pending cases <the case is third on Monday's trial docket>. — Also termed court calendar; cause list; trial calendar. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 632(2); Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1991; Trial ⇨ 9(1).]

DWOP docket. A list of cases that the court has set for possible dismissal for want of prosecution. — Also termed doowop docket; DLOP docket. See Dismissal for want of prosecution under DISMISSAL (1).

preferred docket. (1993) A list of cases set for trial, arranged in order of priority. • Criminal cases are, for example, generally given precedence over civil cases on the preferred docket because of the constitutional right to a speedy trial. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 632(2); Trial ⇨ 13.]

3. DOCKET CALL <the agreed judgment was signed at the court's uncontested docket call on May 24>. 4. Parliamentary law. A list of each motion, report, election, and other business that awaits a deliberative assembly's consideration, from which a board or officer prepares and circulates an agenda for each meeting or for a series of upcoming meetings <in planning the meeting, the chair worked from an exhaustive docket>. See AGENDA. 5. A written abstract that provides specific information (usu. about something attached); esp., a label <check the docket to determine the goods' destination and value>. 6. Hist. A notary's attestation at the end of a deed or other instrument; esp., the attestation at the end of an instrument of seisin. — Also spelled docquet. See MANU ALIENA.

docket, vb. (17c) 1. To make a brief entry in the docket of the proceedings and filings in a court case <to docket the filing date>. 2. To abstract and enter in a book <to docket a judgment>. 3. To schedule (a case) for trial or some other event <the case was docketed for a May trial>.

docket call. (1899) A court session in which attorneys (and sometimes parties) appear in court to report the status of their cases. • For example, they may announce readiness for trial or report the suit's settlement. — Often shortened to docket.

docket entry. A note made in the court's formal record of proceedings and filings. See DOCKET (1).

docket fee. See FEE (1).

docket number. (1866) A number that the court clerk assigns to a case on the court's docket.

docket order. See ORDER (2).

docket sheet. See DOCKET (1).

dockmaster. English law. An officer who directs the mooring and removal of ships to avoid the obstruction of commerce.

dock receipt. Maritime law. An interim document issued by a maritime carrier to evidence the delivery of goods at the dock. • Generally, a dock receipt entitles the designated person to receive a bill of lading, waybill, or other transport document. — Also termed dock warrant. See DOCUMENT OF TITLE. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 106(6).]

dock sale. See SALE.

dock warrant. See DOCK RECEIPT.

doctor. 1. Hist. In Roman Catholic canon law, an honorary title for a scholar. 2. A title of a person who has acquired an advanced degree in academics, or has achieved an honorable distinction. 3. A physician. — Abbr. Dr. [Cases: Health ⇨ 110.]

Doctor of Juridical Science. A graduate law degree, beyond the J.D. and the LL.M. — Abbr. S.J.D.; J.S.D. — Also termed Doctor of Judicial Science; Doctor of the Science of Jurisprudence; Doctor of the Science of Law.

Doctor of Jurisprudence. See JURIS DOCTOR.

Doctor of Law. See JURIS DOCTOR.

Doctor of Laws. An honorary degree bestowed on one who has achieved great distinction. — Abbr. LL.D. Cf. JURIS DOCTOR; MASTER OF LAWS.

Doctor of the Science of Jurisprudence. See DOCTOR OF JURIDICAL SCIENCE.

Doctor of the Science of Law. See DOCTOR OF JURIDICAL SCIENCE.

doctor-patient privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

doctor-patient relationship. See RELATIONSHIP.

Doctors' Commons. Hist. Informal. The College of Advocates and Doctors of Law, which trained specialists in admiralty and ecclesiastical law and housed admiralty and ecclesiastical courts from the 16th century to the 19th. • The College was dissolved in the 1860s after its functions were absorbed by the High Court. — Sometimes written Doctors' Common.

doctrine. (14c) 1. A principle, esp. a legal principle, that is widely adhered to. 2. Archaic. HOLDING (1). doctrine of acquired rights. See ACQUIRED-RIGHTS DOCTRINE.

doctrine of adverse domination. See ADVERSE-DOMINATION DOCTRINE.

doctrine of approximation. (1845) A doctrine that authorizes a court to vary the details of a trust's administration to preserve the trust and to carry out the donor's intentions. — Also termed equitable doctrine of approximation. Cf. CY PRES.

doctrine of capture. See RULE OF CAPTURE.

doctrine of claim differentiation. See CLAIM DIFFERENTIATION.

doctrine of coercion. See COERCION (3).

doctrine of completeness. See RULE OF OPTIONAL COMPLETENESS.

doctrine of constructive service. 1. See constructive service under SERVICE (2). 2. Employment law. The principle that a person who contracts to work for a definite period and is wrongfully discharged after beginning work may wait until the contract period expires and then sue on the contract for the wages that the person would have earned between the time of the discharge and the expiration of the contract. • In a jurisdiction that has adopted this principle, it is an exception to the mitigation-of-damages doctrine. — Often shortened to constructive service. Cf. MITIGATION-OF-DAMAGES DOCTRINE. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻171, 239.]

doctrine of contagion. See CONTAGION.

doctrine of continuity. See CONTINUITY (2).

doctrine of contra non valentem (kon-trə non və-len-təm). (1938) The rule that a limitations or prescriptive period does not begin to run against a plaintiff who is unable to act, usu. because of the defendant's culpable act, such as concealing material information that would give rise to the plaintiff's claim. — Often shortened to contra non valentem. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↻43, 95.]

doctrine of contra proferentem. See CONTRA PROFERENTEM.

doctrine of curative admissibility. A rule allowing a party to introduce otherwise inadmissible evidence to remove the prejudice caused by the improper admission of evidence that was offered by the opposing party.

• The doctrine applies when a motion to strike cannot cure the prejudice created by the adverse party. — Also termed curative-admissibility doctrine. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻396; Evidence ↻155.]

doctrine of discovered peril. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

doctrine of election (18c). A doctrine holding that when a person has contracted with an agent without knowing of the agency and later learns the principal's identity, the person may enforce the contract against either the agent or the principal, but not both. See ELECTION (1); ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

doctrine of entiteties (en-tī-ər-teez). In customs law, the rule that when an entry consists of parts that assemble to form an article different from any of the parts, the proper classification will be of the whole article, rather than the individual components. • For example, an unassembled product consisting of an empty decorative glass, powdered wax in a cellophane bag, wicks, and fragrance, boxed together and sold as one product may be properly classified as a candle.

doctrine of equitable indemnity. See equitable indemnity under INDEMNITY.

doctrine of equivalents. (1856) Patents. A judicially created theory for finding patent infringement when the accused process or product falls outside the literal scope of the patent claims. • The doctrine evolved to prevent parties from evading liability for patent infringement by making trivial changes to avoid the literal language of the patent claims. Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Prods. Co., 339 U.S. 605, 70 S.Ct. 854 (1950). In determining whether infringement exists under the doctrine, the court must first determine whether "the accused product or process contain[s] an element identical or equivalent to each claimed element of the patented invention." Warner-Jenkinson Co. v. Hilton Davis Chem. Co., 520 U.S. 17, 39–40, 117 S.Ct. 1040, 1054 (1997). If it does, it infringes on the patent if the differing element performs substantially the same function in substantially the same way to get the same result as the patented product or process. Prosecution-history estoppel is not an absolute bar to a patentee who seeks to invoke the doctrine of equivalents to prove infringement on a claim that was voluntarily amended. Festo v. Shoketsu Kinzoku Kogyo Kabushiki Co., 535 U.S. 722, 122 S.Ct. 1831 (2002). — Also termed equivalents doctrine; doctrine of equivalence; doctrine of equivalency; doctrine of substantial equivalents; nonliteral infringement. Cf. literal infringement under INFRINGEMENT. [Cases: Patents ↻237.] reverse doctrine of equivalents. The doctrine preventing infringement liability when the invention is substantially described by the claims of another's patent but performs the same or a similar function in a substantially different way.

doctrine of estates. Hist. The rule that a person cannot own land, but can merely own an estate in it, authorizing the person to hold it for some period of time. • This doctrine answers the question of the duration of an estate. Cf. DOCTRINE OF TENURES.

doctrine of finality. See FINALITY DOCTRINE.

doctrine of general average. Maritime law. A rule allowing a carrier to require cargo owners and the shipowner to contribute pro rata to the cost of protecting the ship and its cargo. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 186.]

doctrine of identification. Hist. English law. The rule that if a person traveling in a conveyance is injured in an accident that occurs because of someone else's negligence, and the driver of the conveyance is contributorily negligent, the passenger cannot claim damages against the tortfeasor since the passenger is "identified" with the contributorily negligent driver. • The leading authority for this doctrine was Thorogood v. Bryan, 8 C.B. 115 (1849), but the Court of Appeal repudiated the doctrine as unsound in The Bernina [1887], 13 App. Cas. 1 (1888).

doctrine of illusory coverage. A rule requiring an insurance policy to be interpreted so that it is not merely a delusion to the insured. • Courts avoid interpreting insurance policies in such a way that an insured's coverage is never triggered and the insurer bears no risk. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2090.]

doctrine of incontrovertible physical facts. See PHYSICAL-FACTS RULE.

doctrine of ineffective revocation. See DEPENDENT RELATIVE REVOCATION.

doctrine of inherency. See INHERENCY DOCTRINE.

doctrine of intervening rights. See INTERVENING RIGHTS.

doctrine of legal unities. See LEGAL-UNITIES DOCTRINE.

doctrine of marital privacy. See MARITAL-PRIVACY DOCTRINE.

doctrine of necessities. (1870) 1. The rule holding a parent or spouse liable to anyone who sells goods or provides medical services to that person's child or spouse if the goods or services are required for sustenance, support, or healthcare. 2. Archaic. The common-law rule holding a husband or father liable to anyone who sells goods to his wife or child if the goods are required for sustenance or support. See NECESSARIES. [Cases: Husband and Wife ⇨ 19.]

doctrine of notice. See NOTICE DOCTRINE.

doctrine of obligation. English law. The rule that if a foreign court of competent jurisdiction has adjudicated a certain sum to be due from one person to another, the liability to pay that sum becomes a legal obligation enforceable domestically by a debt action. • Once the plaintiff proves the judgment, the burden shifts to the defendant to show why the obligation should not be performed. The doctrine was established by Baron Parke in Russell v. Smyth, 9 M. & W. 810, 819 (1842). — Often shortened to obligation.

doctrine of optional completeness. See RULE OF OPTIONAL COMPLETENESS.

doctrine of parens patriae. See PARENS PATRIAE (2).

doctrine of practical location. See AGREED-BOUNDARY DOCTRINE.

doctrine of precedent. (18c) 1. The rule that precedents not only have persuasive authority but also must be followed when similar circumstances arise. • This rule developed in the 19th century and prevails today. See STARE DECISIS. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 88.] 2. A rule that precedents are reported, may be cited, and will probably be followed by courts. • This is the rule that prevailed in England until the 19th century.

doctrine of preclusion of inconsistent positions. See judicial estoppel under ESTOPPEL.

doctrine of relation back. See RELATION BACK.

doctrine of res judicata. See RES JUDICATA.

doctrine of revestment. A rule by which a court regains jurisdiction after the entry of final judgment when the former opposing parties have actively participated in proceedings inconsistent with the court's judgment. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 30.]

doctrine of scrivener's error. (1992) A rule permitting a typographical error in a document to be reformed by parol evidence, if the evidence is precise, clear, and convincing. See clerical error under ERROR (2). [Cases: Reformation of Instruments ⇨ 17(2).]

doctrine of separate spheres. See SEPARATE-SPHERES DOCTRINE.

doctrine of specialty. Int'l law. The principle, included as a provision in most extradition treaties, under which a person who is extradited to a country to stand trial for certain criminal offenses may be tried only for those offenses and not for any other pre-extradition offenses. — Also termed specialty doctrine. See EXTRADITION. [Cases: Extradition and Detainers ⇨ 19.]

doctrine of spousal unity. See SPOUSAL-UNITY DOCTRINE (1).

doctrine of subsequent negligence. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

doctrine of substantial equivalents. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS.

doctrine of substituted judgment. See SUBSTITUTED-JUDGMENT DOCTRINE.

doctrine of superior equities. Insurance. A rule by which an insurer is unable to recover from anyone whose equities are equal or superior to the insurer's; esp., a rule that a right of subrogation may be invoked against another party only if that party's guilty conduct renders the party's equity inferior to that of the insured. — Also termed risk-stops-here rule. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 3513(3), 3517; Subrogation ⇨ 1.]

doctrine of tenures. Hist. The rule that all land is held of the Crown, either directly or indirectly, on some type of tenure. • This doctrine answers the question of the manner in which an estate is held. — Also termed doctrine of tenure. Cf. DOCTRINE OF ESTATES.

doctrine of the conclusiveness of the judgment. See judicial estoppel under ESTOPPEL.

doctrine of the last antecedent. See RULE OF THE LAST ANTECEDENT.

doctrine of the last preceding antecedent. RULE OF THE LAST ANTECEDENT.

doctrine of ultimate negligence. See LAST-CLEAR-CHANCE DOCTRINE.

doctrine of unconstitutional conditions. See UNCONSTITUTIONAL-CONDITIONS DOCTRINE.

doctrine of vested rights. See VESTED-RIGHTS DOCTRINE.

doctrine of worthier title. See WORTHIER-TITLE DOCTRINE.

document, n. (15c) 1. Something tangible on which words, symbols, or marks are recorded. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 34(a). 2. (pl.) The deeds, agreements, title papers, letters, receipts, and other written instruments used to prove a fact.

ancient document. (1846) Evidence. A document that is presumed to be authentic because its physical condition strongly suggests authenticity, it has existed for 20 or more years, and it has been maintained in proper custody (as by coming from a place where it is reasonably expected to be found). Fed. R. Evid. 901(b) (8). — Also termed ancient writing. [Cases: Evidence ⇨ 372.]

foreign document. (1816) A document that originated in, or was prepared or executed in, a foreign state or country.

governing document. Parliamentary law. A document that defines or organizes an organization, or grants or establishes its authority and governance. • An organization's governing documents may include a charter, articles of incorporation or association, a constitution, bylaws, and rules. A charter or articles of incorporation or association, if they have been granted or adopted, are an organization's most authoritative governing document, followed by the constitution, bylaws, and rules, in that order. — Also termed document of authority. See CHARTER (4), (5); ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION; ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION (2); CONSTITUTION (4); BYLAW (1); SUBORDINATION (2).

hot document. (1995) A document that directly supports a litigant's allegation.

public document. (17c) A document of public interest issued or published by a political body or otherwise connected with public business. Cf. public record under RECORD. [Cases: Evidence ⇨ 325–337.]

3. Evidence. Under the best-evidence rule, a physical embodiment of information or ideas, such as a letter, contract, receipt, account book, blueprint, or X-ray plate; esp., the original of such an embodiment. See Fed. R. Evid. 1001 et seq. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 400; Evidence ⇨ 157–187.]

document, vb. (18c) 1. To support with records, instruments, or other evidentiary authorities <document the chain of custody>. 2. To record; to create a written record of <document a file>.

documentary credit. 1. Credit extended on a document of title or any other legal document. 2. A financing arrangement in which a financial institution authorizes or makes a payment to a third party (usu. an exporter) at a customer's request. • This financing method facilitates international transactions by providing the importer with necessary credit and the exporter with an expedited cash payment.

documentary draft. See DRAFT.

documentary evidence. See EVIDENCE.

documentary instruction. A written agreement between an importer and exporter covering the relegation of various documents relating to the shipment and disposition of goods.

documentary letter of credit. See LETTER OF CREDIT.

documentary-originals rule. See BEST-EVIDENCE RULE.

documentary sale. See SALE.

documentary stamp. A stamp required to be affixed to a deed or other instrument before it is recorded.

documentary-stamp transfer tax. See stamp tax under TAX.

document of title. (18c) A written description, identification, or declaration of goods authorizing the holder (usu. a bailee) to receive, hold, and dispose of the document and the goods it covers. • Documents of title, such as bills of lading, warehouse receipts, and delivery orders, are generally governed by Article 7 of the UCC. See BAILMENT (1)–(3). [Cases: Carriers ⇨ 51; Warehousemen ⇨ 11.]

negotiable document of title. A document of title that actually stands for the goods it covers, so that any transfer of the goods requires a surrender of the document. UCC § 7-104(1). [Cases: Bills and Notes ⇨ 151; Warehousemen ⇨ 15.]

nonnegotiable document of title. A document of title that merely serves as evidence of the goods it covers. UCC § 7-104(2). [Cases: Warehousemen ⇨ 15.]

document request. See REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION.

documentum (dok-yə-men-təm), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. Proof. 2. A document. • This term appeared in post-classical imperial constitutions.

DOD. abbr. Department of Defense. See DEFENSE DEPARTMENT.

DoDDS. abbr. DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE DEPENDENTS SCHOOLS.

do, dico, addico (doh, dī-koh, ə-dī-koh or dik-oh, ə-dik-oh). [Latin] I give, I say, I adjudge. • These formal words were spoken by the Roman praetor in the exercise of his jurisdiction on certain days, such as dies fasti. They could not be officially spoken on dies nefasti. Do refers to the granting of actions, exceptions, and the appointment of judges; dico refers to the pronouncement of judgments; and addico refers to the adjudication of controverted property.

DOE. abbr. 1. DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION. 2. DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY.

Doe, Jane. See JANE DOE.

Doe, John. See JOHN DOE.

D'Oench Duhme doctrine (dench doom). The rule that estops a borrower from asserting a claim or defense against a federal successor to a failed financial institution — if the claim or defense is based on a side or secret agreement or representation — unless the agreements or representations have been (1) put into writing, (2) executed by the financial institution and borrower when the loan was issued, (3) approved by the financial institution's board of directors or loan committee, and (4) made a permanent part of the financial institution's records. D'Oench, Duhme & Co. v. FDIC, 315 U.S. 447, 62 S.Ct. 676 (1942) (now partially codified at 12 USCA § 1823(e), and otherwise of questionable standing in light of O'Melveny & Myers v. FDIC, 512 U.S. 79, 114 S.Ct. 2048 (1994)). [Cases: Banks and Banking ⇨ 505.]

do equity. (Of one who seeks an equitable remedy) to treat or offer to treat the other party as fairly as is necessary, short of abandoning one's own legal rights, to bring about a fair result. • The phrase derives from the maxim, "One who seeks equity must do equity." See UNCLEAN-HANDS DOCTRINE. [Cases: Equity ⇨ 66.]

d'office (daw-fees). [Law French] Of office; officially. • This is similar to the Latin phrase ex officio.

dog. Slang. 1. Something undesirable, esp. a lawsuit <the cases assigned to the new lawyer were all dogs>. 2. Securities. A stock or other investment that suffers public disdain and repeated price declines or poor performance.

dog-draw. Hist. The apprehension of someone chasing a deer in a forest with a dog.

"Dog-draw is an apparent deprehension of an offender against venison in the forest. There are four kinds of them observed by Manwood, part. 2, cap. 18, num. 9, of his Forest Laws, that is, dog-draw, stable-stand, back-bear, and bloody-hand. Dog-draw is, when one is found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound led in his hand." Termes de la Ley 181 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

dogma (dawg-mə or dahg-), n. A philosophy, opinion, or tenet that is strongly held, is believed to be authoritative, and is followed steadfastly, usu. to the exclusion of other approaches to the same subject matter; a formally stated and proclaimed doctrine of faith. Pl. dogmas, dogmata (-mə-tə).

DOHSA (doh-shə). abbr. DEATH ON THE HIGH SEAS ACT.

doing business. The act of engaging in business activities; specif., the carrying out of a series of similar acts for the purpose of realizing a pecuniary benefit, or otherwise accomplishing a goal, or doing a single act with the intention of starting a series of such acts; esp., a nonresident's participation in sufficient business activities in a foreign state to allow the state's courts to exercise personal jurisdiction over the nonresident. See BUSINESS (1); D/B/A/; DOING-BUSINESS STATUTE; LONG-ARM STATUTE; MINIMUM CONTACTS. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 642, 665(1); Courts ⇨ 12(2.15).]

doing-business statute. A state law defining the acts that constitute undertaking business there, usu. for the purpose of establishing the circumstances under which the state's courts may exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident. See MINIMUM CONTACTS; LONG-ARM STATUTE. [Cases: Courts ⇨ 12(2.15).]

DOJ. abbr. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

DOL. abbr. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

do, lego (doh, lee-goh). [Latin] Hist. I give and bequeath. • In Roman law, this was the phrase used to make a bequest.

dole-land. Hist. Jointly owned land in which each owner or user has an assigned portion with distinct landmarks. • The share may be allotted annually on a rotating basis or permanently. — Also termed dole-meadow; dole-moor.

dole-meadow. See DOLE-LAND.

dole-moor. See DOLE-LAND.

Dole test. A four-part test used to determine the constitutionality of a condition attached by Congress under its Spending Clause power to the receipt of federal money. • The spending must be in pursuit of the general welfare, and the condition must be unambiguous, related to some federal interest, and not barred by any other provision of the Constitution. South Dakota v. Dole, 483 U.S. 203, 107 S.Ct. 2793 (1987). [Cases: United States ⇨ 82(2).]

doli capax (doh-lī kay-paks), adj. [Latin "capable of wrong"] Roman law. Capable of committing a crime or tort; esp., old enough to determine right from wrong. — Also termed capax doli. Cf. DOLI INCAPAX.

"In criminal cases, an infant of the age of fourteen years may be capitally punished for any capital offence: but under the age of seven he cannot. The period between seven and fourteen is subject to much uncertainty; for the infant shall, generally speaking, be judged prima facie innocent; yet if he was doli capax, and could discern between good and evil at the time of the offence committed, he may be convicted and undergo judgment and execution of death, though he hath not attained to years of puberty or discretion. 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 452–53 (1765).

doli incapax (doh-lee in-kay-paks), adj. [Latin “incapable of wrong”] Roman law. Incapable of committing a crime or tort. — Also termed incapax doli. Cf. DOLI CAPAX.

dollar-cost averaging, n. The investment practice of purchasing a fixed dollar amount of a type of security at regular intervals.

dolo (doh-loh), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. Fraud or deceit; bad or mischievous design.

dolo circumventus (doh-loh sər-kəm-ven-təs). [Latin] Hist. Overreached by fraud.

dolose (də-lohs or doh-lohs). [Latin] Hist. Fraudulent; deceitful; malicious.

dolus (doh-ləs). [Latin “device; artifice”] Roman & civil law. 1. Fraud or deceit; conduct intended to deceive someone; bad faith. • Although there may be dolus without fraud, fraud always includes dolus. Cf. CASUS (1); CULPA (1). 2. Intentional aggression; willful injury, esp. to another’s property. — Also termed dolus malus; fraus.

“In the twelfth century the resuscitated Roman law introduced some new ideas. Men began to contrast, as Glanvill does, civil with criminal causes, to speak of dolus and culpa and casus, and to lay stress on the psychical element in crime.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 477 (2d ed. 1899).

“Although the word malitia is not unknown to the Roman lawyers, the usual and technical name for wrongful intent is dolus, or more specifically dolus malus. Dolus and culpa are two forms of mens rea. In a narrower sense, however, dolus includes merely that particular variety of wrongful intent which we term fraud — that is to say, the intent to deceive. From this limited sense it was extended to cover all forms of wilful wrongdoing. The English term fraud has never received an equally wide extension.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 385 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

dolus bonus (doh-ləs boh-nəs). [Latin “good deceit”] Shrewdness or justifiable deceit, as when a person lies to an attacker to prevent an assault. • Dolus bonus does not produce any legal consequences.

dolus dans locum contractui (doh-ləs danz loh-kəm kən-trak-choo-ee). [Latin] Fraud (or deceit) giving rise to the contract; specif., a fraudulent misrepresentation that, having been made by one of the parties to the contract and relied on by the other, was actually instrumental in inducing the latter to enter into the contract.

dolus incidens (doh-ləs in-si-denz). [Law Latin] Hist. Fraud incidental; fraud that does not affect the essential terms of an agreement.

dolus malus (doh-ləs mal-əs). [Latin “bad or evil deceit”] Evil or fraudulent design or intent; an unjustifiable deceit.

DOMA. abbr. DEFENSE OF MARRIAGE ACT.

domain (doh-mayn), n. (15c) 1. The territory over which sovereignty is exercised <the 19th-century domains of the British Empire>. 2. An estate in land <the family domain is more than 6,000 acres>. 3. The complete and absolute ownership of land <his domain over this land has now been settled>. See EMINENT DOMAIN; PUBLIC DOMAIN.

domain name. The words and characters that website owners designate for their registered Internet addresses.

• All domain names have at least two levels. The first-level domain name identifies the registrant’s category as, e.g., a commercial site (.com), a governmental institution (.gov), an educational institution (.edu), a non-profit group (.org), or a discussion group (.net). The second-level domain name is the unique identifier for the user in a particular category <rhapsangel.com> <rhapsangel.org>. A second-level domain name may be protected under trademark law but first-level domain names are not. In some circumstances, the entire domain name may be validly registered as a trademark. But trademark rights are not automatically created by registering a domain name. See INTERNET-PROTOCOL ADDRESS. [Cases: Telecommunications ↻1330.] domain-name infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

domboc. See DOOMBOOK.

Dombrowski doctrine. (1965) A short-lived rule that entitled a person to seek a federal-court injunction to prevent prosecution under a broad or vague state statute that affects rights guaranteed by the First Amendment. Dombrowski v. Pfister, 380 U.S. 479, 85 S.Ct. 1116 (1965).

• The doctrine was greatly cut back six years after it was announced, when the Supreme Court ruled that a speculative First Amendment chilling effect does not justify federal-court intervention in state affairs. Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 91 S.Ct. 746 (1971). [Cases: Courts ↻508.]

domebook. See DOOMBOOK.

Domesday Book (doomz-day). The census or survey, ordered by William the Conqueror and substantially completed in 1086, of England’s landholdings, buildings, people, and livestock. — Abbr. D.B. — Also spelled Doomsday Book.

“Domesday Book had several variant names — Liber de Wintonia, Rotulus Wintoniae, Scriptura Thesauri Regis, Liber Regis, Liber Judicarius, Censualis Angliae, Angliae Notitia et Lustratio, Rotulus Regis, Liber de Thesaurio, Exchequer Domesday. . . . Domesday Book had as its main object a fiscal one, and a limited fiscal one at that. Beyond that it does not profess to go, and if we get any further information from it as to contemporary law and society, we get it as an indirect consequence.” Percy H. Winfield, The Chief Sources of English Legal History 110–11 (1925).

domestic, adj. (15c) 1. Of or relating to one’s own country <domestic affairs>. 2. Of or relating to one’s own jurisdiction <in Alaska, a domestic corporation is an Alaskan one>. 3. Of or relating to the family or the household .

domestic abuse. See domestic violence under VIOLENCE.

domestic animal. See ANIMAL.

domestic asset-protection trust. See asset-protection trust under TRUST (3).

domesticated animal. See ANIMAL.

domestic authority. (1833) 1. The legal power to use nondeadly force when reasonably necessary to protect a person for whom one is responsible. 2. A defense allowing a person responsible for another (such as a parent responsible for a child) to use nondeadly force when reasonably necessary to protect the person being cared for. [Cases: Assault and Battery ⇨14, 68.]

domestic bill. See BILL (6).

domestic corporation. See CORPORATION.

domestic court. See COURT.

domestic creditor. See CREDITOR.

domestic dispute. (1890) A disturbance, usu. at a residence and usu. within a family, involving violence and often resulting in a call to a law-enforcement agency. — Also termed domestic disturbance; family disturbance. See domestic violence under VIOLENCE. [Cases: Protection of Endangered Persons ⇨45.]

domestic disturbance. See DOMESTIC DISPUTE.

domestic export. See EXPORT (1).

domestic fixture. See FIXTURE.

domestic guardian. See GUARDIAN.

Domestic International Sales Corporation. A U.S. corporation, esp. a subsidiary whose income is primarily attributable to exports. • Income tax on part of a DISC's income is usu. deferred, resulting in a lower overall corporate tax for the parent than it would otherwise incur. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 991-997. — Abbr. DISC. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨4118.]

domestic judgment. See JUDGMENT.

domestic partnership. 1. A nonmarital relationship between two persons of the same or opposite sex who live together as a couple for a significant period of time. 2. A relationship that an employer or governmental entity recognizes as equivalent to marriage for the purpose of extending employee-partner benefits otherwise reserved for the spouses of employees. Cf. CIVIL UNION; same-sex marriage under MARRIAGE (1). [Cases: Marriage ⇨13, 17.5, 22, 54.] — domestic partner, n.

domestic-partnership law. A legislative enactment, often a municipal ordinance, that grants unmarried adults living in economically or emotionally based relationships, regardless of their sexual preference, some of the rights of a civil marriage without attempting to change the traditional definition of marriage. [Cases: Marriage ⇨54.]

domestic-partnership period. The period beginning when domestic partners begin living together and ending when the partners stop sharing a primary residence. See DOMESTIC PARTNERSHIP.

domestic-partnership property. See PROPERTY.

Domestic Policy Council. See OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT.

domestic relations. See FAMILY LAW (1).

domestic-relations court. See family court under COURT.

domestic-relations exception. The exclusion of suits regarding the granting of divorce, alimony, and child custody from federal diversity jurisdiction. • The domestic-relations exemption to federal diversity jurisdiction originated as dictum in Barber v. Barber, 62 U.S. (21 How.) 582 (1858). Federal courts do not have jurisdiction to grant divorces, award alimony, or determine child custody. In general, matters of domestic relations are left to the states. But the federal courts may hear other diversity matters involving family members, such as tort claims or suits seeking to enforce alimony orders. Ankenbrandt v. Richards, 504 U.S. 689, 112 S.Ct. 2206 (1992). [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨8.] domestic-relations law. See FAMILY LAW (1).

domestic servant. A household servant. — Often shortened to domestic.

domestic terrorism. See TERRORISM.

domestic tort. See marital tort under TORT.

domesticus (də-mes-ti-kəs), n. [Latin] Hist. Steward; judge's assistant; assessor.

domestic violence. See VIOLENCE.

domicellus (dom-ə-sel-əs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A king's natural son in France. 2. A young lord.

"Domicellus, is an old obsolete . . . word, anciently given as an Appellation or Addition to the King's natural Sons in France, and sometimes to the eldest Sons of Noblemen there; from whence we borrowed these Additions: As several natural Children of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, are stiled Domicelli by the Charter of Legitimation. . . . But according to Thorn, the Domicelli were only the better Sort of Servants in Monasteries." Giles Jacob, A New Law-Dictionary (8th ed. 1762).

domicile (dom-ə-sil), n. (15c) 1. The place at which a person has been physically present and that the person regards as home; a person's true, fixed, principal, and permanent home, to which that person intends to return and remain even though currently residing elsewhere. • A person has a settled connection with his or her domicile for legal purposes, either because that place is home or because the law has so designated that place. — Also termed permanent abode; habitation. [Cases: Domicile ⇨1; Federal Courts ⇨282.]

"By domicile we mean home, the permanent home; and if you do not understand your permanent home, I am afraid that no illustration drawn from foreign writers or foreign languages will very much help you to it." Whicker v. Hume (1858) 7 H.L.C. 124, 160 (per Lord Cranworth).

"It is difficult to give a definition of domicil that will cover at once domicil by operation of law and domicil by choice. The idea of domicil certainly includes the idea of place and the idea of settled connection with the place. Domicil of choice is so closely connected with the idea of home that it seems desirable to include that idea in any definition, and yet the idea is not applicable to many kinds of domicile by operation of law. It has therefore seemed best to state this element in the alternative. If a home is in the place, that is sufficient. If there is no home, or if the party is not sui juris, then the place is assigned by law without his will." 1 Joseph H. Beale, A Treatise on the Conflict of Laws § 9.1, at 89-90 (1935).

"A person's domicile is the place with which that person is most closely associated — his or her 'home' with all the connotations of that word. A person can be domiciled in a nation, a state of the United States, a city, or a house within a city. He or she can have a domicile within a broader geographical designation without having a domicile in a narrower geographical designation. For example, a person may be domiciled in a state without being domiciled within any particular city within the state. For interstate choice-of-law purposes, it is the state in which a person is domiciled that is significant." Russell J. Weintraub, Commentary on the Conflict of Laws § 2.2, at 14 (4th ed. 2001).

2. The residence of a person or corporation for legal purposes. — Also termed (in sense 2) legal residence; domicile by operation of law. Cf. RESIDENCE; PLACE OF BUSINESS. — Also spelled (in BrE) domicil.

"Tax statutes frequently speak in terms of residence, intending it to be the equivalent of domicile. For example, the New York estate tax speaks in terms of residence and non-residence. Similarly . . . , the United States imposes an estate tax on any resident or citizen of the U.S. Although both statutes use the term 'residence,' its usage has been construed to mean 'domicile.'" Robert C. Lawrence III, International Tax and Estate Planning § 1.03(a)(4), at 8-9 (1989).

after-acquired domicile. (1858) A domicile established after the facts relevant to an issue arose. • An after-acquired domicile cannot be used to establish jurisdiction or choice of law.

commercial domicile. (1839) 1. A domicile acquired by a nonresident corporation conducting enough activities to permit taxation of the corporation's property or activities located outside the bounds of the taxing state. 2. A domicile acquired by a person or company freely residing or carrying on business in enemy territory or enemy-occupied territory. — Also termed quasi-domicile.

corporate domicile. (1890) The place considered by law as the center of corporate affairs, where the corporation's functions are discharged; the legal home of a corporation, usu. its state of incorporation or the state in which it maintains its principal place of business. • For purposes of determining whether diversity jurisdiction exists in federal court, a corporation is considered a citizen of both its state of incorporation and the state of its principal place of business. See DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP. [Cases: Corporations ⇨52, 503(1); Federal Courts ⇨296; Taxation ⇨2562, 3486.] domicile of birth. See domicile of origin.

domicile of choice. (1878) 1. A domicile established by physical presence within a state or territory, coupled with the intention to make it home. [Cases: Domicile ⇨4.] 2. The domicile that a person chooses after reaching majority or being emancipated.

domicile of origin. (1831) The domicile of a person at birth, derived from the custodial parent or imposed by law. — Also termed natural domicile; domicile of birth; original domicile. See necessary domicile. [Cases: Domicile ⇨3.]

"Domicil is sometimes divided into domicil of birth, that by operation of law, and that of choice. Domicil of origin in modern times is domicil in the place where his parents at his birth were domiciled." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 71, at 105 n.2 (5th ed. 1878).

"Domicile of origin is the domicile the law assigns to each person at birth, usually the domicile of the father in the case of a legitimate child and of the mother in the case of an illegitimate child. Domicile of origin has particular significance in English law. If one abandons one's domicile of choice without attaining a new one, the domicile of origin 'revives' until a new domicile of choice is attained. In contrast, U.S. jurisdictions generally will not find a domicile abandoned until a new one has been adopted." Robert C. Lawrence III, International Tax and Estate Planning § 1.03(a)(1), at 4 (1989).

domicile of succession. (1874) The domicile that determines the succession of a person's estate.

domicile of trustee. The domicile where a trustee is appointed. [Cases: Trusts ⇨113.]

elected domicile. A contractually agreed domicile between parties for purposes of the contract.

foreign domicile. A domicile established by a citizen or subject of one sovereignty within the territory of another.

matrimonial domicile. A domicile that a husband and wife, as a married couple, have established as their home. — Also termed marital domicile; matrimonial home. [Cases: Divorce ⇨62; Husband and Wife ⇨3(1).]

municipal domicile. A person's residence in a county or municipality, as distinguished from the person's state or national domicile.

national domicile. A domicile considered in terms of a particular nation rather than a locality or subdivision of a nation.

natural domicile. See domicile of origin.

necessary domicile. A domicile legally fixed and independent of choice, as in the domicile of origin. See domicile of origin.

original domicile. See domicile of origin.

quasi-domicile. See commercial domicile.

quasi-national domicile. A person's state of residence, as distinguished from the person's national or local domicile.

domiciliary (dom-ə-sil-ee-er-ee), adj. (18c) Of or relating to domicile <domiciliary jurisdiction>.

domiciliary (dom-ə-sil-ee-er-ee), n. (1845) A person who resides in a particular place with the intention of making it a principal place of abode; one who is domiciled in a particular jurisdiction. Cf. RESIDENT; CITIZEN (1).

domiciliary administration. See ADMINISTRATION.

domiciliary administrator. See ADMINISTRATOR (2).

domiciliary letters testamentary. See LETTERS TESTAMENTARY.

domiciliary parent. See PARENT.

domiciliate (dom-ə-sil-ee-ayt), vb. To establish a domicile; to fix a place of residence.

domiciliation (dom-i-sil-ee-ay-shən), n. The act of establishing a domicile.

domicilium (dom-ə-sil-ee-əm), n. [Law Latin] Roman law. DOMICILE.

domigerium (dom-ə-jeer-ee-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. Power over someone. 2. Danger.

domina (dom-ə-nə), n. [Law Latin] 1. A lady. 2. A peeress. Cf. DAME (1), (2).

dominant estate. See ESTATE (4).

dominant-jurisdiction principle. (1995) The rule that the court in which a case is first filed maintains the suit, to the exclusion of all other courts that would also have jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts ⇨475, 493, 514; Federal Courts ⇨1145.]

dominant property. See dominant estate under ESTATE (4).

dominant tenant. See TENANT.

dominant tenement. See dominant estate under ESTATE (4).

dominate, vb. (17c) 1. To master (someone or something); to control (someone or something). 2. Predominate.

dominating patent. See fencing patent under PATENT (3).

dominatio (dom-ə-nay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. Lordship; rule.

domination. Patents. The effect that an earlier patent (usu. a basic one) has on a later patent (esp. one for improvements on the patented device) because the earlier patent's claims are so broad or generic that the later patent's invention will always read on the earlier patent's claims, resulting in infringement. • Because the patent system is based on exclusion of others from an invention's subject matter, the earlier, basic patent's claims "dominate" the later-invented improvement. If the improvement is patented and worked, it infringes the basic patent. But the basic patent's owner cannot practice the improvement without infringing on the improvement's patent. This stand-off effect encourages improvement and basic-patentees to seek licenses or cross-licenses with each other. See BLOCKING PATENT.

dominical (də-min-ə-kəl), adj. Of or relating to a Sunday; of or relating to the Lord's day.

Dominican divorce. See Mexican divorce under DIVORCE.

dominicide (də-min-ə-sid), n. [fr. Latin dominus "master" + caedo "to kill"] Hist. 1. The crime of killing one's master. 2. A person who kills his or her master.

dominicum (də-min-ə-kəm), n. [Latin "domain"] 1. Hist. Domain; lordship. 2. Hist. Land ownership, esp. that retained by a lord for his own possession, as distinguished from the rights given to a tenant. 3. Eccles. law. A church or other religious building.

dominicum antiquum (də-min-ə-kəm an-ti-kwəm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Ancient domain.

dominion. (14c) 1. Control; possession <dominion over the car>. 2. Sovereignty <dominion over the nation>. 3. FOREIGN DOMINION.

dominium (də-min-ee-əm), n. [fr. Latin dominus "lord"] 1. Roman & civil law. Absolute ownership including the right to possession and use; a right of control over property that the holder might retain or transfer at pleasure. • Dominium was subject to any servitudes, planning restrictions, etc. This term gradually came to also mean merely ownership of property, as distinguished from the right to possession or use.

"Dominium is the Roman term for the rights of an owner against all the world: and the contrast of dominium and obligatio is the nearest approach that can be made, in classical Roman language, to the distinction marked by the modern terms in rem and in personam." Frederick Pollock, A First Book of Jurisprudence 83 (1896).

"The one word dominium has to assume so many shades of meaning. The tenant qui tenet terram in dominio, is dominus rei and has dominium rei; but then he has above him one who is his dominus, and for the rights of this lord over him and over his land there is no other name than dominium." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 4 (2d ed. 1899).

dominium directum (də-min-ee-əm di-rek-təm), n. [Law Latin] 1. Civil law. Legal, not equitable, ownership. 2. Feudal law. The right of the superior of land over a tenant.

dominium directum et utile (də-min-ee-əm di-rek-təm et yoo-tə-lee), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Complete ownership of property, including both title and exclusive use.

dominium eminens (də-min-ee-əm em-ə-nenz), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Eminent domain. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

dominium ex jure quiritium (də-min-ee-əm eks joor-ee kwī-rish-ee-əm). Roman law. Ownership exercised by Roman citizens in the most complete manner (pleno jure), the property being domestic (not foreign) and having been acquired according to all the forms of law. — Also termed dominium quiritarium; dominium legitimum.

dominium legitimum (lə-jit-i-məm). See dominium ex jure quiritium.

dominium plenum (də-min-ee-əm plee-nəm), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Full ownership combining dominium directum and dominium utile. — Also termed plenum dominium.

dominium quiritarium (kwī-rə-tair-ee-əm). See dominium ex jure quiritium.

dominium utile (də-min-ee-əm yoo-tə-lee), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Equitable ownership; a beneficial right to use property; the right of a tenant to use the soil and its profits.

"The special characteristic of Feudal land was that ownership in it was split into two kinds, the dominium directum of the superior (lord) and the dominium utile of the vassal. The feudists correctly insisted that this was not a form of joint ownership, not yet of ownership burdened with an easement or a 'usufruct,' but that two kinds of ownership were present, and that each of these persons, the lord and the vassal, was properly called 'owner' or dominus. The lord's dominium directum gave him a reversion in the case of forfeiture of failure of issue and the enjoyment of whatever the naturalia and accidentalia were. The vassal's dominium utile gave him the immediate enjoyment of the land itself." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 148 (1936).

nudum dominium (də-min-ee-əm n[y]oo-dəm). [Latin "bare ownership"] Roman Law. Ownership divorced from present possession or use.

plenum dominium. See dominium plenum.

2. Hist. Lordship; sovereignty.

"The Latin word for ownership, dominium, is particularly confusing, since in medieval times it is also the word for lordship." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 255 (3d ed. 1990).

domino volente (dom-ə-noh və-len-tee). [Law Latin "the owner being willing"] With the owner's consent.

dominus (dom-ə-nəs), n. [Latin "lord"] 1. Roman law. An owner of a thing or inheritance. 2. Roman law. The title of the emperor in the later empire. 3. Hist. A lord; a feudal superior, as in dominus rex ("the lord of the king"), dominus capitalis ("a chief lord"), dominus medius ("an intermediate lord"), and dominus ligius ("a liege lord"). 4. Hist. Eccles. law. Lord; sir. • This is a title of distinction usu. given to a knight, a clergyman, a lord of a manor, or another gentleman of quality. 5. Civil law. Someone who possesses something by right. Pl. domini.

dominus directus (dom-ə-nəs di-rek-təs). [Law Latin] Hist. The immediate feudal superior.

dominus litis (dom-ə-nəs li-tis), n. [Latin] 1. Civil law. The party who makes the decisions in a lawsuit, usu. as distinguished from the attorney. 2. Maritime law. A third person who represents an absent party in a case. — Also termed litis dominium.

dominus navis (dom-ə-nəs nay-vis), n. [Latin] Civil law. The absolute owner of a shipping vessel.

dominus omnium bonorum (dom-ə-nəs ahm-nee-əm bə-nor-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. Proprietor of all movable goods. • The phrase formerly described a husband who owned goods in common with his wife.

domitae naturae (dom-ə-tee nə-tyoor-ee). [Latin] Hist. Of a tame nature; not wild. • This term usu. refers to long-domesticated animals, such as sheep or cattle, in which a person has absolute property rights. But it can also refer to naturally wild animals that have been tamed.

dommage survenu (daw-mazh suur-və-noo). [French] Damage sustained. • This is from article 17 of the Warsaw Convention providing for compensatory damages, rather than awards for loss of society or punitive damages, for bodily injury that a passenger suffers while on board an aircraft, or while boarding or disembarking. [Cases: Carriers ☞ 307, 319.]

domo reparanda (doh-moh rep-ə-ran-də), n. [Latin "to repair a house"] Hist. A writ available to a person to force a neighbor who owns a decrepit house to repair it because the person is worried that the neighbor's house will fall and cause injury.

Dom. Proc. abbr. DOMUS PROCERUM.

domus (doh-məs), n. [Latin] A house; an abode.

domus conversorum (doh-məs kon-vər-sor-əm), n. [Law Latin "house of the converts"] Hist. An institution, established by Henry III for converted Jews, that continued until Edward III expelled Jews from the kingdom and converted the institution to a chancery record office.

domus Dei (doh-məs dee-i), n. [Law Latin] House of God. • This term was applied to various hospitals and religious houses, such as the Hospital of St. Julian in Southampton.

Domus Procerum (doh-məs pros-ə-rəm), n. [Latin "house of nobles"] The House of Lords. — Abbr. Dom. Proc.; D.P.

donatarius (doh-nə-tair-ee-əs), n. [Latin] A donee; a gift recipient.

donate, vb. (18c) To give (property or money) without receiving consideration for the transfer. — donation, n. — donative (doh-nə-tiv), adj.

donated stock. See STOCK.

donated surplus. See SURPLUS.

donatio (doh-nay-shee-oh). [Latin] A gift.

donatio causa mortis (doh-nay-shee-oh kaw-zə mor-tis), n. See gift causa mortis under GIFT. Pl. donationes causa mortis.

donatio inofficiosa (doh-nay-shee-oh in-ə-fish-ee-oh-sə). [Latin "inofficious gift"] A gift so large that it diminishes an heir's birthright portion of the donor's property.

donatio inter virum et uxorem (doh-nay-shee-oh in-tər vi-rəm et ək-sor-əm). [Latin] Roman law. Donation between husband and wife. • With a few exceptions (such as suitable anniversary gifts), a donation between spouses was invalid, but might be confirmed if the donor died without revoking it.

donatio inter vivos (doh-nay-shee-oh in-tər vi-vohs). See inter vivos gift under GIFT.

donatio mortis causa, n. See gift causa mortis under GIFT. Pl. donationes mortis causa.

donation. 1. A gift, esp. to a charity. [Cases: Gifts ☞ 1.] donation purely gratuitous. Louisiana law. An unconditional inter vivos gift. Cf. onerous donation. [Cases: Gifts ↪1.]

onerous donation. Civil law. An inter vivos gift burdened with a condition imposed by the donor. • There is no gift unless the gift's value is more than twice as much as the condition's value to the donor. La. Civ. Code arts. 1524, 1526. Cf. donation purely gratuitous. [Cases: Gifts ↪34.]

remunerative donation. Civil law. An inter vivos gift made to compensate a person for services rendered. • It is not a gift unless the value of the property given is more than twice as much as the value of the services. La. Civ. Code arts. 1525, 1526. [Cases: Gifts ↪1.]

2. Eccles. law. A method of acquiring a benefice by deed of gift alone, without presentation, institution, or induction.

doom, n. Hist. 1. A statute or law. 2. A judgment; esp., a sentence in a criminal matter. 3. Justice; fairness. 4. A trial; the process of adjudicating.

"The word 'doom' is, perhaps, best translated as 'judgment.' It survived in occasional use until the fourteenth century. Wyclif's translation of the Bible, rendering the verse, 'For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged,' as 'For in what dome ye demen, ye schuln be demed.' The distinction which we make to-day between the legislator, who makes the law, and the judge, who interprets, declares and applies it, was not known to our Anglo-Saxon ancestors. The dooms were judgments in the sense that they were declarations of the law of the people." W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 1 (2d ed. 1949).

doombook, n. [fr. Saxon dombec] Hist. A code, compiled under Alfred, containing maxims of common law, judicial forms, and criminal penalties. • The code existed until the reign of Edward IV, when it was lost. — Also termed domebook (doom buuk); domboc; liber judicialis of Alfred.

dotage (doh-tij). 1. Senility; feebleness of a person's mind in old age. 2. Foolish affection; excessive fondness.

dotal (doht-əl), adj. Of or relating to dowry. See DOWRY.

dotalitium (doh-tə-lish-ee-əm), n. [Law Latin] Hist. Dower.

"[S]ome have ascribed the introduction of dower to the Normans, as a branch of their local tenures; though we cannot expect any feudal reason for its invention, since it was not a part of the pure, primitive, simple law of feuds, but was first of all introduced into that system (wherein it was called . . . dotalitium) by the emperor Frederick the second; who was contemporary with our king Henry III. It is possible therefore that it might be with us the relic of a Danish custom: since, according to the historians of that country, dower was introduced into Denmark by Swein, the father of our Canute the great, out of gratitude to the Danish ladies, who sold all their jewels to ransom him when taken prisoner by the Vandals." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 129-30 (1766).

dotal property. See PROPERTY.

dotation (doh-tay-shən), n. 1. The act of giving a dowry. 2. An endowment, esp. of funds for a charitable institution such as a hospital.

double jeopardy. (1847) The fact of being prosecuted or sentenced twice for substantially the same offense. • Double jeopardy is prohibited by the Fifth Amendment. In 2005, the United Kingdom abolished the rule for certain serious offenses, such as murder and hijacking. A court may quash an acquittal and order a retrial if new and compelling evidence of the defendant’s guilt is discovered, and the evidence was not available before the acquittal. Only one retrial is allowed. Cf. FORMER JEOPARDY. [Cases: Double Jeopardy ↷132.1.]

Double Jeopardy Clause. (1928) The Fifth Amendment provision stating, “nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb.” • The clause, which was ratified in 1791, does not prevent postacquittal appeals by the government if those appeals could not result in the defendant’s being subjected to a second trial for substantially the same

double value. Twice the value of something; specif., a penalty payable by a tenant to a landlord of twice the yearly value of lands held by the tenant, who refused to leave when the landlord provided written notice of intent to possess the property. • The penalty was provided under the Landlord and Tenant Act (1730). St. 4 Geo. 2. ch. 28, s. 1. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↻216.]

double voucher. In a common-recovery suit, a voucher first by the fictitious tenant to the real tenant, and then by the real tenant to the common vouchee. • The use of a fictitious tenant was necessary because if the recovery had been obtained directly against the real tenant, it would be effective only to the limited extent that the real tenant actually possessed an interest in the estate. But if recovery was obtained against another party, it would be effective against any latent interest that the real tenant might assert in the estate. See COMMON RECOVERY.

"The recovery, here described, is with a single voucher only; but sometimes it is with double . . . or farther voucher, as the exigency of the case may require. And indeed it is now usual always to have a recovery with double voucher at the least; by first conveying an estate of freehold to any indifferent person, against whom the praecipe is brought, and then he vouches the tenant in tail, who vouches over the common vouchee. For, if a recovery be had immediately against tenant in tail, it bars only such estate in the premises of which he is then actually seised; whereas if the recovery be had against another person, and the tenant in tail be vouched, it bars every latent right and interest which he may have in the lands recovered." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 359 (1766).

dowager (dow-ə-jər). A widow holding property or title — esp. a life estate in real property — received from her deceased husband.

dowager-queen. The widow of the king of England. • If she is also the mother of the reigning monarch, she may also be known as the queen mother. — Also written dowager queen. — Also termed queen dowager; queen mother.

"A queen dowager is the widow of the king, and as such enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as queen consort. But it is not high treason to conspire her death; or to violate her chastity . . . because the succession to the crown is not thereby endangered. Yet still, . . . no man can marry a queen dowager without special licence from the king, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. . . . A queen dowager, when married again to a subject, doth not lose her regal dignity, as peeresses dowager do their peerage when they marry commoners." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 217 (1765).

dower (dow-ər). (14c) At common law, a wife's right, upon her husband's death, to a life estate in one-third of the land that he owned in fee. • With few exceptions, the wife could not be deprived of dower by any transfer made by her husband during his lifetime. Although most states have abolished dower, many states retaining the concept have expanded the wife's share to a life estate in all the land that her husband owned in fee. — Also termed dowment; maritagium. Cf. CURTESY. [Cases: Dower and Curtesy ↻1-118.]

consummate dower (kən-səm-it or kahn-sə-mit). A widow's interest in her deceased husband's estate until that interest is legally assigned to her. — Also termed dower consummate. [Cases: Dower and Curtesy ↻54.]

dower ad ostium ecclesiae (ad əhs-tee-əm e-klee-z[h] ee-ee), n. [Law Latin "dower at the church door"] Hist. An endowment of dower made by a man to his wife at the church door or porch, usu. as part of the marriage ceremony.

"DOWER AD OSTIUM ECCLESIAE . . . This appears to have been the original English dower . . . It was formerly the most usual species of dower, and, though latterly fallen into disuse, was not abolished until the statute of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105, s. 13 . . . The wife might be endowed of personalty or goods as well as of lands, and a trace of this ancient kind of dower is still distinctly preserved in the marriage ritual of the church of England, in the expression 'with all my worldly goods I thee endow.'" 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 520 (2d ed. 1867).

dower by custom. Hist. Dower that is determined by custom rather than the general law. — Also termed dower by particular custom.

"Dower by . . . custom; as that the wife shall have half the husband's lands, or in some places the whole, and in some only a quarter." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 132 (1766).

drama, n. 1. A presentation of a story portrayed by words and actions or actions alone; a play. Cf. DRAMATIC COMPOSITION.

"The term [drama] is applied to compositions which imitate action by representing the personages introduced in them as real and as employed in the action itself. The varieties of the drama differ more or less widely, both as to the objects imitated and as to the means used in the imitation. But they all agree as to the method or manner which is essential to the dramatic art, viz., imitation in the way of action." 7 Encyclopaedia Britannica 338 (9th ed. 1907).

2. An event or series of events having conflicting and exciting elements that capture people's attention.

drama-pricing. A seller's tactic of dramatically dropping the price of something, esp. real estate, to attract a buyer. — Also termed trauma-pricing.

dramatic composition. Copyright. A literary work setting forth a story, incident, or scene intended to be performed by actors, often with a musical accompaniment. Cf. DRAMA (1). [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻7.]

dramatic work. See WORK (2).

dram shop. Archaic. A place where alcoholic beverages are sold; a bar or saloon. — Also spelled dram-shop; dramshop. — Also termed grog-shop; drinking shop.

dram-shop act. (1859) A statute allowing a plaintiff to recover damages from a commercial seller of alcoholic beverages for the plaintiff's injuries caused by a customer's intoxication. — Also termed civil-liability act; civil-damage law. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors ↻282–324.]

"Largely at the behest of the temperance movement, statutes (called 'dram shop acts') were enacted in many states which imposed some form of civil liability on those engaged in the business of selling such beverages in favor of third persons injured thereby At one time, almost half the states had such laws; today, that number seems to be declining. . . . A growing minority of states have overthrown the common law rule and have created a common law dram shop action. In most of these jurisdictions, liability is predicated on statutes which regulate the liquor business and prohibit certain sales by liquor licensees (to minors, intoxicated persons, etc.) thus, where the sale is unlawful, it is negligence per se" Edward J. Kionka, Torts in a Nutshell 293–94 (2d ed. 1992).

dram-shop liability. (1995) Civil liability of a commercial seller of alcoholic beverages for personal injury caused by an intoxicated customer. • Claims based on a similar type of liability have been brought against private citizens for personal injury caused by an intoxicated social guest. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors ⇨ 282-324.]

draw, vb. (13c) 1. To create and sign (a draft) <draw a check to purchase goods>. 2. To prepare or frame (a legal document) <draw up a will>. 3. To take out (money) from a bank, treasury, or depository <she drew $6,000 from her account>. 4. To select (a jury) <the lawyers began voir dire and had soon drawn a jury>.

drawback. A government allowance or refund on import duties when the importer reexports imported products rather than selling them domestically. 19 USCA § 1313. [Cases: Customs Duties ⇨ 100.]

drawee (draw-ee). (18c) The person or entity that a draft is directed to and that is requested to pay the amount stated on it. • The drawee is usu. a bank that is directed to pay a sum of money on an instrument. — Also termed payor. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⇨ 137; Bills and Notes ⇨ 24.]

drawee bank. See payor bank under BANK.

drawer. (17c) One who directs a person or entity, usu. a bank, to pay a sum of money stated in an instrument — for example, a person who writes a check; the maker of a note or draft. See MAKER. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⇨ 137; Bills and Notes ⇨ 23.]

drawing. 1. Patents. A specially prepared figure included with a patent application to explain and describe the invention. • A drawing is required when necessary to understand the invention. 35 USCA § 113. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 100.] 2. Trademarks. A graphic or textual depiction of a trademark, filed as part of an application for the mark to be placed on the primary register. • The drawing serves as the element that is published in the Official Gazette. It must include the applicant's name and address, the type of goods or services it will identify, and the date of first use or a statement of intent to use it in commerce. [Cases: Trademarks ⇨ 1282.]

formal drawing. A drawing that complies with the formatting requirements of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, as set forth in 37 CFR 1.84, and is stamped "Approved" by the PTO Drafter. Cf. informal drawing. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 100.]

front-page drawing. A drawing submitted with the patent application and selected by the examiner as the application's representative drawing. • The drawing is reproduced on the front page of the published application or patent. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 100.]

informal drawing. A drawing that does not comply with the formatting requirements of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. • A drawing may be submitted as informal by the patent applicant, or declared informal by the PTO Drafter. Cf. formal drawing.

original drawing. A drawing submitted with the original application.

special-form drawing. A drawing of a trademark that contains some graphical element, such as a logo, a picture, or a special type style. • A stylized or special-form drawing must be submitted in black-and-white, with a description of the colors to be used on the final mark. — Also termed stylized drawing.

substitute drawing. A drawing submitted after the original application has been filed. • A substitute drawing is often a formal drawing filed to replace an informal drawing. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 100.]

typed drawing. A drawing of a trademark that is purely textual, with no graphical component. • A typed drawing consists solely of the words, letters, and numbers that make up the mark, typed in all-caps. — Also termed typed-form drawing.

drawing account. See ACCOUNT.

drawing lots. (13c) An act of selection or decision-making based on pure chance, with the result depending on the particular lot drawn. • Jurors are usu. instructed by the court not to base their verdict on drawing lots or similar methods of chance.

drawlatch. Hist. A thief; a robber who waits until homes are empty, then draws the homes' door latches to steal what is inside.

drayage. A charge for transporting property.

DRE. abbr. DRUG-RECOGNITION EXPERT.

dread-disease insurance. See INSURANCE.

dreit dreit. See DROIT-DROIT.

D reorganization. See REORGANIZATION (2).

drift of the forest. Hist. A periodic examination of forest cattle by officers who drive them to an enclosed place to determine their ownership or common status.

"Drift of the forest is nothing else but an exact view or examination taken once, twice, or oftener in a year as occasion shall require, what beasts there are in the forest, to the end that the common in the forest be not overcharged, that the beasts of foreigners that have no common there be not permitted, and that beasts not commonable may be put out." Termes de la Ley 185-87 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

drift-stuff. Any material floating at random in water without a discoverable source. • Drift-stuff is usu. the property of the riparian owner.

drilling contract. Oil & gas. A well-drilling agreement between a drilling contractor, who owns drilling rigs and associated equipment, and the owner or lessor of the mineral rights. • The contract spells out the rights and duties of the parties. In general, the more control the interest-owner retains over the contractor, the more liability the owner is exposed to for damages the drilling causes. See DAYWORK DRILLING CONTRACT; FOOTAGE DRILLING CONTRACT. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨ 109.]

turnkey drilling contract. Oil & gas. A drilling contract under which the drilling contractor promises to perform specified functions for an agreed price. • The lease operator has little or no discretion to control the drilling contractor, and so assumes little or no liability for damages the drilling may cause. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨ 109, 120.]

drilling-delay rental clause. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease giving the lessee the right to maintain the lease from period to period during the primary term by paying delay rentals instead of starting drilling operations. • Lessees use drilling-delay rental clauses because courts have said that they obviate any implied covenant to drill a test well on the premises. They are accepted by lessors because they provide for periodic income from the lease. See “or” lease, “unless” lease under LEASE. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨ 78.1(3).]

“The purpose of the lease drilling-delay rental clause is to ensure that the lessee has no obligation to drill during the primary term by negating any implied obligation to test the premises. Before drilling-delay rental clauses became common in oil and gas leases, many courts held that lessees had an implied duty to drill a test well on the leased premises within a reasonable time after grant of the lease. The rationale for the implied covenant was that the major consideration for the grant of the lease by the lessor was the expectation that the property would be tested within a reasonable time. The courts’ determination of what was a reasonable time ranged from a few months to several years, depending upon the circumstances. Lessees found that they could not rely upon a long stated term alone to preserve their rights.” John S. Lowe, Oil and Gas Law in a Nutshell 195-96 (3d ed. 1995).

drinking age. See AGE.

drinking shop. See DRAM SHOP.

DRIP. abbr. DIVIDEND-REINVESTMENT PLAN.

drip rights. A servitude allowing water dripping off a person’s roof to fall on a neighbor’s land. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ⇨ 121.]

driver. 1. A person who steers and propels a vehicle. 2. A person who herds animals; a drover.

driver’s license. The state-issued certificate authorizing a person to operate a motor vehicle. • It is also often used as a form of identification. [Cases: Automobiles ⇨ 136.]

driving. n. The act of directing the course of something, such as an automobile or a herd of animals.

driving under the influence. (1924) The offense of operating a motor vehicle in a physically or mentally impaired condition, esp. after consuming alcohol or drugs. • Generally, this is a lesser offense than driving while intoxicated. But in a few jurisdictions the two are synonymous. — Abbr. DUI. — Also termed driving while ability-impaired (DWA^I); driving under the influence of liquor (DUIL); driving while intoxicated (DWD^I); operating under the influence (OUI); operating while intoxicated (OWI); operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated (OMVI); operating a motor vehicle under the influence (OMVUI). Cf. DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED. [Cases: Automobiles ⇨ 332.]

driving while ability-impaired. See DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

driving while intoxicated. (1913) 1. The offense of operating a motor vehicle in a physically or mentally impaired condition after consuming enough alcohol to raise one’s blood alcohol content above the statutory limit (.08% in many states), or after consuming drugs.

• Penalties vary widely; for example, the maximum penalty in Missouri and Louisiana is a $500 fine and six months in jail, while the penalties in New York range from $500 to $5,000 in fines and up to four years in jail.

2. DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE. — Abbr. DWI. — Also termed drunk driving. Cf. DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE. [Cases: Automobiles ⇨ 332.]

DRL. abbr. BUREAU OF DEMOCRACY, HUMAN RIGHTS, AND LABOR.

DRM. See direct-reduction mortgage under MORTGAGE.

drofland (drøhf-lænd). Hist. A socage tenure that required the holder to drive the landlord’s cattle to fairs and markets.

droit (drwah or droyt). [French “right”] 1. A legal right or claim. 2. The whole body of law.

droit-close (droyt klohz), n. [Law French] Hist. A writ against a lord on behalf of a tenant in ancient demesne holding land by charter in fee simple, in fee-tail, for life, or in dower.

droit common (droyt kom-ən), n. [Law French] The common law. — Also termed droit coutumier. See COMMON LAW (2).

droit coutumier. See DROIT COMMON.

droit d’accession (drwah dak-ses-syawn), n. [French “right of accession”] Civil law. The right of the owner of a thing to whatever is produced by it or is united with it, either naturally or artificially. La. Civ. Code arts. 483, 490, 507. • The equivalent of the Roman specificatio, the right includes, for example, the right of a landowner to new land deposited on a riverbank and the right of an orchard owner to the fruit of the trees in the orchard. See ACCESSION (4).

“DROIT D’ACCESSION . . . The civil law rule is that if the thing can be reduced to the former matter it belongs to the owner of the matter, e.g. a statue made of gold; but if it cannot so be reduced it belongs to the person who made it, e.g. a statue made of marble.” 1 John Bouvier, Bouvier’s Law Dictionary 941 (8th ed. 1914).

droit d’accroissement (drwah da-krwas-mawn), n. [French] French law. A right of survivorship by which an heir’s interest is combined with the interest of a coheir who either has refused or is unable to accept the interest.

droit d’aubaine (drwah doh-ben), n. [Law French “right of alienage”] Hist. With certain exceptions, a sovereign’s right to a deceased alien’s property, regardless of whether the alien had a will. • This right was primarily exercised in France where it was revived in some form by Napoleon after its initial abolishment in 1790. It was ultimately abolished in 1819. — Also spelled droit d’aubaigne; droit d’aubenage. — Also termed jus albanagii; jus albinatus.

"Under the French rule of law, known as the droit d'aubaine . . . the whole property of an alien dying in France without leaving children born in that country escheated to the crown. The royal right was not universally exacted, and at a very early period special exceptions were introduced in favour of certain classes. Thus Louis XI exempted merchants of Brabant, Flanders, Holland, and Zealand from the operation of the law, and a similar privilege was extended by Henri II to merchants of the Hanse towns, and from Scotland." 1 R.H. Inglis Palgrave, Palgrave's Dictionary of Political Economy 68 (Henry Higgs ed., 2d ed. 1925).

"In France by the fourteenth century it was accepted that a stranger might acquire and possess but not inherit or transmit by will or on intestacy. In 1386 the French king assumed the seigniorial droit d'aubaine or right to inherit. In treaties in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the right was frequently renounced. Louis XVI in 1787 abolished the right as against subjects of Great Britain without reciprocity. The constituent Assembly abolished the right in 1790 and it was commonly abolished elsewhere in the early nineteenth century." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 378 (1980).

droit d'auteur (drwah doh-tər), n. [French "author's right"] The copyright system used in France and other civil-law nations and differing from common-law copyright by giving more protection to an author's moral right. See AUTHOR'S RIGHT.

droit de bris (drwah də bree), n. [Law French "right of a wreck"] Hist. A right claimed by lords of the coasts of France to fragments of shipwrecks, including persons or property that had washed ashore. • The right was exercised primarily in Bretagne but was abrogated by Henry III as duke of Normandy, Aquitaine, and Guienne, in a charter granted in A.D. 1226. — Also termed droit de bris sur le naufrages. Cf. DROIT DE NAUFRAGE.

droit de détraction (drwah də day-trak-syawn), n. [French "the right of withdrawal"] Int'l law. A tax on property acquired by succession or by will and then removed to another state or country.

droit de garde (drwah də gahrd), n. [French "right of ward"] Hist. French law. A king's right to wardship of a noble vassal who has not reached majority.

droit de gîte (drwah də zheet), n. [French "right of lodging"] Hist. French law. A duty of a commoner holding land in the royal domain to provide lodging and food to a royal party traveling on royal business.

droit de greffe (drwah də gref), n. [French "a right concerning the clerk's office"] Hist. French law. The Crown's privilege to sell offices connected with the custody of judicial records or official acts.

droit de maîtrise (drwah də may-treez), n. [French "a right of mastership"] Hist. French law. A required payment to the Crown by an apprentice who has become a master worker.

droit de naufrage (drwah də noh-frazh), n. [French] Hist. French law. The right of a sovereign or a lord owning a seashore to seize the wreckage of a shipwreck and kill the crew or sell them as slaves. Cf. DROIT DE BRIS.

droit de prise (drwah də preez), n. [French "a right of prize"] Hist. French law. A commoner's duty to supply articles on credit to the royal household for domestic consumption.

droit de quint (drwah də kant), n. [French "the right of a fifth"] Hist. French law. A required payment made by a noble vassal to the king each time ownership of the vassal's fief changed.

droit de suite (drwah də sweet), n. [French "right to follow"] 1. A creditor's right to recover a debtor's property after it passes to a third party. 2. Copyright. An artist's resale royalty; the right of a work's creator to benefit from appreciation in the value of the work by receiving a portion of the profit from its later resales. • A droit de suite is recognized in some European nations.

"The droit de suite (literally translated as the right to follow the work) enables artists to claim a portion of the price for which a work is resold. The idea is that an artist may sell a painting for a low price at a time when they are unknown and have little bargaining power. In due course, as the artist's reputation develops, the painting may be resold for continually increasing sums. . . . The right is seen to be justified not only because it encourages creation, but also because the artist is conceived (through the authorial link) as being responsible for the increase in value (economic success of their works)." Lionel Bently & Brad Sherman, Intellectual Property Law 281 (2001).

droit d'exécution (drwah dek-say-kyoo-syawn), n. [French "right of execution"] French law. 1. A stockbroker's right to sell the stock bought for a client who later refuses it. 2. A stockbroker's right to sell deposited securities to secure the broker against a loss in buying for a client.

droit-droit (drwah-drwah), n. [Law French "double right"] Hist. The unification of the right of possession with the right of property. — Also termed jus duplicatum; dreit dreit.

"A complete title to lands, tenements, and hereditaments. For it is an ancient maxim of the law, that no title is completely good, unless the right of possession be joined with the right of property; which right is then denominated a double right, jus duplicatum, or droit droit. And when to this double right the actual possession is also united . . . then, and then only, is the title completely legal." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 199 (1766).

droit du seigneur (drwah də sen-yuur), [French "right of the lord"] Hist. 1. A supposed customary right of a feudal lord to have sexual intercourse with a tenant's bride on her wedding night. 2. A supposed custom requiring sexual abstinence by a couple on their wedding night. — Also spelled droit de seigneur. — Also termed jus primae noctis.

droit écrit (drwaht ay-kree), n. [French "the written law"] French law. The civil law; the corpus juris civilis.

droit international (drwaht an-tair-nah-syoh-nahl), n. [French] International law.

droit maritime (drwah ma-ree-teem), [French] Maritime law.

droit moral (drwah maw-ral), [French] The doctrine of moral right, which entitles artists to prevent others from altering their works. • The basic rights protected by this doctrine are (1) the right to create, (2) the right to disclose or publish, (3) the right to withdraw from publication, (4) the right to be identified with the work, and (5) the right to ensure the integrity of the work, including the right to object to any mutilation or distortion of the work. These rights are sometimes called moral rights. See MORAL RIGHT. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↷6.]

droit naturel (drwah na-tuu-rel), n. [French] Natural law.

droits civils (drwah see-veel), n. [French] French law. Private rights not connected to a person's civil status.

- Foreigners had certain rights that could be enforced when there was reciprocity with the foreigner's home country.

droits of admiralty (droyts), n. The Lord High Admiral's rights in connection with the sea, such as the right to recover proceeds from shipwrecks, enemy goods confiscated at the beginning of hostilities, jetsam, flotsam, treasure, deodand, fines, forfeitures, sturgeons, whales, and other large fishes. • The droit proceeds are paid to the Exchequer's office for the public's use. See PRIZE (2).

"The crown had originally certain rights to property found upon the sea, or stranded upon the shore. The chief kinds of property to which the crown was thus entitled were, great fish (such as whales or porpoises), deodands, wreck of the sea, flotsam, jetsam, and lagan, ships or goods of the enemy found in English ports or captured by uncommissioned vessels, and goods taken or retaken from pirates After the rise of the court of Admiralty the Lord High Admiral became entitled to these droits by royal grant The right to droits carried with it a certain jurisdiction. Inquisitions were held into these droits at the ports, or the Vice-Admirals or droit gatherers reported them to the Admiral. The large terms of the Admiral's Patents incited them, or their grantees, to frequent litigation with private persons or other grantees of the crown The Admiralty droits . . . are now transferred to the consolidated fund." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 559-61 (7th ed. 1956).

droitural (droy-chə-rəl), adj. [fr. Old French droiture "right"] Of or relating to an interest in property, as distinguished from actual possession.

droit voisins (drwah vwah-san), n. [French] NEIGHBORING RIGHT.

dromones (drə-moh-neeZ), n. pl. Hist. 1. Large ships. 2. War vessels of recognized navies, usu. prepared for hostilities. — Also termed dromos; dromunda.

Droop quota. In some proportional-representation elections, the minimum number of votes needed to win a legislative seat. • The quota is determined by a formula based on the reciprocal of the number of representatives plus one — or $1/(n + 1)$, where "n" is the number of representatives being elected. The term is named for the developer of the election format, Henry Richmond Droop (1831-1884).

drop. English law. A rule nisi that is not adopted because the members of a court are equally divided on the issue.

- The rule is dropped rather than discharged or made absolute.

drop-dead date. The date by which performance is required as a condition. Cf. TIME-IS-OF-THE-ESSENCE CLAUSE.

drop-dead provision. Contracts. A clause in an agreement or order allowing a party to take action without notice if the other party fails to perform certain acts.

drop-down clause. Insurance. An insurance-policy provision requiring an excess insurer to provide coverage to the insured even though the underlying coverage has not been exhausted, usu. because the underlying insurers are insolvent. [Cases: Insurance ↷2396.]

drop letter. A letter addressed to someone in the delivery area of the post office where the letter was posted. [Cases: Postal Service ↷23.]

drop-shipment delivery. A manufacturer's shipment of goods directly to the consumer rather than initially to a wholesaler. • If the wholesaler takes the order, it may receive part of the profit from the sale.

drop shipper. A wholesaler who arranges to have goods shipped directly from a manufacturer to a consumer. See DROP-SHIPMENT DELIVERY.

dropsy testimony. See TESTIMONY.

drug, n. (14c) 1. A substance intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, treatment, or prevention of disease. 2. A natural or synthetic substance that alters one's perception or consciousness. See CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE. [Cases: Controlled Substances ↷9.]

addictive drug. A drug (such as heroin or nicotine) that, usu. after repeated consumption, causes physical dependence and results in well-defined physiological symptoms upon withdrawal. [Cases: Controlled Substances ↷9.]

adulterated drug. A drug that does not have the strength, quality, or purity represented or expected.

copycat drug. See generic drug.

dangerous drug. A drug that has potential for abuse or injury, usu. requiring a label warning that it cannot be dispensed without a prescription. [Cases: Controlled Substances ↷9.]

designer drug. A chemical substance that is created to duplicate the pharmacological effects of controlled substances, often by using the same chemicals contained in controlled substances, but manipulating their formulas. [Cases: Controlled Substances ↷9, 43.]

ethical drug. A drug that can be dispensed only with a doctor's prescription. Cf. proprietary drug.

generic drug. A drug containing the active ingredients but not necessarily the same excipient substances (such as binders or capsules) as the pioneer drug marketed under a brand name. — Also termed copycat drug. See pioneer drug. [Cases: Health ⇨319.]

new drug. A drug that experts have not recognized as safe and effective for use under the conditions prescribed. 21 USCA § 321(p)(1). • The Food and Drug Administration must approve all new drugs before they can be marketed. [Cases: Health ⇨317.]

orphan drug. A prescription drug developed to treat diseases affecting fewer than 200,000 people in the United States (such as a rare cancer) or whose developmental costs are not reasonably expected to be recovered from the drug's sales. 21 USCA § 360bb. [Cases: Health ⇨319.]

pioneer drug. The first drug that contains a particular active ingredient that is approved by the FDA for a specified use.

precompounded prescription drug. A drug that is distributed from the manufacturer, to the pharmacist, and then to the consumer without a change in form.

proprietary drug. A drug that is prepared and packaged for the public's immediate use. • Proprietary drugs may be sold over the counter. Cf. ethical drug.

drug abuse. The detrimental state produced by the repeated consumption of a narcotic or other potentially dangerous drug, other than as prescribed by a doctor to treat an illness or other medical condition. [Cases: Chemical Dependents ⇨1; Controlled Substances ⇨38.]

drug addict. See ADDICT.

drug-assistance program. 1. A governmental program to ensure access to necessary prescription medicines for needy people who are uninsured or underinsured or who otherwise lack health coverage. 2. Rehabilitative counseling, and monitoring, usu. in a nonresidential setting, for detecting and treating users of illegal drugs.

drug court. See COURT.

drug dependence. The psychological or physiological need for a drug. [Cases: Chemical Dependents ⇨1.]

drug-free zone. (1986) An area in which the possession or distribution of a controlled substance results in an increased penalty. • Drug-free zones are often established, for example, around public schools. [Cases: Controlled Substances ⇨100.]

druggist. A person who mixes, compounds, dispenses, or otherwise deals in drugs and medicines, usu. either as a proprietor of a drugstore or as a pharmacist.

drug kingpin. An organizer, leader, manager, financier, or supervisor of a drug conspiracy; a person who has great authority in running an illegal drug operation.

drug paraphernalia. (1920) Criminal law. Any type of equipment, product, or material that is primarily designed or intended for the unlawful manufacture, processing, or hiding of a controlled substance, or for the introduction of a controlled substance into the human body, when possession of the substance is unlawful. 21 USCA § 863(d). [Cases: Controlled Substances ⇨42, 89.]

drug trafficking. See TRAFFICKING.

dry check. See bad check under CHECK.

dry exchange. Something that pretends to pass on both sides of a transaction, but passes on only one side.

"Dry exchange . . . seems to be a subtil term invented to disguise usury, in which something is pretended to pass on both sides, whereas in truth nothing passes on the one side." Termes de la Ley 185 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

"DRY EXCHANGE A euphemism applied to the 'coverture' or 'colouring' of the stringent statutes passed during the Tudor period against usury Usury, which was condemned by religion and law alike during the middle ages, was from the middle of the 16th century no longer to be confounded with the legitimate employment of capital; but the sentiment which inspired the above enactments was that of governing classes associated with the landed interest." 1 R.H. Inglis Palgrave, Palgrave's Dictionary of Political Economy 643 (Henry Higgs ed., 2d ed. 1925).

dry hole. Oil & gas. An oil or gas well that is incapable of producing enough minerals to justify the cost of completing it and putting it into production.

dry-hole agreement. Oil & gas. A support agreement in which the contributing party agrees to make a cash contribution to the drilling party in exchange for geological or drilling information if the well drilled is unproductive. See SUPPORT AGREEMENT. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨ 109.]

dry-hole clause. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease specifying what a lessee must do to maintain the lease for the remainder of the primary term after drilling an unproductive well. • A dry-hole clause is intended to make clear that the lessee may maintain the lease by paying delay rentals for the remainder of the primary term. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨ 78.1(3).]

dry mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

dry presumption. See PRESUMPTION.

dry receivership. See RECEIVERSHIP.

dry rent. See RENT (1).

dry trust. See TRUST.

DS. abbr. BUREAU OF DIPLOMATIC SECURITY.

d.s.b. abbr. DEBET SINE BREVE.

DSCA. abbr. DEFENSE SECURITY COOPERATION AGENCY.

DSS. abbr. 1. DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL SERVICES. 2. DEFENSE SECURITY SERVICE.

DTC. abbr. DEPOSITORY TRUST CORPORATION.

DTRA. abbr. DEFENSE THREAT REDUCTION AGENCY.

d.t.'s. abbr. DELIRIUM TREMENS.

dual agent. See AGENT (2).

dual-capacity doctrine. (1914) The principle that makes an employer — who is normally shielded from tort liability by workers'-compensation laws — liable in tort to an employee if the employer and employee stand in a secondary relationship that confers independent obligations on the employer. — Also termed dual-persona doctrine. Cf. DUAL-PURPOSE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ⇨ 2162.]

dual citizenship. 1. A person's status as a citizen of two countries, as when the person is born in the United States to parents who are citizens of another country, or one country still recognizes a person as a citizen even though that person has acquired citizenship in another country. [Cases: Citizens ⇨ 18.] 2. The status of a person who is a citizen of both the United States and the person's country of residence.

dual contract. See CONTRACT.

dual-criminality principle. The rule prohibiting the international extradition of a fugitive unless the offense involves conduct that is criminal in both countries. [Cases: Extradition and Detainers ⇨ 5.]

dual distributor. (1945) A firm that sells goods simultaneously to buyers on two different levels of the distribution chain; esp., a manufacturer that sells directly to both wholesalers and retailers.

dual distributorship. See DISTRIBUTORSHIP.

dual employment. See MOONLIGHTING.

dual fund. See MUTUAL FUND.

dual inheritance. See INHERITANCE.

duality of art. Copyright. The twofold nature of applied art as both functional and aesthetic. • The United States takes a duality-of-art approach to copyright, protecting applied art only when the item could stand alone as an identifiable work of art even if it did not perform the function it was designed to do. — Also termed noncumulative approach. Cf. UNITY OF ART.

dual listing. See LISTING (2).

dual-persona doctrine (d[y]oo-əl pər-soh-nə). (1982) See DUAL-CAPACITY DOCTRINE.

dual-priorities rule. The principle that partnership creditors have priority for partnership assets and that individual creditors have priority for a partner's personal assets. • This rule has been abandoned by the bankruptcy laws and the Revised Uniform Partnership Act. The bankruptcy code now allows partnership creditors access to all assets of bankrupt partners, not just those remaining after payment to individual creditors. — Also termed jingle rule.

dual-prosecution rule. (1981) The principle that the federal government and a state government may both prosecute a defendant for the same offense because both governments are separate and distinct entities. See DUAL-SOVEREIGNTY DOCTRINE. [Cases: Double Jeopardy ⇨ 186.]

dual-purpose doctrine. (1953) The principle that an employer is liable for an employee's injury that occurs during a business trip even though the trip also serves a personal purpose. Cf. DUAL-CAPACITY DOCTRINE. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 3046(2); Workers' Compensation ⇨ 715.]

dual-purpose fund. See dual fund under MUTUAL FUND.

dual-residential parent. See PARENT.

dual-shop operation. See DOUBLE-BREASTING.

dual-sovereignty doctrine. (1957) The rule that the federal and state governments may both prosecute a person for a crime without violating the constitutional protection against double jeopardy, if the person's act violated both jurisdictions' laws. See duarchy (d[y]oo-ahr-kee), n. [fr. Greek duo "two" + archia "rule"] See DIARCHY.

DUAL-PROSECUTION RULE. [Cases: Double Jeopardy ⚡ 186.]

dubii juris (d[y]oo-bee-ī joor-is). [Latin] Hist. Of doubtful law. • The phrase appeared in reference to an unsettled legal point.

dubitante (d[y]oo-bi-tan-tee). [Latin] Doubting. • This term was usu. placed in a law report next to a judge's name, indicating that the judge doubted a legal point but was unwilling to state that it was wrong. — Also termed dubitans.

"[E]xpressing the epitome of the common law spirit, there is the opinion entered dubitante — the judge is unhappy about some aspect of the decision rendered, but cannot quite bring himself to record an open dissent." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 147 (1968).

dubitatur (d[y]oo-bi-tay-tər). [Latin] It is doubted. • This phrase indicates that a point of law is doubtful. — Also termed dubitavit.

ducāt (dāk-it). A gold coin used as currency, primarily in Europe and first appearing in Venice in the early 1100s, with the motto sit tibi, Christe, dato, quem tu regis, iste Ducatus ("let this duchy which thou rulest be dedicated to thee, O Christ"). • It survived into the 20th century in several countries, including Austria and the Netherlands.

ducatus (d[y]ə-kay-təs), n. [Law Latin] A duchy; a dukedom.

duces tecum (d[y]oo-səs tee-kəm also tay-kəm). [Latin] (17c) Bring with you. See subpoena duces tecum under SUBPOENA.

duces tecum licet languidus (d[y]oo-səs tee-kəm li-set lang-gwə-dəs), n. [Law Latin "bring with you, although sick"] Hist. A habeas corpus writ ordering a sheriff to bring someone into court despite a return by the sheriff noting that the person was too ill to come.

Duchy Court of Lancaster (däch-ee kort əv lang-kə-stər). Hist. English law. A court with special equity jurisdiction, similar to the equity courts of chancery, in which the Duchy of Lancaster's chancellor or deputy presides over issues primarily relating to land held by the Crown in right of the Duchy.

Duchy of Lancaster (däch-ee əv lang-kə-stər). Land, in the county of Lancaster, the Savoy in London, and around Westminster, that originally belonged to the Duke of Lancaster and later belonged to the Crown in right of the Duchy.

ducking stool. See CASTIGATORY.

due, adj. (14c) 1. Just, proper, regular, and reasonable <due care> <due notice>. 2. Immediately enforceable <payment is due on delivery>. 3. Owing or payable; constituting a debt <the tax refund is due from the IRS>.

due-bill. See IOU.

due care. See reasonable care under CARE.

due compensation. See just compensation under COMPENSATION.

due consideration. 1. The degree of attention properly paid to something, as the circumstances merit. 2. See sufficient consideration under CONSIDERATION (1).

due course, payment in. See PAYMENT IN DUE COURSE.

due-course holder. See HOLDER IN DUE COURSE.

due course of law. See DUE PROCESS.

due day. See BOON DAY.

due deference. The appropriate degree of respect with which a reviewing authority must consider the decision of a primary decision-maker.

due diligence. See DILIGENCE.

due-diligence information. Securities. Information that a broker-dealer is required to have on file and make available to potential customers before submitting quotations for over-the-counter securities. • The informational requirements are set out in SEC Rule 15c2-11 (17 CFR § 240.15c2-11).

due influence. (17c) The sway that one person has over another, esp. as a result of temperate persuasion, argument, or appeal to the person's affections. Cf. UNDUE INFLUENCE.

duel. (15c) 1. TRIAL BY COMBAT. 2. A single combat; specif., a prearranged combat with deadly weapons fought between two or more persons under prescribed rules, usu. in the presence of at least two witnesses, to resolve a previous quarrel or avenge a deed. • In England and the United States, death resulting from a duel is treated as murder, and seconds may be liable as accessories. — Also termed monomachy; single combat. Cf. MUTUAL COMBAT. [Cases: Homicide ⚡ 537.]

"[A] duel which did not end in death was only a misdemeanor, till the passing of Lord Ellenborough's Act, 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, passed in 1803 A duel which did end fatally might be either murder or manslaughter, according to the following distinctions: — If the duel was on a sudden falling out, if the parties fought in hot blood and on the spot and one was killed, the offence was only manslaughter, however aggravated the case might be. . . . If a fatal duel took place when the parties were in cool blood, it was held to be murder, and of this there has never been any doubt whatever in this country, though juries not unfrequently acquitted in such cases if they sympathized with the prisoner." 3 James Fitzjames Stephen, A History of the Criminal Law of England 100 (1883).

"Duelling is distinguished from other offenses in that it has none of the elements of sudden heat and passion, and is usually carried out with some formality. A duel has been distinguished from an 'affray' in that an affray occurs on a sudden quarrel while a duel is always the result of design." 28A C.J.S. Duelling § 2, at 154 (1996).

dueling, n. The common-law offense of fighting at an appointed time and place after an earlier disagreement. • If one of the participants is killed, the other is guilty of murder, and all who are present, abetting the crime, are guilty as principals in the second degree. [Cases: Criminal Law ⚡ 45.30.]

"Duelling is prearranged fighting with deadly weapons, usually under certain agreed or prescribed rules. . . . It is a misdemeanor at common law to fight a duel, even though no death result, to challenge another to a duel, intentionally to provoke such a challenge, or knowingly to be the bearer of such a challenge." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 243 (3d ed. 1982).

duellum (d[y]oo-el-əm), n. [fr. Latin duo "two"] Hist. See TRIAL BY COMBAT.

due negotiation. See NEGOTIATION.

due notice. See NOTICE.

due-on-encumbrance clause. (1971) A mortgage provision giving the lender the option to accelerate the debt if the borrower further mortgages the real estate without the lender's consent. • All state laws on the enforcement of due-on-sale clauses have been preempted, and the subject is now governed exclusively by the Garn Act. 12 USCA § 1701j-3. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨ 403.]

due-on-sale clause. (1967) A mortgage provision that gives the lender the option to accelerate the debt if the borrower transfers or conveys any part of the mortgaged real estate without the lender's consent. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨ 403.]

due posting. (1893) 1. The stamping and placing of letters or packages in the U.S. mail. [Cases: Postal Service ⇨ 15.] 2. The proper entry of an item into a ledger. 3. Proper publication; proper placement of an item (such as an announcement) in a particular place, as on a particular wall.

due process. (16c) The conduct of legal proceedings according to established rules and principles for the protection and enforcement of private rights, including notice and the right to a fair hearing before a tribunal with the power to decide the case. — Also termed due process of law; due course of law. See FUNDAMENTAL-FAIRNESS DOCTRINE. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 3840–4841.]

"The words 'due process' have a precise technical import, and are only applicable to the process and proceedings of the courts of justice; they can never be referred to an act of legislature." Alexander Hamilton, Remarks on an Act for Regulating Elections, New York Assembly, 6 Feb. 1787, in 4 Papers of Alexander Hamilton 34, 35 (Harold C. Syrett ed., 1962).

"The words, 'due process of law,' were undoubtedly intended to convey the same meaning as the words, 'by the law of the land,' in Magna Charta." Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 59 U.S. (18 How.) 272, 276 (1856) (Curtis, J.).

"Due process of law in each particular case means, such an exertion of the powers of government as the settled maxims of law sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs." Thomas M. Cooley, A Treatise on the Constitutional Limitations 356 (1868).

"An elementary and fundamental requirement of due process in any proceeding which is to be accorded finality is notice reasonably calculated, under all the circumstances, to apprise interested parties of the pendency of the action and afford them an opportunity to present their objections. . . . The notice must be of such nature as reasonably to convey the required information." Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 314, 70 S.Ct. 652, 657 (1950) (Jackson, J.).

economic substantive due process. (1957) The doctrine that certain social policies, such as the freedom of contract or the right to enjoy property without interference by government regulation, exist in the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment, particularly in the words "liberty" and "property."

procedural due process. (1934) The minimal requirements of notice and a hearing guaranteed by the Due Process Clauses of the 5th and 14th Amendments, esp. if the deprivation of a significant life, liberty, or property interest may occur. • The Supreme Court has ruled that the fundamental guarantees of due process apply to children as well as to adults and that they apply in situations in which a juvenile may be deprived of liberty even though the juvenile proceedings may be labeled civil rather than criminal. In re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1428 (1967). In that case, the Court held that an accused child was entitled to notice of the charges, the privilege against self-incrimination, the right to confront witnesses, and the right to summon witnesses on his or her own behalf. Justice Abe Fortas wrote the majority opinion in Gault, and Chief Justice Earl Warren predicted that it would come to be called the "Magna Carta for juveniles." [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 3867.]

substantive due process. (1933) The doctrine that the Due Process Clauses of the 5th and 14th Amendments require legislation to be fair and reasonable in content and to further a legitimate governmental objective. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 3892.]

Due Process Clause. (1890) The constitutional provision that prohibits the government from unfairly or arbitrarily depriving a person of life, liberty, or property. • There are two Due Process Clauses in the U.S. Constitution, one in the 5th Amendment applying to the federal government, and one in the 14th Amendment applying to the states (although the 5th Amendment's Due Process Clause also applies to the states under the incorporation doctrine). Cf. EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 3840–4841.] due process of law. See DUE PROCESS.

due-process rights. (1930) The rights (as to life, liberty, and property) so fundamentally important as to require compliance with due-process standards of fairness and justice. See DUE PROCESS; DUE PROCESS CLAUSE; FUNDAMENTAL-FAIRNESS DOCTRINE.

due proof. Sufficient and properly submitted evidence to produce a result or support a conclusion, such as an entitlement to benefits supported by an insurance policy. • The evidence need not be the best proof possible. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Frisch, 65 N.E. 2d 852, 855 (Ind. App. 1946).

Duhig rule. Oil & gas. A rule of title interpretation developed to deal with the common problem of overconveyance of fractional interests by giving priority to the granted interest over the reserved interest. Duhig v. Peavy Moore Lumber Co., Inc., 144 S.W.2d 878 (Tex. 1940). • The rule is not accepted in all states and is generally limited to conveyances by warranty deed. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨55(4), 55(7).]

DUI. abbr. DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

DUIL. abbr. Driving under the influence of liquor. See DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

duke. 1. A sovereign prince; a ruler of a duchy. 2. The first order of nobility in Great Britain below the royal family.

"But after the Norman conquest, which changed the military policy of the nation, the kings themselves continuing for many generations dukes of Normandy, they would not honour any subjects with that title, till the time of Edward III; who, claiming to be the king of France, and thereby losing the ducal in the royal dignity, in the eleventh year of his reign created his son, Edward the black prince, duke of Cornwall: and many, of the royal family especially, were afterwards raised to the honour. However, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, A.D. 1572, the whole order became utterly extinct: but it was revived about fifty years afterwards by her successor, who was remarkably prodigal of honours, in the person of George Villiers duke of Buckingham." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 385 (1765).

Duke of Exeter's Daughter. A torture rack in the Tower of London, named after the Duke of Exeter, Henry VI's minister who assisted in introducing it to England. — Also termed brake.

"The rack . . . to extort a confession from criminals, is a practice of a different nature . . . And the trial by rack is utterly unknown to the law of England; though once when the dukes of Exeter and Suffolk . . . had laid a design to introduce the civil law into this kingdom as the rule of government, for a beginning thereof they erected a rack for torture; which was called in derision the duke of Exeter's daughter, and still remains in the tower of London: where it was occasionally used as an engine of state, not of law, more than once in the reign of queen Elizabeth." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 320–21 (1769).

Duke of York's Laws. A body of laws compiled in 1665 by Governor Nicholls for the more orderly government of the New York colony. • The laws were gradually extended to the entire province.

dulocracy (d[y]oo-lək-rə-see), n. [fr. Greek doulos "servant" + kratein "to rule"] A government in which servants or slaves have so many privileges that they essentially rule. — Also spelled doulocracy.

duly, adv. In a proper manner; in accordance with legal requirements.

dum (dəm). [Latin] While; provided that.

dumb bidding. An auction bidding process in which the minimum acceptance price is placed under the object for sale — unbeknownst to the bidders — and no bids are accepted until they meet that price. • Dumb bidding was initially intended to avoid the taxes imposed on auction sales by the statute of 1779, 19 Geo. 3, ch. 56, §§ 5–6, but the courts determined that the practice was fraudulent. [Cases: Auctions and Auctioneers ⇨7.]

dum fervet opus (dəm fər-vet oh-pəs). [Latin] While the action is fresh; in the heat of action. • This term usu. referred to matters of testimony.

dum fuit infra aetatem (dəm fyoo-it in-frə ee-tay-təm), n. [Law Latin "while he was within age"] Hist. A writ allowing a person of full age to recover lands feoffed while the person was an infant. • The remedy was also available to the person's heirs. It was later replaced by the action of ejectment. See EJECTMENT.

dum fuit in prisona (dəm fyoo-it in priz-ə-nə), n. [Law Latin "while he was in prison"] Hist. A writ restoring a man to his estate after he transferred the estate under duress of imprisonment. See DURESS OF IMPRISONMENT.

dummodo (dəm-ə-doh). [Latin] So that; provided that. • This term was used as a limitation in conveyances, as in dummodo solverit talem redditum (dəm-ə-doh sol-və-rit tay-lem red-i-təm), meaning "provided he shall pay such a rent."

dummodo constet de persona (dəm-ə-doh kon-stet dee pər-soh-nə). [Latin] Hist. Provided it be evident who is the person meant. See CONSTAT DE PERSONA.

dummodo vassalli conditio non sit deterior (dəm-ə-doh vas-ə-lɪ kən-dish-ee-oh non sit di-teer-ee-or). [Law Latin] Hist. Provided the vassal's condition be not made worse. • The phrase was used as a limitation in a conveyance. See DUMMODO.

dummy, adj. (1846) Sham; make-believe; pretend <dummy corporation>.

dummy, n. (1866) 1. A party who has no interest in a transaction, but participates to help achieve a legal goal. 2. A party who purchases property and holds legal title for another. Cf. STRAW MAN (3).

dummy corporation. See CORPORATION.

dummy director. See DIRECTOR.

dummy shareholder. See SHAREHOLDER.

dum non fuit compos mentis (dəm non fyoo-it kom-pəs men-tis), n. [Law Latin "while he was of unsound mind"] Hist. A writ allowing heirs to recover an estate transferred by someone of unsound mind.

dump, vb. 1. To drop (something) down, esp. in a heap; to unload. 2. To sell (products) at an extremely low price; specif., to sell (products) in a foreign market at a lower price than at home.

dumping. (1857) 1. The act of selling a large quantity of goods at less than fair value. 2. Selling goods abroad at less than the market price at home. See ANTIDUMPING LAW. [Cases: Environmental Law ⇨353, 354.]

"Dumping involves selling abroad at a price that is less than the price used to sell the same goods at home (the 'normal' or 'fair' value). To be unlawful, dumping must threaten or cause material injury to an industry in the export market, the market where prices are lower. Dumping is recognized by most of the trading world as an unfair practice (akin to price discrimination as an antitrust offense)." Ralph H. Folsom & Michael W. Gordon, International Business Transactions § 6.1 (1995).

3. The disposal of waste matter into the environment. [Cases: Environmental Law ⇨341.]

Dumping Act. A federal antidumping law requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to notify the U.S.

International Trade Commission (USITC) whenever the Secretary determines that goods are likely to be sold abroad at less than their fair value, so that the USITC can take appropriate action. 19 USCA § 1673. [Cases: Customs Duties ⇨21.5.]

dump-truck lawyer. Slang. A public defender who spends little time or effort and exhibits little skill mounting a defense on behalf of an indigent defendant. • This derogatory term arises from criminal defendants' common perception (typically a misperception) that public defenders prefer to dump cases by making plea bargains rather than spend time preparing for trial. People v. Clark, 833 P.2d 561, 590 (Cal. 1992); People v. Huffman, 139 Cal. Rptr. 264, 267 n.2 (Cal. App. 1977).

dum se bene gesserit (dəm see bee-nee jes-ər-it). [Latin "while he behaves himself properly"] Hist. During good conduct. Cf. QUAMDIU BENE SE GESSERINT.

dum sola (dəm soh-lə). [Latin] While single. • This phrase was used to limit conveyances, esp. to women, as in dum sola fuerit ("while she remains single"), dum sola et casta vixerit ("while she remains single and chaste"), and dum sola et casta ("while she is unmarried and lives chastely").

dun (dən), vb. (17c) To demand payment from (a delinquent debtor) <his creditors are dunning him daily>. — dun, n.

Dunaway hearing. (1983) Criminal law. A pretrial hearing to determine whether evidence was obtained in violation of Fourth Amendment protections against unreasonable search and seizure. • The name derives from Dunaway v. New York, 442 U.S. 200, 99 S.Ct. 2249 (1979). [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨394.6(5).]

dungeon. 1. The bottom part of a fortress or tower, often used as a prison. — Also termed dungeon-keep. 2. A dark underground prison.

dunnage (dən-ij). Anything, esp. pieces of wood, that are put underneath or between cargo on a vessel to prevent the cargo from bruising or getting wet from water leaking into the hold. [Cases: Shipping ⇨110.]

duodecemvirale iudicium (d[y]oo-oh-des-əm-və-ray-lee joo-dish-ee-əm). [Latin] A trial by 12 persons; a trial by jury.

duodecima manus (d[y]oo-oh-des-ə-mə man-əs). [Latin] Twelve men.

"The manner of waging and making law is this. He that has waged, or given security, to make his law, brings with him into court eleven of his neighbours: . . . for by the old Saxon constitution every man's credit in courts of law depended upon the opinion which his neighbours had of his veracity. The defendant then, standing at the end of the bar, is admonished by the judges of the nature and danger of a false oath. . . . And thereupon his eleven neighbours or compurgators shall avow upon their oaths that they believe in their consciences that he saith the truth. . . . It is held indeed by later authorities . . . that fewer than eleven compurgators will do; but Sir Edward Coke is positive that there must be this number . . . for as wager of law is equivalent to a verdict in the defendant's favor, it ought to be established by the same or equal testimony, namely, by the oath of twelve men. And so indeed Glanvil expresses it, . . . 'jurabit duodecima manu' . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 343 (1768).

duodena (d[y]oo-ə-dee-nə). [Latin] 1. A jury of twelve. 2. A dozen of anything.

duopoly (d[y]oo-op-ə-lee). A market in which there are only two sellers of a product.

duopsony (d[y]oo-op-sə-nee). A market in which there are only two buyers of a product.

duoviri (d[y]oo-oh-və-rī or d[y]oo-oh vī-rī). See DUUMVIRI.

duplex querela (d[y]oo-pleks kwə-ree-lə). 1. Hist. Eccles. law. An appeal by a clerk to the archbishop in response to the bishop's delaying or wrongfully refusing to do justice. 2. Eccles. law. An appeal to a person's immediate superior, as when a bishop appeals to an archbishop. — Also termed double quarrel; double complaint.

duplex valor maritaggi (d[y]oo-pleks val-ər mar-ə-tay-jee-ī), n. [Law Latin "double the value of a marriage"] Hist. A ward's forfeiture of double the value of a marriage made without the guardian's consent. • In the quotation that follows, Blackstone uses the accusative form (duplicem valorem maritaggi) because the phrase follows the verb forfeited.

"For, while the infant was in ward, the guardian had the power of tendering him or her a suitable match, without disparagement, or inequality: which if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage . . . to their guardian; that is, so much as a jury would assess, or any one would bona fide give to the guardian for such an alliance: . . . and, if the infants married themselves without the guardian's consent, they forfeited double the value, duplicem valorem maritaggi. This seems to have been one of the greatest hardships of our ancient tenures." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 70 (1766).

duplicate (d[y]oo-pli-kit), n. (16c) 1. A reproduction of an original document having the same particulars and effect as the original. See Fed. R. Evid. 101(4). 2. A new original, made to replace an instrument that has been lost or destroyed. — Also termed (in sense 2) duplicate original. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨399; Evidence ⇨173.] — duplicate (d[y]oo-pli-kit), adj.

"A 'duplicate' is defined for purposes of the best evidence rule as a counterpart produced by the same impression as the original, or from the same matrix, or by means of photography including enlargements and miniatures, by mechanical or electronic recording, by chemical reproduction, or by other equivalent techniques which accurately reproduce the original; copies subsequently produced manually, either handwritten or typed, are not within this definition." 29A Am. Jur. 2d Evidence § 1085 (1994).

duplicate (d[y]oo-pli-kayt), vb. 1. To copy exactly <he duplicated the original document>. 2. To double; to repeat <she duplicated the performance>.

duplicate-claiming rejection. See REJECTION.

duplicate taxation. See double taxation under TAXATION.

duplicate will. See WILL.

duplicatio (d[y]oo-pli-kay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Latin duplicare "to double"] 1. Roman & civil law. A defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication, similar to a rejoinder in common law. — Also termed (in Scots law) duply. See REPLICATION. 2. The fourth in a series. 3. A duplication of a transaction.

duplicative (doo-plik-ə-tiv also doo-pli-kay-tiv), adj. 1. Having or characterized by having overlapping content, intentions, or effect <duplicative sources> <duplicative evidence> <duplicative regulations>. 2. Duplicate; having or characterized by having identical content <duplicative database> <duplicative backup>.

duplicatum jus (d[y]oo-pli-kay-təm jəs), n. [Law Latin “double right”] A double right, such as droit droit (both the “right of possession and right of property”).

duplicitous (d[y]oo-plis-i-təs), adj. 1. (Of a person) deceitful; double-dealing. 2. (Of a pleading, esp. an indictment) alleging two or more matters in one plea; characterized by double pleading.

duplicitous appeal. See APPEAL.

duplicitous indictment. See INDICTMENT.

duplicitous information. See INFORMATION.

duplicity (d[y]oo-plis-i-tee), n. (15c) 1. Deceitfulness; double-dealing. 2. The charging of the same offense in more than one count of an indictment. 3. The pleading of two or more distinct grounds of complaint or defense for the same issue. • In criminal procedure, this takes the form of joining two or more offenses in the same count of an indictment. — Also termed double pleading. Cf. alternative pleading under PLEADING (2); double plea under PLEA (3). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻675; Indictment and Information ↻125; Pleading ↻64.]

duplum (d[y]oo-pləm). [Latin] Roman & civil law. Double the price of something; esp., a measure of damages equal to double a thing’s value. • This measure was used for certain delicts. Cf. SIMPLUM.

duply. See Duplicatio (1).

durable goods. See GOODS.

durable lease. See LEASE.

durable power of attorney. See POWER OF ATTORNEY.

durables. See durable goods under GOODS.

durante (d[y]ə-ran-tee). [Law Latin] While; during, as in durante minore aetate (“during minority”), durante viduitate (“during widowhood”), durante virginitate (“during virginity”), and durante vita (“during life”). • The term was often used in conveyancing.

durante absentia (d[y]ə-ran-tee ab-sen-shee-ə). [Law Latin] During absence. • This term referred to the administration of an estate while the executor was out of the county or otherwise absent. During the executor’s absence, the administration sometimes continued because a delay until the executor’s return would impair the estate settlement.

durante bene placito (d[y]ə-ran-tee bee-nee plas-ə-toh). [Law Latin] During good pleasure. • This phrase was used in the royal writ granting tenure durante bene placito to the king’s judges.

durante furore (d[y]ə-ran-tee fyuu-ror-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. While the insanity endures. • The phrase appeared in reference to the rule prohibiting the state from prosecuting an insane person. The state could, however, prosecute the person once the insanity ended.

duration. (14c) 1. The length of time something lasts <the duration of the lawsuit>.

duration of interest. The length of time a property interest lasts.

duration of trust. The length of time a trust exists. [Cases: Trusts ↻60.]

2. A length of time; a continuance in time <an hour’s duration>.

durational-residency requirement. (1970) The requirement that one be a state resident for a certain time, such as one year, as a precondition to the exercise of a specified right or privilege. • When applied to voting, this requirement has been held to be an unconstitutional denial of equal protection because it burdens voting rights and impairs the fundamental personal right of travel.

Duration Directive. See DIRECTIVE HARMONIZING THE TERM OF COPYRIGHT AND CERTAIN RELATED RIGHTS.

Duren test. (1980) Constitutional law. A test to determine whether a jury’s composition violates the fair-cross-section requirement and a criminal defendant’s Sixth Amendment right to an impartial jury. • Under the test, a constitutional violation occurs if (1) a distinctive group is not fairly and reasonably represented in the jury pool in relation to its population in the community, (2) the underrepresentation is the result of a systematic exclusion of the group from the jury-selection process, and (3) the government cannot reasonably justify the discrepancy. Duren v. Missouri, 439 U.S. 357, 99 S.Ct. 664 (1979). See FAIR-CROSS-SECTION REQUIREMENT; STATISTICAL-DECISION THEORY; ABSOLUTE DISPARITY; COMPARATIVE DISPARITY. [Cases: Jury ↻33(1.1).]

duress (d[y]uu-res). (13c) 1. Strictly, the physical confinement of a person or the detention of a contracting party’s property. • In the field of torts, duress is considered a species of fraud in which compulsion takes the place of deceit in causing injury.

“Duress consists in actual or threatened violence or imprisonment; the subject of it must be the contracting party himself, or his wife, parent, or child; and it must be inflicted or threatened by the other party to the contract, or else by one acting with his knowledge and for his advantage.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 261–62 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

threat which overcomes the free will of a party constitutes duress. This simple statement of the law conceals a number of questions, particularly as to the meaning of 'free will' and 'wrongful.'" John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 9-2, at 337 (3d ed. 1987).

2. Broadly, a threat of harm made to compel a person to do something against his or her will or judgment; esp., a wrongful threat made by one person to compel a manifestation of seeming assent by another person to a transaction without real volition. • A marriage that is induced by duress is generally voidable. 3. The use or threatened use of unlawful force — usu. that a reasonable person cannot resist — to compel someone to commit an unlawful act. • Duress is a recognized defense to a crime, contractual breach, or tort. See Model Penal Code § 2.09. See COERCION.

"[In most states,] the age-old rule of duress — that the doing of a prohibited act is not a crime if reasonably believed to be necessary to save from death or great bodily injury — together with the equally ancient exception in the form of the 'inexcusable choice,' are as firm today as ever except for the realization that they cover only part of the field." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1064 (3d ed. 1982).

"Among defenses, necessity needs to be distinguished from duress. Necessity is generally regarded as a justification, while duress is held to be an excuse. This means that the person who acts under necessity chooses to act in a way that the law ultimately approves. The person who acts under duress acts in a way that the law disapproves and seeks to discourage, but he acts under circumstances which make conviction and punishment inappropriate and unfair. This is so because to act under duress is to act under pressures that a person of reasonable firmness would not be able to resist. Thus, both the theory of necessity and the theory of duress refer to the pressure of exigent and extraordinary situations, but they do so in different ways." Thomas Morawetz, "Necessity," in 3 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 957, 959 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

duress of circumstances. See NECESSITY (1).

duress of goods. 1. The act of seizing personal property by force, or withholding it from an entitled party, and then extorting something as the condition for its release. 2. Demanding and taking personal property under color of legal authority that either is void or for some other reason does not justify the demand.

duress of imprisonment. The wrongful confining of a person to force the person to do something.

duress of the person. Compulsion of a person by imprisonment, by threat, or by a show of force that cannot be resisted.

duress per minas (par mī-nās). [Law Latin] Duress by threat of loss of life, loss of limb, mayhem, or other harm to a person.

"Duress per minas is either for fear of loss of life, or else for fear of mayhem, or loss of limb. And this fear must be upon sufficient reason A fear of battery, or being beaten, though never so well grounded, is no duress; neither is the fear of having one's house burned, or one's goods taken away and destroyed; because in these cases, should the threat be performed, a man may have satisfaction by recovering equivalent damages; but no suitable atonement can be made for the loss of life, or limb." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 127 (1765).

"Duress per minas is a very rare defence; so rare that Sir James Stephen, in his long forensic experience, never saw a case in which it was raised. It has, however, been thought that threats of the immediate infliction of death, or even of grievous bodily harm, will excuse some crimes that have been committed under the influence of such threats." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 58 (16th ed. 1952).

economic duress. (1929) An unlawful coercion to perform by threatening financial injury at a time when one cannot exercise free will. — Also termed business compulsion.

"Courts have shown a willingness to recognize the concept of 'economic duress.' For instance it has been held that a defence on these grounds may be available to the purchaser of a ship from a shipbuilder, if the latter extracts a promise of extra payment as a condition of delivery of the ship." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 230 (3d ed. 1981).

moral duress. An unlawful coercion to perform by unduly influencing or taking advantage of the weak financial position of another. • Moral duress focuses on the inequities of a situation while economic duress focuses on the lack of will or capacity of the person being influenced.

Durham (dər-əm). One of the three remaining county palatines in England, the others being Chester and Lancaster. • Its jurisdiction was vested in the Bishop of Durham until the statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, ch. 19 vested it as a separate franchise and royalty in the Crown. The jurisdiction of the Durham Court of Pleas was transferred to the Supreme Court of Judicature by the Judicature Act of 1873, but Durham continued to maintain a Chancery Court according to the Palatine Court of Durham Act of 1889. See COUNTY PALATINE.

Durham rule. Criminal law. A test for the insanity defense, holding that a defendant is not criminally responsible for an act that was the product of mental disease or defect (Durham v. United States, 214 F.2d 862 (D.C. Cir. 1954)). • Formerly used in New Hampshire and the District of Columbia, the Durham rule has been criticized as being too broad and is no longer accepted in any American jurisdiction. — Also termed product test. See INSANITY DEFENSE. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 48.]

Durrett rule. Bankruptcy. The principle that a transfer of property in exchange for less than 70% of the property's value should be invalidated as a preferential transfer. Durrett v. Washington Nat'l Ins. Co., 621 F.2d 201 (5th Cir. 1980); 11 USCA § 548. • This rule has been applied most frequently to foreclosure sales. But it has essentially been overruled by the U.S. Supreme Court, which has held that, at least for mortgage foreclosure sales, the price received at a regularly conducted, noncollusive sale represents a reasonably equivalent value of the property, and the transfer is presumed valid. BFP v. Resolution Trust Corp., 511 U.S. 531, 114 S.Ct. 1757 (1994). [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 2650.]

dutiable (d[y]oo-tee-ə-bəl), adj. Subject to a duty <dutiable goods>.

duty. (13c) 1. A legal obligation that is owed or due to another and that needs to be satisfied; an obligation for which somebody else has a corresponding right.

"There is a duty if the court says there is a duty; the law, like the Constitution, is what we make it. Duty is only a word with which we state our conclusion that there is or is not to be liability; it necessarily begs the essential question. . . . [M]any factors interplay: the hand of history, our ideas of morals and justice, the convenience of administration of the rule, and our social ideas as to where loss should fall." William L. Prosser, Palsgraf Revisited, 52 Mich. L. Rev. 1, 15 (1953).

"A classic English definition [of duty] from the late nineteenth century holds that, when circumstances place one individual in such a position with regard to another that thinking persons of ordinary sense would recognize the danger of injury to the other if ordinary skill and care were not used, a duty arises to use ordinary skill and care to avoid the injury. A much quoted American judicial definition of duty emphasizes its relational aspects, with a focus on the foreseeability of risk to those 'within the range of apprehension.' At about the same time, one of the most creative of American law teachers defined duty as a complex of factors, including administrative, economic, and moral ones, to be applied by judges in their analyses of the legal strength of personal injury cases." Marshall S. Shapo, The Duty to Act xi-xii (1977).

"While courts frequently say that establishing 'duty' is the first prerequisite in an individual tort case, courts commonly go on to say that there is a 'general duty' to 'exercise reasonable care,' to avoid subjecting others to 'an unreasonable risk of harm,' or to comply with the 'legal standard of reasonable conduct.' Though cast in the language of duty, these formulations merely give the expression to the point that negligence is the standard of liability." Restatement (Third) of Torts § 6 cmt. a (Discussion Draft 1999).

absolute duty. 1. A duty to which no corresponding right attaches. • According to John Austin's legal philosophy, there are four kinds of absolute duties: (1) duties not regarding persons (such as those owed to God and to lower animals), (2) duties owed to persons indefinitely (i.e., to the community as a whole), (3) self-regarding duties (such as the duty not to commit suicide), and (4) duties owed to the sovereign. 1 John Austin, The Providence of Jurisprudence Determined 400 (Sarah Austin ed., 2d ed. 1861). 2. A duty as to which nothing but lapse of time remains necessary to make immediate performance by the promisor obligatory.

active duty. See positive duty.

affirmative duty. A duty to take a positive step to do something.

conditional duty. A duty that is conditioned on the occurrence of an event other than the lapse of time.

contractual duty. 1. A duty arising under a particular contract. [Cases: Contracts ↷1.] 2. A duty imposed by the law of contracts.

delegable duty. (1908) A duty that may be transferred to another to perform. See ASSIGNMENT.

duty to act. (17c) A duty to take some action to prevent harm to another, and for the failure of which one may be liable depending on the relationship of the parties and the circumstances. [Cases: Negligence ↷210.]

duty to defend. Insurance. The obligation of an insurer to provide an insured with a legal defense against claims of liability, within the terms of the policy. • The duty to defend applies if the terms of the policy and the facts of the claim allow an ambiguity about whether the insurer will have a duty to indemnify the insured. It does not apply if no such ambiguity exists. [Cases: Insurance ↷2911.]

duty to indemnify. An obligation to compensate another for the other's loss. • The duty arises under the terms of an agreement, which governs the extent of the duty. An insurance policy is fundamentally an indemnification agreement, but the duty is often made a part of other contracts as well. [Cases: Indemnity ↷25, 31-39; Insurance ↷2092, 2268.]

duty to settle. Insurance. The obligation of an insurer to negotiate and settle third-party claims against an insured in good faith.

duty to speak. (16c) A requirement (not strictly a duty) to say something to correct another's false impression. • For example, a duty to speak may arise when a person has, during the course of negotiations, said something that was true at the time but that has ceased to be true before the contract is signed. [Cases: Fraud ↷17.]

equitable duty. A duty enforceable in a court of chancery or in a court having the powers of a court in chancery.

imperfect duty. 1. A duty that, though recognized by law, is not enforceable against the person who owes it. 2. A duty that is not fit for enforcement but should be left to the discretion and conscience of the person whose duty it is.

implied duty of cooperation. A duty existing in every contract, obligating each party to cooperate with, or at least not to wrongfully hinder, the other party's performance. • Breach of this implied duty excuses performance. [Cases: Contracts ↷168.]

legal duty. (17c) A duty arising by contract or by operation of law; an obligation the breach of which would give a legal remedy <the legal duty of parents to support their children>.

moral duty. A duty the breach of which would be a moral wrong. — Also termed natural duty.

negative duty. A duty that forbids someone to do something; a duty that requires someone to abstain from something. — Also termed passive duty.

noncontractual duty. A duty that arises independently of any contract.

nondelegable duty (non-del-ə-gə-bəl). (1902) 1. Contracts. A duty that cannot be delegated by a contracting party to a third party. • If a contracting party purports to delegate the duty, the other party can rightfully refuse to accept performance by the third party. [Cases: Assignments ⇨ 19; Principal and Agent ⇨ 54.] 2. Torts. A duty that may be delegated to an independent contractor by a principal, who retains primary (as opposed to vicarious) responsibility if the duty is not properly performed. • For example, a landlord's duty to maintain common areas, though delegated to a service contractor, remains the landlord's responsibility if someone is injured by improper maintenance. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 2848, 3133; Landlord and Tenant ⇨ 162; Negligence ⇨ 1204(1).] passive duty. See negative duty.

perfect duty. A duty that is not merely recognized by the law but is actually enforceable.

positive duty. A duty that requires a person either to do some definite action or to engage in a continued course of action. — Also termed active duty.

preexisting duty. (1823) A duty that one is already legally bound to perform. See PREEXISTING-DUTY RULE.

quasi-judicial duty. A discretionary judicial duty that a nonjudicial officer may perform under some circumstances.

2. Any action, performance, task, or observance owed by a person in an official or fiduciary capacity.

discretionary duty. A duty that allows a person to exercise judgment and choose to perform or not perform. Cf. ministerial duty.

duty of candor (kan-dar). A duty to disclose material facts; esp., a duty of a director seeking shareholder approval of a transaction to disclose to the shareholders all known material facts about the transaction. [Cases: Corporations ⇨ 307, 312(5).]

duty of candor and good faith. Patents. A patent applicant's responsibility to disclose to the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office all known information relevant to the invention's patentability, esp. prior art, novelty, and embodiment. • If an applicant fails to be candid in disclosing all relevant information, the PTO may reject the application. If the patent is issued and undisclosed but relevant information is discovered later, the patent may be invalidated, and the applicant charged with fraud on the PTO, even if the undisclosed information might not have barred the patent's issuance. 37 CFR 1.56. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 97.]

duty of fair representation. A labor union's duty to represent its member employees fairly, honestly, and in good faith. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 1207.] duty of good faith and fair dealing. A duty that is implied in some contractual relationships, requiring the parties to deal with each other fairly, so that neither prohibits the other from realizing the agreement's benefits. See GOOD FAITH; BAD FAITH. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 168.]

duty of loyalty. A person's duty not to engage in self-dealing or otherwise use his or her position to further personal interests rather than those of the beneficiary. • For example, directors have a duty not to engage in self-dealing to further their own personal interests rather than the interests of the corporation.

fiduciary duty (fi-d[y]oo-shee-er-ee). A duty of utmost good faith, trust, confidence, and candor owed by a fiduciary (such as a lawyer or corporate officer) to the beneficiary (such as a lawyer's client or a shareholder); a duty to act with the highest degree of honesty and loyalty toward another person and in the best interests of the other person (such as the duty that one partner owes to another). See FIDUCIARY; fiduciary relationship under RELATIONSHIP. [Cases: Fraud ⇨ 7.] ministerial duty. A duty that requires neither the exercise of official discretion nor judgment. Cf. discretionary duty.

proprietary duty. A duty owed by a governmental entity while engaged in a proprietary, rather than governmental, activity. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⇨ 725.]

3. Torts. A legal relationship arising from a standard of care, the violation of which subjects the actor to liability. — Also termed duty of care. [Cases: Negligence ⇨ 210.] 4. A tax imposed on a commodity or transaction, esp. on imports; IMPOST. • A duty in this sense is imposed on things, not persons.

account duty. An inheritance tax payable by a decedent's beneficiary.

ad valorem duty. A tax calculated as a percentage of an imported product's value. Cf. compound duty; specific duty.

antidumping duty. See antidumping tariff under TARIFF (3).

compound duty. A tax based on a combination of imported goods' weight, volume, or item count, plus a percentage of their value. Cf. ad valorem duty; specific duty.

countervailing duty. A tax imposed on manufacturers of imported goods to protect domestic industry by offsetting subsidies given by foreign governments to those manufacturers. [Cases: Customs Duties ⇨ 21.5.]

customs duty. A tax levied on an imported or exported commodity; esp., the federal tax levied on goods shipped into the United States.

death duty. An estate tax or inheritance tax. — Also termed estate duty.

duty of detraction. A tax on property acquired by succession or will and then removed from one state to another.

estate duty. Hist. English law. A tax imposed on the principal value of all property that passed on death. • Estate duties were first imposed in 1889. A capital transfer tax replaced it in 1975. Since 1986, an inheritance tax has applied instead, with exceptions for certain transactions entered into before then. See death duty.

import duty. A tax on the importation of a product. — Also termed duty on import.

legacy duty. See legacy tax under TAX.

probate duty. A tax assessed by the government either on every will admitted to probate or on the gross value of the decedent's personal property.

specific duty. A tax calculated on an import's weight, volume, or item count. Cf. ad valorem duty; compound duty.

succession duty. A tax payable by the successor to real property, esp. when the successor has not purchased the property for value but has succeeded to the property in some other way.

tonnage duty. A charge imposed on a commercial vessel for entering, remaining in, or leaving a port, usu. assessed on the basis of the ship's weight. • U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3 prohibits the states from levying tonnage duties. — Also termed tonnage tax; tonnage. [Cases: Commerce ↷78; Shipping ↷7.]

unascertained duty. A preliminary, estimated payment to a customs collector of the duty that will be due on final accounting. • An importer pays this duty to receive permission to land and sell the goods.

duty-bound, adj. Required by legal or moral obligation to do something <Jones is duty-bound to deliver the goods by Friday>.

duty-free, adj. Of or relating to products of foreign origin that are not subject to import or export taxes.

duty judge. See JUDGE.

duty of care. See DUTY (3).

duty of the flag. Hist. A maritime ceremony by which a foreign vessel struck her flag and lowered her topsail upon meeting the British flag. • The ceremony was an acknowledgment of British sovereignty over the British seas.

duty of tonnage (tən-ij). See tonnage duty under DUTY (4).

duty of water. The amount of water necessary to irrigate a given tract.

duty on import. See import duty under DUTY (4).

duty-to-defend clause. Insurance. A liability-insurance provision obligating the insurer to take over the defense of any lawsuit brought by a third party against the insured on a claim that falls within the policy's coverage. See duty to defend under DUTY (1). [Cases: Insurance ↷2911.]

duty to mitigate (mit-i-gayt). (1891) A nonbreaching party's or tort victim's duty to make reasonable efforts to limit losses resulting from the other party's breach or tort. • Not doing so precludes the party from collecting damages that might have been avoided. See MITIGATION-OF-DAMAGES DOCTRINE. [Cases: Damages ↷62.]

duumviri (d[y]oo-əm-və-rī), n. pl. [fr. Latin due "two" + viri "men"] 1. Roman law. Magistrates elected or appointed in pairs to hold an office or perform a function.

duumviri municipales (d[y]oo-əm-və-rī myoo-nis-ə-pay-leez). [Latin] Two judicial magistrates annually elected in towns and colonies.

duumviri navales (d[y]oo-əm-və-rī nə-vay-leez). [Latin] Two officers appointed to man, equip, and refit the navy.

2. Two peers in authority. — Also termed duoviri.

dux (dəks), n. [fr. Latin ducere "to lead"] 1. Roman law. An army commander. 2. Roman law. A military governor of a province. • This term was eventually used also as a title of distinction. 3. Hist. Duke; a title of nobility. See DUKE.

DWAI. abbr. Driving while ability-impaired. See DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

dwell, vb. (13c) 1. To remain; to linger <the case dwelled in her memory>. 2. To reside in a place permanently or for some period <he dwelled in California for nine years>.

dwelling defense. See CASTLE DOCTRINE.

dwelling-house. (15c) 1. The house or other structure in which a person lives; a residence or abode. 2. Real estate. The house and all buildings attached to or connected with the house. 3. Criminal law. A building, a part of a building, a tent, a mobile home, or another enclosed space that is used or intended for use as a human habitation. • The term has referred to connected buildings in the same curtilage but now typically includes only the structures connected either directly with the house or by an enclosed passageway. — Often shortened to dwelling. — Also termed (archaically) mansion house; (more broadly) dwelling place. [Cases: Burglary ↷4.] quasi-dwelling-house. Hist. Any outbuilding, such as a barn, that is in proximity to the building used as a residence. See BURGLARY (1).

"A 'dwelling house' or 'dwelling' has been defined in connection with the crime of arson as any house intended to be occupied as a residence, or an enclosed space, permanent or temporary, in which human beings usually stay, lodge, or reside. If a building is not used exclusively as a dwelling, it is characterized as a dwelling if there is internal communication between the two parts of the building. Dwellings include mobile homes and a boat, if the person resides on it." 5 Am. Jur. 2d Arson and Related Offenses § 13, at 789 (1995).

DWI. abbr. DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED.

DWOP (dee-wop or doo-wop). abbr. See dismissal for want of prosecution under DISMISSAL (1).

DWOP docket. See DOCKET (2).

dyarchy (dī-ahr-kee), n. [fr. Greek dy "two" + archein "rule"] A government jointly ruled by two people, such as William and Mary of England. — Also termed diarchy.

"Dyarchy. A term applied by Mommsen to the Roman principate . . . a period in which he held that sovereignty was shared between the princes and the senate. The term has also been given to a system of government, promoted as a constitutional reform in India by Montagu and Chelmsford and introduced by the Government of India Act, 1919. It marked the introduction of democracy into the executive of the British administration of India by dividing the provincial executives into authoritarian and popularly responsible sections composed respectively of councillors appointed by the Crown and ministers appointed by the governor and responsible to the provincial legislative councils . . . The system ended when full provincial autonomy was granted in 1935." David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 386 (1980).

dyathanasia, (di-ath-ə-nay-zhə), n. The act of permitting death to occur naturally by withholding, terminating, or not offering life-prolonging treatments or intervention. — Also termed passive mercy killing. See EUTHANASIA.

Dyer Act. A federal law, enacted in 1919, making it unlawful either (1) to transport a stolen motor vehicle across state lines, knowing it to be stolen, or (2) to receive, conceal, or sell such a vehicle, knowing it to be stolen. 18 USCA §§ 2311–2313. — Also termed National Motor Vehicle Theft Act. [Cases: Automobiles ⚡ 341.]

dyet. See DIET.

dying declaration. See DECLARATION (6).

dying without issue. See FAILURE OF ISSUE.

dynamite charge. See ALLEN CHARGE.

dynamite instruction. See ALLEN CHARGE.

dynasty. 1. A powerful family line that continues for a long time <an Egyptian dynasty>. 2. A powerful group of individuals who control a particular industry or field and who control their successors  .

dynasty trust. See TRUST.

dysnomy (dis-nə-mee), n. [fr. Greek dys "bad" + nomos "law"] The enactment of bad legislation. Cf. EUONOMY.

dyvour (di-vər). Scots law. A person who is heavily in debt or bankrupt.

E

eadem persona cum defuncto (ee-ay-dəm pār-soh-nə kəm di-fəŋk-toh). [Law Latin] Hist. The same person as the decedent. • An heir having full title to the decedent's property was legally viewed to be the same person as the decedent.

ea intentione (ee-ə in-ten-shee-oh-nee). [Latin] With that intent.

EAJA. abbr. EQUAL ACCESS TO JUSTICE ACT.

E&O insurance. See errors-and-omissions insurance under INSURANCE.

earl. (12c) A title of nobility, formerly the highest in England but now the third highest, ranking between a marquis and a viscount. • This title corresponds with the French comte and the German graf. Originating with the Saxons, this title is the most ancient of the English peerage. William the Conqueror first made the title hereditary, giving it in fee to his nobles. No territorial, private, or judicial rights now accompany the title; it merely confers nobility and a hereditary seat in the House of Lords.

earldom. The dignity or jurisdiction of an earl. • Only the dignity remains now, the jurisdiction having been given over to the sheriff. See DIGNITY.

earles-penny. Hist. Money given in part payment; EARNEST. — Also termed earl's penny.

Earl Marshal of England. A great officer of state, who historically had jurisdiction over several courts, including the court of chivalry and the court of honor. • Under this office is the herald's office, or college of arms. The Earl Marshal was also a judge of the Marshalsea court, now abolished. This office is quite ancient. Since 1672, it has been hereditary in the family of Howards, Dukes of Norfolk. — Often shortened to Earl Marshal.

earl's penny. See EARLES-PENNY.

early voting. See VOTING.

earmark, n. (16c) 1. Originally, a mark upon the ear — a mode of marking sheep and other animals. [Cases: Animals ⇨ 5.]

"When now-a-days we say that 'money has no ear-mark,' we are alluding to a practice which in all probability played a large part in ancient law. Cattle were ear-marked or branded, and this enabled their owner to swear that they were his in whosoever hands he might find them. The legal supposition is, not that one ox is indistinguishable from another ox, but that all oxen, or all oxen of a certain large class, are equivalent. The possibility of using them as money has rested on this supposition." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 151–52 (2d ed. 1899).

2. A mark put on something (such as a coin) to distinguish it from another.

earmark, vb. 1. To mark with an earmark. 2. To set aside for a specific purpose or recipient.

earmarking doctrine. Bankruptcy. An equitable principle that when a new lender makes a loan to enable a debtor to pay off a specified creditor, the funds are specifically set aside for that creditor so that, if the debtor lacks control over the disposition of the funds, they do not become part of the debtor's estate and thus subject to a preference. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 2610.]

earn, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To acquire by labor, service, or performance. 2. To do something that entitles one to a reward or result, whether it is received or not.

earned income. See INCOME.

earned-income credit. See TAX CREDIT.

earned land. See LAND.

earned premium. See PREMIUM (1).

earned surplus. See retained earnings under EARNINGS.

earned time. See TIME.

earner. 1. One who produces income through personal efforts or property or both. 2. Property or an asset that produces income for its owner.

earnest, n. (13c) 1. A nominal payment or token act that serves as a pledge or a sign of good faith, esp. as the partial purchase price of property. • Though not legally necessary, an earnest may help the parties come to an agreement. 2. EARNEST MONEY.

earnest money. (16c) A deposit paid (often in escrow) by a prospective buyer (esp. of real estate) to show a good-faith intention to complete the transaction, and ordinarily forfeited if the buyer defaults. • Although earnest money has traditionally been a nominal sum (such as a nickel or a dollar) used in the sale of goods, it is not a mere token in the real-estate context: it is generally a percentage of the purchase price and may be a substantial sum. — Also termed earnest; bargain money; caution money; hand money. Cf. BINDER (2); down payment under PAYMENT. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⇨ 69.1, 182.]

"The amount of earnest money deposited rarely exceeds 10 percent of the purchase price, and its primary purpose is to serve as a source of payment of damages should the buyer default. Earnest money is not essential to make a purchase agreement binding if the buyer's and seller's exchange of mutual promises of performance (that is, the buyer's promise to purchase and the seller's promise to sell at a specified price and terms) constitutes the consideration for the contract." John W. Reilly, The Language of Real Estate 131 (4th ed. 1993).

earnest-penny. See GOD'S PENNY.

earning asset. See ASSET.

earning capacity. (1872) A person's ability or power to earn money, given the person's talent, skills, training, and experience. • Earning capacity is one element considered when measuring the damages recoverable in a personal-injury lawsuit. And in family law, earning capacity is considered when awarding child support and spousal maintenance (or alimony) and in dividing property between spouses upon divorce. — Also termed earning power. See LOST EARNING CAPACITY.

earnings. (16c) Revenue gained from labor or services, from the investment of capital, or from assets. See INCOME.

appropriated retained earnings. Retained earnings that a company's board designates for a distinct use, and that are therefore unavailable to pay dividends or for other uses. — Also termed appropriated surplus; surplus revenue; suspense reserve.

earnings before interest and taxes. Corporations. A company's income calculated without deductions for interest expenses and taxes, used as a measure of the company's ability to generate cash flow from ongoing operations.— Abbr. EBIT.

earnings before interest, taxes, and depreciation. Corporations. A company's income without deductions for interest expenses, taxes, depreciation expenses, or amortization expenses, used as an indicator of a company's profitability and ability to service its debt. — Abbr. EBITDA.

future earnings. See lost earnings.

gross earnings. See gross income under INCOME.

lost earnings. Wages, salary, or other income that a person could have earned if he or she had not lost a job, suffered a disabling injury, or died. • Lost earnings are typically awarded as damages in personal-injury and wrongful-termination cases. There can be past lost earnings and future lost earnings. Both are subsets of this category, though legal writers sometimes loosely use future earnings as a synonym for lost earnings. Cf. LOST EARNING CAPACITY. [Cases: Damages ↷37.]

net earnings. See net income under INCOME.

normalized earnings. Corporations. Earnings adjusted for inflation and to remove elements that are extraordinary, nonrecurring, nonoperating, or otherwise unusual.

ongoing earnings. See operating earnings.

operating earnings. Business income calculated in violation of generally accepted accounting principles by including income items and excluding various business expenses. • Many companies use operating earnings to favorably skew their price-earnings (P/E) ratios. Because the rationales for the underlying calculations vary from company to company, and from period to period within a company, operating earnings are almost always artificially inflated and unreliable. The term operating earnings is meaningless under generally accepted accounting principles. — Also termed pro forma earnings; economic earnings; core earnings; ongoing earnings; earnings excluding special items. See PRICE-EARNINGS RATIO.

pretax earnings. Net earnings before income taxes.

pro forma earnings. See operating earnings.

real earnings. Earnings that are adjusted for inflation so that they reflect actual purchasing power.

retained earnings. A corporation's accumulated income after dividends have been distributed. — Also termed earned surplus; undistributed profit. [Cases: Corporations ↷151.]

surplus earnings. The excess of corporate assets over liabilities within a given period, usu. a year. [Cases: Corporations ↷152.]

earnings and profits. Corporations. In corporate taxation, the measure of a corporation's economic capacity to make a shareholder distribution that is not a return of capital. • The distribution will be dividend income to the shareholders to the extent of the corporation's current and accumulated earnings and profits. Cf. accumulated-earnings tax under TAX; accumulated taxable income under INCOME. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3830.1-3845.]

earnings before interest and taxes. See EARNINGS.

earnings before interest, taxes, and depreciation. See EARNINGS.

earnings excluding special items. See operating earnings under EARNINGS.

earnings per share. Corporations. A measure of corporate value by which the corporation's net income is divided by the number of outstanding shares of common stock. • Investors benefit from calculating a corporation's earnings per share, because it helps the investors determine the fair market value of the corporation's stock. — Abbr. EPS.

fully diluted earnings per share. A corporation's net income — assuming that all convertible securities had been transferred to common equity and all stock options had been exercised — divided by the number of shares of the corporation's outstanding common stock.

earnings-price ratio. See earnings yield under YIELD.

earnings report. See INCOME STATEMENT.

earnings yield. See YIELD.

earnout agreement. (1977) An agreement for the sale of a business whereby the buyer first pays an agreed amount up front, leaving the final purchase price to be determined by the business's future profits. • The seller usu. helps manage the business for a period after the sale. — Sometimes shortened to earnout.

earwitness. (16c) A witness who testifies about something that he or she heard but did not see. Cf. EYEWITNESS.

easement (eez-mənt). (14c) An interest in land owned by another person, consisting in the right to use or control the land, or an area above or below it, for a specific limited purpose (such as to cross it for access to a public road). • The land benefiting from an easement is called the dominant estate; the land burdened by an easement is called the servient estate. Unlike a lease or license, an easement may last forever, but it does not give the holder the right to possess, take from, improve, or sell the land. The primary recognized easements are (1) a right-of-way, (2) a right of entry for any purpose relating to the dominant estate, (3) a right to the support of land and buildings, (4) a right of light and air, (5) a right to water, (6) a right to do some act that would otherwise amount to a nuisance, and (7) a right to place or keep something on the servient estate. See SERVITUDE (1). Cf. PROFIT À PRENDRE. — Also termed private right-of-way. [Cases: Easements ↷1.]

access easement. (1933) An easement allowing one or more persons to travel across another's land to get to a nearby location, such as a road. • The access easement is a common type of easement by necessity. — Also termed easement of access; easement of way; easement of passage.

adverse easement. See prescriptive easement.

affirmative easement. (1881) An easement that forces the servient-estate owner to permit certain actions by the easement holder, such as discharging water onto the servient estate. — Also termed positive easement. Cf. negative easement.

"Positive easements give rights of entry upon the land of another, not amounting to profits, to enable something to be done on that land. Some are commonplace, examples being rights of way across the land of another and rights to discharge water on to the land of another. Others are more rare, such as the right to occupy a pew in a church, the right to use a kitchen situated on the land of another for the purpose of washing and drying clothes, and the right to use a toilet situated on the land of another." Peter Butt, Land Law 305 (2d ed. 1988).

apparent easement. (1851) A visually evident easement, such as a paved trail or a sidewalk. [Cases: Easements ↷22.]

appendant easement. See easement appurtenant.

appurtenant easement. See easement appurtenant.

avigational easement. An easement permitting unimpeded aircraft flights over the servient estate. — Also termed avigation easement; aviation easement; flight easement; navigation easement. [Cases: Aviation ↷3.]

common easement. (18c) An easement allowing the servient landowner to share in the benefit of the easement. — Also termed nonexclusive easement. [Cases: Easements ↷38.]

continuous easement. (1863) An easement that may be enjoyed without a deliberate act by the party claiming it, such as an easement for drains, sewer pipes, lateral support of a wall, or light and air. — Also termed (in Louisiana) continuous servitude. Cf. discontinuous easement. [Cases: Easements ↷38.]

conservation easement. Property. A recorded, perpetual, nonpossessory interest in real property held by a government entity or by a qualified nonprofit entity that imposes restrictions or affirmative obligations on the property's owner or lessee to retain or protect natural, scenic, or open-space values of real property, ensure its availability for agricultural, forest, recreational, or open-space use, protect natural resources and habitat, maintain or enhance air or water quality, or preserve the historical, architectural, archeological, or cultural aspects of the real property. — Also termed conservation restriction; conservation servitude.

determinable easement. An easement that terminates on the happening of a specific event.

discontinuous easement. (1867) An easement that can be enjoyed only if the party claiming it deliberately acts in some way with regard to the servient estate. • Examples are a right-of-way and the right to draw water. — Also termed discontinuing easement; noncontinuous easement; nonapparent easement; (in Louisiana) discontinuous servitude. Cf. continuous easement. [Cases: Easements ↷38.]

easement appurtenant. (1810) An easement created to benefit another tract of land, the use of easement being incident to the ownership of that other tract. — Also termed appurtenant easement; appendant easement; pure easement; easement proper. Cf. easement in gross. [Cases: Easements ↷3.]

easement by estoppel. (1907) A court-ordered easement created from a voluntary servitude after a person, mistakenly believing the servitude to be permanent, acted in reasonable reliance on the mistaken belief. [Cases: Estoppel ↷83(1), 87.]

easement by implication. See implied easement.

easement by necessity. (1865) An easement created by operation of law because the easement is indispensable to the reasonable use of nearby property, such as an easement connecting a parcel of land to a road. — Also termed easement of necessity; necessary way. [Cases: Easements ↷18.]

easement by prescription. See prescriptive easement.

easement in gross. (1866) An easement benefiting a particular person and not a particular piece of land. • The beneficiary need not, and usu. does not, own any land adjoining the servient estate. Cf. easement appurtenant. [Cases: Easements ↷3.]

easement of access. See access easement.

easement of convenience. An easement that increases the facility, comfort, or convenience of enjoying the dominant estate or some right connected with it.

easement of natural support. See lateral support under SUPPORT (4).

easement of necessity. See easement by necessity.

easement of passage. See access easement.

easement of way. See access easement.

easement proper. See easement appurtenant.

equitable easement. (1869) 1. An implied easement created by equity when adjacent lands have been created out of a larger tract. • Such an easement is usu. created to allow implied privileges to continue. [Cases: Easements ↷16.] 2. See restrictive covenant (1) under COVENANT (4).

exclusive easement. An easement that the holder has the sole right to use. Cf. common easement. [Cases: Easements ↷52.]

flight easement. See avigational easement.

floating easement. An easement that, when created, is not limited to any specific part of the servient estate. [Cases: Easements ↷46.]

flowage easement. A common-law easement that gives the dominant-estate owner the right to flood a servient estate, as when land near a dam is flooded to maintain the dam or to control the water level in a reservoir. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ↷165.]

implied easement. (1867) An easement created by law after an owner of two parcels of land uses one parcel to benefit the other to such a degree that, upon the sale of the benefited parcel, the purchaser could reasonably expect the use to be included in the sale. — Also termed easement by implication, way of necessity. [Cases: Easements ↷15–19.]

intermittent easement. An easement that is usable or used only from time to time, not regularly or continuously.

land-conservation easement. Property. An easement arising from an agreement between a landowner and a land trust to provide for the protection of the land in its natural state while perhaps also allowing the property to be used for agricultural or low-impact recreational activities. • The easement runs with the land. — Also termed land-conservation agreement; land-preservation easement.

light-and-air easement. (1940) A negative easement preventing an adjoining landowner from constructing a building that would prevent light or air from reaching the dominant estate. See negative easement. Cf. solar easement. [Cases: Easements ↷11, 19, 45.]

mineral easement. An easement that permits the holder to enter the property to remove minerals from it. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷55(6).]

navigation easement. 1. An easement giving the federal government the right to regulate navigable waters, even when the regulation interferes with private water rights. [Cases: Navigable Waters ↷16.] 2. See avigational easement.

negative easement. (1861) An easement that prohibits the servient-estate owner from doing something, such as building an obstruction. Cf. affirmative easement. [Cases: Covenants ↷20, 51(2), 68, 69(2); Easements ↷13.]

"Negative easements . . . confer no right of entry, but consist essentially of the right to prevent something being done; examples are the right to the flow of air through defined aperture, the right to receive light for a building, the right to the support of a building, and (possibly) the right to require a neighbouring landowner to repair fences." Peter Butt, Land Law 305 (2d ed. 1988).

nonapparent easement. See discontinuous easement.

noncontinuous easement. See discontinuous easement.

nonexclusive easement. See common easement.

positive easement. See affirmative easement.

prescriptive easement. (1838) An easement created from an open, adverse, and continuous use over a statutory period. — Also termed easement by prescription; adverse easement. See ADVERSE POSSESSION. [Cases: Easements ↷5–11.]

private easement. An easement whose enjoyment is restricted to one specific person or a few specific people. [Cases: Easements ↷52.]

public easement. An easement for the benefit of an entire community, such as the right to travel down a street or a sidewalk.

pure easement. See easement appurtenant.

quasi-easement. 1. An easement-like right occurring when both tracts of land are owned by the same person. • A quasi-easement may become a true easement if the landowner sells one of the tracts. 2. An obligation or license that relates to land but that is not a true easement — for example, a landowner's obligation to maintain the fence between the landowner's tract and someone else's tract.

reciprocal negative easement. An easement created when a landowner sells part of the land and restricts the buyer's use of that part, and, in turn, that same restriction is placed on the part kept by the landowner. • Such an easement usu. arises when the original landowner creates a common scheme of development for smaller tracts that are carved out of the original tract. [Cases: Covenants ↷20; Easements ↷13.]

reserved easement. An easement created by the grantor of real property to benefit the grantor's retained property and to burden the granted property. [Cases: Easements ↷14.]

secondary easement. An easement that is appurtenant to the primary or actual easement; the right to do things that are necessary to fully enjoy the easement itself. [Cases: Easements ↷38.]

solar easement. (1982) An easement created to protect the dominant estate's exposure to direct sunlight. • A solar easement is often created to prevent the servient-estate owner from constructing any building that would cause shadows on the dominant estate, thus interfering with the use of a solar-energy system. Cf. light-and-air easement. [Cases: Easements ↷11, 19, 45.]

"Solar easements . . . remain difficult to describe because of the relationship of the sun to the earth. Shadow variables include land slope, terrain, solar orientation, latitude, time of day, and height of potential obstructions. Lawyers, engineers, land planners, title companies and others have expressed concern over the complexity required to write a solar easement containing highly detailed, technical information often included in these easements." Sandy F. Kraemer, Solar Law 42 (1978).

timber easement. An easement that permits the holder to cut and remove timber from another's property. — Also termed timber rights. [Cases: Logs and Logging ⇨ 3.]

Easter-offerings. Eccles. law. Small sums of money paid as personal tithes to the parochial clergy by the parishioners at Easter. • Under the Recovery of Small Tithes Act (1695), Easter-offerings were recoverable before justices of the peace. St. 7 & 8 Will. 3, ch. 6. — Also termed Easter-dues.

Easter sittings. English law. A term of court beginning on April 15 of each year and usu. ending on May 8, but sometimes extended to May 13. • This was known until 1875 as Easter term. Cf. HILARY SITTINGS; MICHAELMAS SITTINGS; TRINITY SITTINGS.

East Greenwich (east gren-ich). Hist. The name of a royal manor in the county of Kent, England. • Historically, this manor was mentioned in royal grants or patents as descriptive of the tenure of free socage.

East India Company. Hist. The company that was originally established to pursue exclusive trade between England and India, and that later became more active in political affairs than in commerce. • In 1858, the Government of India Act transferred governance over the company's territories to the Crown. The company was dissolved in 1874. St. 21 & 22 Vict., ch. 106.

EAT. abbr. Earnings after taxes.

eat inde sine die (ee-ət in-dee si-nee di-ee) [Latin] Let him go thence without day. • These words were used on a defendant's acquittal, or when a prisoner was to be discharged, to signify that the matter be dismissed without any further judicial proceedings. See GO HENCE WITHOUT DAY.

eaves-drip. 1. The dripping of water from the eaves of a house onto adjacent land. 2. An easement permitting the holder to allow water to drip onto the servient estate. See DRIP RIGHTS; STILLICIDIUM. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses ⇨ 121.]

eavesdropping. (17c) The act of secretly listening to the private conversation of others without their consent. Cf. BUGGING; WIRETAPPING. [Cases: Telecommunications ⇨ 1435.]

EB. abbr. BUREAU OF ECONOMIC AND BUSINESS AFFAIRS.

ebba et fluctus (eb-ə et flək-təs), n. [Latin "ebb and flow"] Hist. The ebb and flow of tide; ebb and flood. • The time of one ebb and flood, plus an additional 40 days, was anciently granted to a person who was excused from court for being beyond seas. See EBB AND FLOW; ESSOIN; BEYOND SEAS.

ebb and flow. (bef. 12c) The coming and going of the tides. • This expression was formerly used to denote the limits of admiralty jurisdiction. The tidewater limitation was abandoned in The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 53 U.S. (12 How.) 443 (1851).

ebdomadarius (eb-dom-ə-dair-ee-əs), n. [Latin "weekly"] Eccles. law. An officer in a cathedral church who supervises the regular performance of divine service and prescribes the duties of choir members.

EBIT. abbr. See earnings before interest and taxes under EARNINGS.

EBITDA. abbr. See EARNINGS.

ebriety, n. Rare. A state or habit of intoxication; inebriation.

EC. abbr. 1. ETHICAL CONSIDERATION. 2. European Community. See EUROPEAN UNION.

ecclesia (i-klee-z[h]ee-ə), n. [Latin fr. Greek ekklesia "assembly"] 1. A place of religious worship. 2. A Christian assembly; a church.

ecclesiarch (i-klee-zee-ahrk), n. The ruler of a church.

ecclesiastic (i-klee-zee-as-tik), n. (17c) A clergyman; a priest; one consecrated to the service of the church. [Cases: Religious Societies ⇨ 27.]

ecclesiastical (i-klee-zee-as-ti-kəl), adj. (15c) Of or relating to the church, esp. as an institution. — Also termed ecclesiastic. [Cases: Religious Societies ⇨ 1.]

ecclesiastical authorities. The church's hierarchy, answerable to the Crown, but set apart from the rest of the citizens, responsible for superintending public worship and other religious ceremonies and for administering spiritual counsel and instruction. • In England, the several levels of the clergy are (1) archbishops and bishops, (2) deans and chapters, (3) archdeacons, (4) rural deans, (5) parsons (under whom are included appropriators) and vicars, and (6) curates. Churchwardens, sidesmen, parish clerks, and sextons are also considered types of ecclesiastical authorities because their duties are connected with the church. Cf. ecclesiastical court under COURT.

ecclesiastical commissioners. Hist. English law. A group of people empowered to suggest measures to improve the established church's efficiency, to be ratified by orders in council. • This body of commissioners, established in 1836 by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act (St. 6 & 7 Will. 4, ch. 77), has been dissolved. Its functions, rights, and property are now vested in the church commissioners.

ecclesiastical controversy. A civil claim based on the decision of a religious association's tribunal against one or more members of the association. • If the decision relates solely to matters within the church, such as church governance or questions of faith, secular courts have no jurisdiction to hear what is effectively an appeal. See Watson v. Jones, 80 U.S. 679, 728–29 (1871). [Cases: Religious Societies ⇨ 14, 24.]

ecclesiastical corporation. See CORPORATION.

ecclesiastical court. See COURT.

ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over ecclesiastical cases and controversies, such as that exercised by ecclesiastical courts.

ecclesiastical law. 1. The body of law derived largely from canon and civil law and administered by the ecclesiastical courts. [Cases: Religious Societies ↷5.] 2. The law governing the doctrine and discipline of a particular church; esp., Anglican canon law. — Also termed jus ecclesiasticum; law spiritual. Cf. CANON LAW.

ecclesiastical matter. A matter that concerns church doctrine, creed, or form of worship, or the adoption and enforcement, within a religious association, of laws and regulations to govern the membership, including the power to exclude from such an association those deemed unworthy of membership. [Cases: Religious Societies ↷5, 28.]

ecclesiastical sentence. The judgment in an ecclesiastical case.

ecclesiastical things. Property (such as buildings and cemeteries) given to a church to support the poor or for any other pious use. [Cases: Religious Societies ↷15.]

ecclesiastical-tithe rentcharge. See RENTCHARGE.

eccidicus (ek-də-kəs), n. [Greek ekdikos “legal representative”] Hist. The attorney, proctor, or advocate of an organization. • A church’s attorney, for example, was known as an episcoporum eccidicus.

e-check. See CHECK.

echevin (esh-ə-van), n. French law. A municipal officer corresponding with the position of alderman or burgess, and sometimes having civil jurisdiction to hear and determine certain minor cases.

echouement (ay-shoo-mawn), n. In French marine law, stranding. See STRANDING.

ECJ. abbr. European Court of Justice.

EOCA. abbr. EQUAL CREDIT OPPORTUNITY ACT.

ecological terrorism. See ecoterrorism under TERRORISM.

ecology of crime. See environmental criminology under CRIMINOLOGY.

e-commerce. (1993) The practice of buying and selling goods and services through online consumer services on the Internet. • The e, a shortened form of electronic, has become a popular prefix for other terms associated with electronic transactions. See ELECTRONIC TRANSACTION.

E-Commerce Directive. See DIRECTIVE ON CERTAIN ASPECTS OF ELECTRONIC COMMERCE IN THE INTERNAL MARKET.

e-commerce insurance. See INSURANCE.

econometrics (ee-kon-ə-me-triks). The branch of economics that expresses economic theory in mathematical terms and that seeks to verify theory through statistical methods.

economic coercion. See COERCION (2).

economic crime. See CRIME.

economic-cure trade embargo. See EMBARGO (3).

economic depreciation. See DEPRECIATION.

Economic Development Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Commerce responsible for helping to develop local economies and distressed areas by making grants for public works and development facilities that are designed to reduce persistent unemployment in economically distressed areas. • The agency was created in 1965 by the Public Works and Economic Development Act. — Abbr. EDA.

economic discrimination. (1919) Any form of discrimination within the field of commerce, such as boycotting a particular product or price-fixing. See BOYCOTT; PRICE DISCRIMINATION; PRICE-FIXING.

economic duress. See DURESS.

economic earnings. See operating earnings under EARNINGS.

Economic Espionage Act. Trade secrets. A 1996 federal statute criminalizing the misappropriation of trade secrets and providing criminal penalties for industrial espionage by or for a foreign entity. • The Act also applies to one who knowingly receives, purchases, or possesses stolen trade-secret information. 18 USCA §§ 1831–1839. — Sometimes termed Industrial Espionage Act.

economic frustration. See commercial frustration under FRUSTRATION.

economic goodwill. See GOODWILL.

economic-harm rule. See ECONOMIC-LOSS RULE.

economic indicator. (1903) A statistical measure (such as housing starts) used to describe the state of the economy or to predict its direction. See INDICATOR.

lagging economic indicator. An economic indicator (such as new-home sales) that tends to respond to the direction of the economy. — Often shortened to lagging indicator.

leading economic indicator. An economic indicator (such as interest rates) that tends to predict the future direction of the economy. — Often shortened to leading indicator.

economic life. The duration of an asset’s profitability, usu. shorter than its physical life.

economic loss. (1905) A monetary loss such as lost wages or lost profits. • The term usu. refers to a type of damages recoverable in a lawsuit. For example, in a products-liability suit, economic loss includes the cost of repair or replacement of defective property, as well as commercial loss for the property’s inadequate value and consequent loss of profits or use. [Cases: Damages ↷36, 40(1); Products Liability ↷156.]

consequential economic loss. Economic loss that proximately results from a defective product and that is beyond direct economic loss. • Examples include lost profits and loss of goodwill or business reputation. [Cases: Damages ↷36; Products Liability ↷156.]

direct economic loss. Economic loss flowing directly from insufficient product quality. • The most common type is loss-of-bargain damages — the difference between the actual value of goods accepted and the value they would have had if they had been delivered as promised or warranted. [Cases: Products Liability ↷156; Torts ↷118.]

economic-loss rule. (1976) Torts. The principle that a plaintiff cannot sue in tort to recover for purely monetary loss — as opposed to physical injury or property damage — caused by the defendant. • Many states recognize an exception to this rule when the defendant commits fraud or negligent misrepresentation, or when a special relationship exists between the parties (such as an attorney-client relationship). — Also termed economic-harm rule; economic-loss doctrine. [Cases: Torts ↷118.]

"One way the courts have attempted to draw a line between tort and warranty is to bar recovery for 'economic loss' in tort. In some states this common law doctrine has achieved the status of the 'economic loss doctrine,' meaning that once loss is defined as 'economic' it cannot be recovered at least in negligence or strict tort and perhaps not in fraud or misrepresentation." 1 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 10-5, at 581 (4th ed. 1995).

economic obsolescence. See OBSOLESCENCE.

economic-out clause. See MARKET-OUT CLAUSE.

economic-realities test. (1956) A method by which a court determines the true nature of a business transaction or situation by examining the totality of the commercial circumstances. • Courts often use this test to determine whether a person is an employee or an independent contractor. Factors include whether the alleged employer controls the details of the work and whether taxes are withheld from payments made to the worker. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷23, 29.]

economic rent. 1. The return gained from an economic resource (such as a worker or land) above the minimum cost of keeping the resource in service. 2. Rent that yields a fair return on capital and expenses.

Economic Research Service. An agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for compiling and analyzing information about domestic and international agricultural developments. — Abbr. ERS.

economic right. (usu. pl.) Copyright. A legal interest and power that concerns a financial benefit from a work, as distinguished from a moral interest that a creator has in a creation. • The term is mostly used in civil-law countries that recognize creators' moral rights.

economics. The social science dealing with the production, distribution, and consumption of goods and services.

Economics and Statistics Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Commerce responsible for maintaining high-quality standards of statistical reporting in the federal government and for responding to the needs of the Department of Commerce and the rest of the executive branch for statistical information and analysis. • The unit comprises the Bureau of the Census, the Bureau of Economic Analysis, and STAT-USA. — Abbr. ESA.

economic strike. See STRIKE.

economic-substance doctrine. Tax. The principle that a transaction must be treated as a sham for tax purposes if (1) the transaction has no genuine business purpose, and (2) there is no reasonable possibility that it will generate a profit in the absence of tax benefits. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3071.]

economic substantive due process. See DUE PROCESS.

economic warfare. See WARFARE.

economic unit. Eminent domain. In a partial-condemnation case, the property that is used to determine the fair-market value of the portion that is taken by eminent domain. • The land taken may be a large or small portion of the entire property. To determine how much property to include in an economic unit, three factors are weighed: (1) unity of use, (2) unity of ownership, and (3) contiguity. Of these, the most important is unity of use. See LARGER PARCEL.

economic waste. Overproduction or excessive drilling of oil or gas. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷78.1(11), 92.53.]

economist. (16c) A professional who studies economics and the economy; a specialist in economics.

Edicts of Justinian. Roman law. Thirteen constitutions or laws of Justinian, appended to the Greek collection of the Novels in the Venetian manuscript. • The Edicts were confined to administrative matters in the provinces of the Roman Empire. They were not known to the glossators.

edictum (ə-dik-təm), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. In imperial Rome, an edict or mandate; an ordinance or law proclaimed by the emperor. • An edict was a constitution of the emperor acting on his own initiative, differing from a rescript in not being returned in the way of answer; from a decree in not being given in judgment; and from both in not being founded upon solicitation. As an imperial constitution, it had the force of law. 2. A declaration by a magistrate relevant to his jurisdiction or area of competence; esp., the pronouncement of a magistrate of the principles by which he proposed to act in office. See edictum annum; FORMULA (1). Pl. edicta.

edictum aedilicium (ee-dik-təm ee-də-lish-ee-əm). A curule aedile's edict regarding remedies in the public market; esp., an edict giving remedies for sales of defective goods, animals, or slaves. • An aedile could, for instance, declare that sellers would be strictly liable for latent defects in goods, and dictate how dogs and wild animals for sale should be confined to protect the public. — Also written aedilitium edictum. Pl. edicta aedilicia.

edictum annum (an-yoo-əm). An edict issued by a praetor at the beginning of the one-year term of office. Pl. edicta annua.

edictum perpetuum (pə-ˈpech-oo-əm). The urban praetor's edict in its permanent form, edited by Julian in A.D. 131 and given legislative force. • This term originally had the narrower sense of the praetors' general edicts as opposed to edicts issued in specific cases. — Also termed perpetual edict. Pl. edicta perpetua.

edictum praetoris (pri-tor-əs). The proclamation issued by a praetor at the start of the year's term, explaining the grounds on which a formula would be granted. — Also termed praetorian edict. See edictum annum; FORMULA (1).

eject, vb. (15c) 1. To cast or throw out. 2. To oust or dispossess; to put or turn out of possession. 3. To expel or thrust out forcibly (e.g., disorderly patrons). — ejector, vb.

ejection, n. (16c) 1. An expulsion by action of law or by actual or threatened physical force. See OUSTER. 2. EJECTMENT (2).

ejectione custodiae. See DE EJECTIONE CUSTODIAE.

ejectione firmae. See DE EJECTIONE FIRMAE.

ejectment. (16c) 1. The ejection of an owner or occupier from property. 2. A legal action by which a person wrongfully ejected from property seeks to recover possession, damages, and costs. 3. The writ by which such an action is begun. • The essential allegations in an action for ejectment are that (1) the plaintiff has title to the land, (2) the plaintiff has been wrongfully dispossessed or ousted, and (3) the plaintiff has suffered damages. — Also termed action of ejectment; action for the recovery of land; ejection. See FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER. Cf. EVICITION; OUSTER. [Cases: Ejectment ↷ 1.]

“The evolution of the action of ejectment from its primitive form as a mere action of trespass, enabling a lessee of lands to recover damages when ousted of his possession, through a series of most ingenious fictions, which were afterwards added to enable him to recover possession as well, until its final establishment as the proper method of trying all disputed titles to real property, presents to the student of legal science one of the most interesting studies that the history of the law affords. Few remedies have passed through so many changes of form, both in pleading and practice, and yet retained the same distinctive character that marked their origin.” George W. Warvelle, A Treatise on the Principles and Practice of the Action of Ejectment § 4, at 4-5 (1905).

equitable ejectment. (1820) A proceeding brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land and for other purposes. • Though in the form of an ejectment action, this proceeding is in reality a substitute for a bill in equity. [Cases: Ejectment ↷ 156.]

justice ejectment. (1900) A statutory proceeding to evict a tenant who has held over after termination of the lease or breach of its conditions.

ejectment bill. (18c) Equity practice. A bill in equity brought to recover real property and an accounting of rents and profits, without setting out a distinct ground of equity jurisdiction (and thus demurrable). [Cases: Ejectment ↷ 62.]

ejectment de garde. See DE EJECTIONE CUSTODIAE.

ejector, n. (17c) One who ejects, puts out, or dispossesses another.

casual ejector. The nominal defendant in an ejectment action who, under a legal fiction, is supposed to come casually or by accident upon the premises and to eject the lawful possessor. [Cases: Ejectment ↷ 46.]

ejectum (i-jek-təm), n. Something that is cast out, esp. by the sea. See FLOTSAM. Cf. JETSAM; LAGAN (1); WAVESON.

ejectoria (ay-hair-see-tor-ee-ə), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. An action lying against a shipowner upon the contracts or obligations made by the master for repairs or supplies. • This action corresponds to the actio exercitoria of Roman law. See action exersitoria under ACTIO.

ejido (ay-hee-doh), n. [fr. Latin exitus “a going out”] (19c) Spanish law. Common land or pasture; esp., land used in common by inhabitants of a city, pueblo, or town for such things as pasture, wood, and threshing-ground; commons. — Also termed exidos; exedos. See COMMON (2).

ejuration (ej-ə-ray-shən). The renouncing or resigning of one’s place.

eiusdem generis (ee-jəs-dəm jen-ə-ris also ee-joos- or ee-yoos-). [Latin “of the same kind or class”] (17c) 1. A canon of construction holding that when a general word or phrase follows a list of specifics, the general word or phrase will be interpreted to include only items of the same class as those listed. • For example, in the phrase horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, goats, or any other farm animals, the general language or any other farm animals — despite its seeming breadth — would probably be held to include only four-legged, hooved mammals typically found on farms, and thus would exclude chickens. — Also termed Lord Tenterden’s rule. Cf. EXPRESSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALTERIUS; NOSCITUR A SOCIIS; RULE OF RANK. [Cases: Contracts ↷ 156; Statutes ↷ 194.] 2. Loosely, NOSCITUR A SOCIIS.

eiusdem negotii (ee-jəs-dəm ni-goh-shee-i). [Latin] Hist. Part of the same transaction.

elaborare (i-lab-ə-rair-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. To gain, acquire, or purchase, as by labor and industry.

electee. 1. A person chosen or elected. 2. A person to whom the law gives a choice about status.

electing small-business trust. See TRUST (3).

electio est creditoris (i-lek-shee-oh est kred-i-tor-is).

[Law Latin] Scots law. The creditor has the election or choice. • The phrase appeared in reference to the creditor's right to apply payments to one debt or another. Cf. ELECTIO EST DEBITORIS.

"Electio est creditoris . . . This has reference to a creditor's right to apply indefinite payments, made by his debtor, to that debt or obligation which is least secured; but where the debtor at the time of payment appropriates the sum paid, towards extinction of a particular debt, it must be so applied." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 184 (4th ed. 1894).

electio est debitoris (i-lek-shee-oh est deb-i-tor-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. The debtor has the election or choice.

• If the law provided alternative methods of fulfilling an obligation, the debtor could choose the method of payment. Cf. ELECTIO EST CREDITORIS.

election, n. (13c) 1. The exercise of a choice; esp., the act of choosing from several possible rights or remedies in a way that precludes the use of other rights or remedies <the taxpayers' election to file jointly instead of separately>. See ELECTION OF REMEDIES. 2. The doctrine by which a person is compelled to choose between accepting a benefit under a legal instrument and retaining some property right to which the person is already entitled; an obligation imposed on a party to choose between alternative rights or claims, so that the party is entitled to enjoy only one <the prevailing plaintiff was put to an election between out-of-pocket damages and lost profits>. — Also termed equitable election. See RIGHT OF ELECTION. [Cases: Election of Remedies ↻1.] 3. The process of selecting a person to occupy an office (usu. a public office), membership, award, or other title or status <the 2004 congressional election>. Cf. two-round voting under VOTING. [Cases: Elections ↻1.] — elect, vb. — elective, adj.

by-election. An election specially held to fill a vacant post. — Also spelled bye-election. Cf. general election.

representation election. An election held by the National Labor Relations Board to decide whether a certain union will represent employees in a bargaining unit. See BARGAINING UNIT. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻1187.]

runoff election. An election held after a general election, in which the two candidates who received the most votes — neither of whom received a majority — run against each other so that the winner can be determined. Cf. two-round voting under VOTING.

special election. An election that occurs in an interim between general elections, usu. to fill a sudden vacancy in office. Cf. by-election.

4. Patents. A patent applicant's choice of a single invention to continue prosecuting under the original application, after an examiner has required a restriction. See RESTRICTION (4). [Cases: Patents ↻104.]

election of species. A patent applicant's choice of one alternative over others after an examiner determines that a generic claim is not allowable. [Cases: Patents ↻104.]

election, doctrine of. A doctrine holding that when a person has contracted with an agent without knowing of the agency and later learns of the principal's identity, the person may enforce the contract against either the agent or the principal, but not both. See ELECTION (1). [Cases: Principal and Agent ↻145(4).]

election, estoppel by. See estoppel by election under ESTOPPEL.

election board. 1. A board of inspectors or commissioners appointed for each election precinct to determine voter qualification, to supervise the polling, and often to ascertain and report the results. 2. A local agency charged with the conduct of elections. [Cases: Elections ↻49–58.]

election by spouse. See RIGHT OF ELECTION.

election contest. A challenge by an election's loser against the winner, calling for an analysis of the election returns, which may include reviewing voter qualifications or re-counting the ballots. [Cases: Elections ↷ 148, 269–306.]

election district. See DISTRICT.

election dower. See DOWER.

election fraud. (18c) Illegal conduct committed in an election, usu. in the form of fraudulent voting. • Examples include voting twice, voting under another person's name (usu. a deceased person), or voting while ineligible. [Cases: Elections ↷ 318.]

election judge. 1. A person appointed to supervise an election at the precinct level; a local representative of an election board. [Cases: Elections ↷ 49.] 2. English law. One of two puisne judges of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court selected to try election petitions.

election of remedies. (18c) 1. A claimant's act of choosing between two or more concurrent but inconsistent remedies based on a single set of facts. [Cases: Election of Remedies ↷ 1.] 2. The affirmative defense barring a litigant from pursuing a remedy inconsistent with another remedy already pursued, when that other remedy has given the litigant an advantage over, or has damaged, the opposing party. • This doctrine has largely fallen into disrepute and is now rarely applied. 3. The affirmative defense that a claimant cannot simultaneously recover damages based on two different liability findings if the injury is the same for both claims, thus creating a double recovery. Cf. alternative relief under RELIEF (3).

election of species. See ELECTION (4).

election petition. English law. A petition for inquiry into the validity of a Parliament member's election, when the member's return is allegedly invalid for bribery or other reason.

election returns. The report made to the board of canvassers or the election board, by those charged with tallying votes, of the number of votes cast for a particular candidate or proposition. [Cases: Elections ↷ 126(7), 246.] elective franchise. See FRANCHISE (1).

elective office. An office that is filled by popular election rather than by appointment.

elective share. (1931) Wills & estates. The percentage of a deceased spouse's estate, set by statute, that a surviving spouse (or sometimes a child) may choose to receive instead of taking under a will or in the event of being unjustifiably disinherited. — Also termed forced share; statutory share; statutory forced share. See RIGHT OF ELECTION. [Cases: Wills ↷ 778–803.]

"In many states today, common-law dower and curtesy have been wholly replaced by statutes that make the surviving spouse an 'heir' of the deceased spouse and fix a minimum percentage of the decedent's estate (real and personal) to which the survivor will be entitled regardless of efforts of the deceased spouse to prevent it by will. This statutory minimum — called the statutory forced share — is typically an estate in fee simple, not merely a life estate. A serious disadvantage to the surviving spouse under many of these statutes, however, is that the minimum percentage applies only to property owned by the decedent at death. Both husbands and wives can, under such statutes, defeat their spouses' forced shares by inter vivos transfer." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 37–38 (2d ed. 1984).

elector. (15c) 1. A member of the electoral college chosen to elect the U.S. President and Vice President. — Also termed presidential elector. [Cases: United States ↷ 25.] 2. A voter. [Cases: Elections ↷ 59.]

qualified elector. A legal voter; a person who meets the voting requirements for age, residency, and registration and who has the present right to vote in an election. See VOTER. [Cases: Elections ↷ 59–87.]

3. A person who chooses between alternative rights or claims. 4. Hist. The title of certain German princes who had a voice in electing the Holy Roman Emperors. • This office sometimes became hereditary and was connected with territorial possessions.

electoral college. (often cap.) (17c) The body of electors chosen from each state to formally elect the U.S. President and Vice President by casting votes based on the popular vote. [Cases: United States ↷ 25.]

electoral process. (1851) 1. The method by which a person is elected to public office in a democratic society. 2. The taking and counting of votes.

electric chair. (1889) A chair that is wired so that electrodes can be fastened to a condemned person's body and a lethal charge passed through the body for the purpose of carrying out a death penalty. • The electric chair was first used in 1890 at the Auburn State Prison in New York.

electronic agent. Any electronic or automated means, such as a computer program, that can independently initiate or respond to an action or message without a human's review.

electronic cash. See e-money under MONEY.

electronic chattel paper. See CHATTEL PAPER.

electronic check. See e-check under CHECK.

electronic-check conversion. In a discrete electronic-funds transfer, the process by which a paper check is used as the source of information for the check number, account number, and bank-routing number. • The check itself is not considered the method of payment. See e-check under CHECK.

Electronic Commerce Directive. See DIRECTIVE ON CERTAIN ASPECTS OF ELECTRONIC COMMERCE IN THE INTERNAL MARKET.

Electronic Communications Privacy Act. A federal statute that limits the circumstances under which the federal and state government may gain access to oral, wire, and electronic communications. 18 USCA § 2510. [Cases: Telecommunications ↷ 1297, 1335, 1342, 1435.] electronic contract. See E-CONTRACT.

Electronic Data Interchange agreement. See EDI AGREEMENT.

electronic funds transfer. See FUNDS TRANSFER.

electronic currency. See e-money under MONEY.

electronic signature. See SIGNATURE.

Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act. See E-SIGN ACT.

electronic surveillance. 1. See EAVESDROPPING. 2. See WIRETAPPING.

electronic transaction. (1975) A transaction formed by electronic messages in which the messages of one or both parties will not be reviewed by an individual as an expected step in forming a contract. UCC § 2A-102(a) (16).

eleemosynae (el-ə-mos-ə-nee), n. pl. Eccles. law. Possessions belonging to the church. [Cases: Religious Societies ↷15.]

eleemosynaria (el-ə-mos-ə-nair-ee-ə), n. Hist. 1. The place in a religious house or church where the common alms were deposited, to be distributed to the poor by the almoner. 2. The office of almoner.

eleemosynarius (el-ə-mos-ə-nair-ee-əs), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. An almoner, or chief officer, who received the eleemosynary rents and gifts and distributed them to pious and charitable uses. 2. The name of an officer (Lord Almoner) of the English kings, in former times, who distributed the royal alms or bounty.

eleemosynary (el-ə-mos-ə-ner-ee), adj. (17c) Of, relating to, or assisted by charity; not-for-profit <an eleemosynary institution>. [Cases: Charities ↷1.] eleemosynary corporation. See charitable corporation under CORPORATION.

eleemosynary defense. See charitable immunity under IMMUNITY (2).

elegant (el-ə-gan-tər), adv. Civil law. Accurately; with discrimination; neatly.

elegit (ə-lee-jit). [Latin "he has chosen"] (16c) Hist. A writ of execution (first given by 13 Edw., ch. 18) either upon a judgment for a debt or damages or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the king's court. • Under it, the defendant's goods and chattels were appraised and, except for plow beasts, delivered to the plaintiff to satisfy the debt. If the goods were not sufficient to pay the debt, then the portion of the defendant's freehold lands held at the time of judgment was also delivered to the plaintiff, to hold until the debt was satisfied out of rents and profits or until the defendant's interest expired. During this period the plaintiff was called tenant by elegit, and the estate an estate by elegit. The writ was abolished in England in 1956, and it is no longer used anywhere in the United States.

element. (13c) 1. A constituent part of a claim that must be proved for the claim to succeed <Burke failed to prove the element of proximate cause in prosecuting his negligence claim>. 2. Patents. A discretely claimed component of a patent claim. • For a prior-art reference to anticipate a claim, it must teach each and every claim element. To recover for patent infringement, the plaintiff must prove that the accused product infringes every element of at least one claim, either literally or under the doctrine of equivalents. — Also termed (in sense 2) limitation. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS. [Cases: Patents ↷101(1).] elemental fact. See ultimate fact under FACT.

elements of crime. (1909) The constituent parts of a crime — usu. consisting of the actus reus, mens rea, and causation — that the prosecution must prove to sustain a conviction. • The term is more broadly defined by the Model Penal Code in § 1.13(9) to refer to each component of the actus reus, causation, the mens rea, any grading factors, and the negative of any defense.

Eleventh Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1795, prohibiting a federal court from hearing an action against a state by a person who is not a citizen of that state. See sovereign immunity under IMMUNITY (1). [Cases: Federal Courts ↷265-268.]

eligible, adj. (15c) Fit and proper to be selected or to receive a benefit; legally qualified for an office, privilege, or status. — eligibility, n.

elisor (i-lɪ-zər). (17c) A person appointed by a court to assemble a jury, serve a writ, or perform other duties of the sheriff or coroner if either is disqualified. — Also spelled eslisor. [Cases: Sheriffs and Constables ↷26.]

Elkins Act. A 1903 federal law that strengthened the Interstate Commerce Act by prohibiting rebates and other forms of preferential treatment to large carriers. 49 USCA §§ 41-43 (superseded).

ell (el). Hist. A measure of length corresponding to the modern yard.

Ellenborough's Act (el-ən-brəz). An English law (the Malicious Shooting and Stabbing Act) of 1803 punishing offenses against the person. St. 43 Geo. 3, ch. 58.

elogium (i-loh-jee-əm), n. Civil law. 1. A will or testament. 2. A clause or provision in a will or testament.

eloign (i-loyn), vb. (15c) 1. To remove (a person or property) from a court's or sheriff's jurisdiction. 2. To remove to a distance; conceal. — Also spelled eloin. — eloigner, n.

eloignment (i-loyn-mənt), n. (17c) The getting of a thing or person out of the way, or removing it to a distance, so as to be out of reach.

elongata (ee-lawng-gay-tə). [Latin] 1. adj. Eloigned; carried away to a distance. 2. ELONGATUS.

elongatus (ee-lawng-gay-təs). [Latin "eloigned"] A return made by a sheriff to a writ de homine replegiando, stating that the party to be replevied has been eloigned, or conveyed out of the sheriff's jurisdiction. — Also termed elongata.

elongavit (ee-lawng-gay-vit). [Latin "he has eloigned"] In a proceeding by foreign attachment, the serjeant-at-mace's return that the garnishee has eloigned the goods, so that they cannot be appraised. • Upon such a return, judgment was given for the plaintiff that an inquiry be made into the eloigned goods. The inquiry was then set for trial and an assessment made by a jury.

elope, vb. (17c) 1. Archaic. To run away; escape. 2. Archaic. To abandon one's husband and run away with a lover. 3. To run away secretly for the purpose of getting married, often without parental consent. — elopement, n.

elsewhere, adv. (bef. 12c) In another place. • In shipping articles, this term, following the designation of the port of destination, must be construed either as void for uncertainty or as subordinate to the principal voyage stated in the preceding words. [Cases: Seamen ↻7.]

eluviation (i-loo-vee-ay-shən). (1899) Movement of soil caused by excessive water in the soil.

e-mail, n. (1982) A communication exchanged between people by computer, through either a local area network or the Internet. [Cases: Telecommunications ↻1335, 1342, 1343, 1439.] — Also spelled email. — e-mail, vb.

emanation. (16c) 1. The act of coming or flowing forth from something. 2. That which flows or comes forth from something; an effluence.

emancipate, vb. (17c) 1. To set free from legal, social, or political restraint; esp., to free from slavery or bondage. [Cases: Slaves ↻23.] 2. To release (a child) from the control, support, and responsibility of a parent or guardian. [Cases: Child Support ↻386–392; Parent and Child ↻16.] — emancipative, emancipatory, adj. — emancipator, n.

emancipated minor. See MINOR.

emancipatio. See EMANCIPATION (3).

emancipation. (17c) 1. The act by which one who was under another's power and control is freed. 2. A surrender and renunciation of the correlative rights and duties concerning the care, custody, and earnings of a child; the act by which a parent (historically a father) frees a child and gives the child the right to his or her own earnings. • This act also frees the parent from all legal obligations of support. Emancipation may take place by agreement between the parent and child, by operation of law (as when the parent abandons or fails to support the child), or when the child gets legally married or enters the armed forces. [Cases: Child Support ↻386–392; Parent and Child ↻16.] 3. Roman law. The enfranchisement of a son by his father, accomplished through the formality of an imaginary sale. • Justinian substituted the simpler proceeding of a manumission before a magistrate. — Also termed (in sense 3) emancipatio. Cf. MANCIPATION.

constructive emancipation. Emancipation by law, as opposed to a voluntary act of the parent. • Constructive emancipation may occur in several ways, as by

(1) conduct of the parent that is inconsistent with the performance of parental duties, (2) marriage of the child, or (3) the child's service in the armed forces. [Cases: Child Support ↻386–392; Parent and Child ↻16.]

partial emancipation. Emancipation that frees a child for only a part of the period of minority, or from only a part of the parent's rights, or for only some purposes. [Cases: Child Support ↻386–392; Parent and Child ↻16.]

emancipation act. See MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACTS.

Emancipation Proclamation. An executive proclamation, issued by President Abraham Lincoln on January 1, 1863, declaring that all persons held in slavery in designated states and districts were freed.

embargo, n. (16c) 1. A government's wartime or peacetime detention of an offending nation's private ships found in the ports of the aggrieved nation <the President called off the embargo of Iraq's ships after the war ended>. — Also spelled imbargo. — Also termed hostile embargo. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↻12.]

"A hostile embargo is a kind of reprisal by one nation upon vessels within its ports belonging to another nation with which a difference exists, for the purpose of forcing it to do justice. If this measure should be followed by war, the vessels are regarded as captured, if by peace, they are restored." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 118, at 187 (5th ed. 1878).

2. A nation's detention of all ships in its own ports, including its own, to promote safety and to preclude transportation to an offending nation <the embargo of all U.S. ships traveling to Iraq remained in effect until hostilities subsided>. — Also termed civil embargo. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↻15.]

"A civil embargo may be laid for the purpose of national welfare or safety, as for the protection of commercial vessels against the rules of belligerent powers which would expose them to capture. Such was the measure adopted by the United States in December 1807, which detained in port all vessels except those which had a public commission, and those that were already laden or should sail in ballast. The right to adopt such a measure of temporary non-intercourse is undoubted." Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 118, at 187 (5th ed. 1878).

embassy. (1534) 1. The building in which a diplomatic body is located; esp., the residence of the ambassador. 2. A body of diplomatic representatives headed by an ambassador; a diplomatic mission on the ambassadorial level. 3. The mission, business, and function of an ambassador. Cf. LEGATION. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls ↷3.]

Ember Days. Eccles. law. The days — which the ancient church fathers called quatuor tempora jejunii — that are observed on the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday following (1) Quadragesima Sunday (the first Sunday in Lent), (2) Whitsuntide, or Holyrood Day, in September, and (3) St. Lucy's day, about the middle of December. • Almanacs refer to the weeks in which these days fall as Ember Weeks; they are now chiefly noticed because, by tradition, the Sundays following Ember Days are used to ordain priests and deacons, although the canon law allows bishops to ordain on any Sunday or holiday.

embezzlement, n. (15c) The fraudulent taking of personal property with which one has been entrusted, esp. as a fiduciary. • The criminal intent for embezzlement — unlike larceny and false pretenses — arises after taking possession (not before or during the taking). — Also termed defalcation; peculation. See LARCENY; FALSE PRETENSES. [Cases: Embezzlement ↷1.] — embezzle, vb. — embezzler, n.

"Embezzlement is not a common-law crime. It is the result of legislative efforts to make provision for an unreasonable gap which appeared in the law of larceny as it developed. Under the early English statute embezzlement was made a misdemeanor, but under most modern American statutes it is either a felony or a misdemeanor depending upon the value of the property converted." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 351 (3d ed. 1982).

"Embezzlement can be defined as the fraudulent conversion of the property of another by one who has lawful possession of the property and whose fraudulent conversion has been made punishable by the statute." Arnold H. Loewy, Criminal Law in a Nutshell 94 (2d ed. 1987).

emblem. (15c) 1. A flag, armorial bearing, or other symbol of a country, organization, or movement. 2. Loosely, something that is used to symbolize something else.

emblemata Triboniani (em-blee-mə-tə trə-boh-nee-ay-nī). [Latin] Roman law. Alterations, modifications, and additions to the writings of the older jurists that were combined to form the Digest or Pandects, and generally termed interpolations. • Justinian appointed a commission over which Tribonian presided to harmonize contradictions, delete obsolete matter, and bring the law up to date. This term is considered old-fashioned by modern Romanists. See INTERPOLATIONS.

emblems (em-blə-mənts). (15c) 1. The growing crop annually produced by labor, as opposed to a crop occurring naturally. • Emblems are considered personal property that the executor or administrator of a deceased tenant may harvest and take regardless of who may have since occupied the land. — Also termed fructus industriales. [Cases: Crops ↷1.] 2. The tenant's right to harvest and take away such crops after the tenancy has ended. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ↷139(2).]

"At common law those products of the earth which are annual, and are raised by yearly manurance and labor, and essentially owe their annual existence to the cultivation by man, [are] termed 'emblems' and sometimes 'fructus industriales.'" Sparrow v. Pond, 52 N.W. 36 (Minn. 1892).

"The law of emblems has its origin and matrix, in the privilege, recognized at least as early as the fifteenth century, of the tenant for an uncertain term, to harvest and remove, even after the tenancy had terminated, the annual crop, which he had planted and nurtured." Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property § 159, at 806 (2d ed. 1955).

emblers de gentz (em-blərz də jents). [Law French] A theft from the people. • The phrase occurs in the old English rolls of Parliament — for example, "Whereas divers murders, emblers de gentz, and robberies are committed . . ."

embodied technology. Intellectual property. Know-how or knowledge that is manifest in products and equipment, including software. Cf. DISEMBODIED TECHNOLOGY.

embodiment. Patents. 1. The tangible manifestation of an invention. [Cases: Patents ↷99.] 2. The method for using this tangible form. 3. The part of a patent application or patent that describes a concrete manifestation of the invention. • Embodiments are less common in software or process patents than in manufacturing-related patents.

embossed seal. See NOTARY SEAL.

embrace, vb. To attempt to influence (a judge or juror) by corruption, or to behave in a way that might have a corrupting influence; to engage in embracery.

embracee (em-bray-see). The bribe-taker in the offense of embracery.

embracer (im-brays-ər). [fr. Old French embraseor "one who kindles or instigates," fr. embraser "to set fire to"] (15c) The bribe-giver in the offense of embracery; one who attempts to influence a judge or a juror by means of corruption. — Also spelled embraseor. embracery (im-brays-ə-ree), n. (15c) The attempt to corrupt or wrongfully influence a judge or juror, esp. by threats or bribery. — Also spelled imbracery. — Also termed jury-tampering; laboring a jury. Cf. JURY-FIXING; JURY-PACKING. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷45.35.]

"The word 'embracery' . . . has tended to disappear. It is included in some of the codes but the tendency has been to divide this common-law offense into two parts, placing that which is appropriate thereto in sections on bribery and the remainder in provisions dealing with obstruction of justice." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 552 (3d ed. 1982).

embryo (em-bree-oh). A developing but unborn or unhatched animal; esp., an unborn human from conception until the development of organs (i.e., until about the eighth week of pregnancy). Cf. FETUS; ZYGOTE.

embryo formatus (for-may-təs). Eccles. law. A human embryo organized into human shape and endowed with a soul. • Though rejected in the early doctrine of the Christian church, the distinction between the embryo formatus and informatus was accepted by Gratian (regarded as the founder of canon law) in his Decretum (ca. 1140), in which he said that abortion is not murder if the fetus has not yet been infused with a soul. Though he did not specify the time of formation or animation, by the 16th century canonists accepted that the time of formation and animation was the 40th day after conception for the male fetus and the 80th day for the female. — Also termed embryo animatus.

embryo informatus (in-for-may-təs). Eccles. law. A human embryo before it has been endowed with a soul. — Also termed embryo inanimatus.

embryo adoption. See ADOPTION.

emend (i-mend), vb. (15c) To correct or revise; esp., to edit or change (a text).

emenda (ee-men-də), n. pl. [Latin “amends”] Things given in reparation for a trespass.

emendatio (ee-men-day-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. The power of amending and correcting abuses, according to certain rules and measures.

emendatio panis et cerevisiae (ee-men-day-shee-oh pan-is et ser-ə-vizh-ee-ee). [Latin “the correction of bread and ale”] The power of supervising and correcting (assizing) the weights and measures of bread and ale.

emendation (ee-men-day-shən). (16c) 1. Correction or revision, esp. of a text. 2. Hist. The correction of an error or wrongdoing; atonement for a criminal offense, esp. by the payment of money. • As criminal law developed over time, emendation by payment of wer or wite gradually faded away and was replaced by harsher punishments.

e mera gratia (ee meer-ə gray-shee-ə). [Latin] Out of mere grace or favor.

emergency circumstances. See exigent circumstances under CIRCUMSTANCE.

Emergency Court of Appeals. Hist. A temporary court, established during World War II, whose purpose was to review wage- and price-control matters. • The court was created in 1942 and abolished in 1962. Cf. TEMPORARY EMERGENCY COURT OF APPEALS. [Cases: War and National Emergency ⇨108, 206.]

emergency doctrine. (1929) 1. A legal principle exempting a person from the ordinary standard of reasonable care if that person acted instinctively to meet a sudden and urgent need for aid. — Also termed imminent-peril doctrine; sudden-emergency doctrine; sudden-peril doctrine; sudden-peril rule. [Cases: Negligence ⇨291.] 2. A legal principle by which consent to medical treatment in a dire situation is inferred when neither the patient nor a responsible party can consent but a reasonable person would do so. — Also termed (in sense 2) emergency-treatment doctrine. Cf. GOOD SAMARITAN DOCTRINE; RESCUE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Health ⇨909.] 3. The principle that a police officer may conduct a search without a warrant if the officer has probable cause and reasonably believes that immediate action is needed to protect life or property. — Also termed emergency exception. See exigent circumstances under CIRCUMSTANCE.

emergency-employment doctrine. The principle that an employee may enlist another’s help in dealing with an emergency that falls within the scope of the employee’s duties and that could not be overcome without the assistance of the other person.

emergency exception. See EMERGENCY DOCTRINE (3).

emergency jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

Emergency Preparedness and Response Directorate. The former division of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security responsible for coordinating relief and recovery efforts and for developing and coordinating plans to prevent terrorism and to minimize risks of danger from natural disasters. • The Directorate included the Federal Emergency Management Agency and also coordinated efforts with the Strategic National Stockpile and the National Disaster Medical System from the Department of Health and Human Services, the Nuclear Incident Response Team from the Department of Energy, the Domestic Emergency Support Teams from the Department of Justice, the National Domestic Preparedness Office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and state and local emergency responders. It was abolished in July 2005. — Abbr. EPR. [Cases: United States ⇨82(5).] emergency protective order. See PROTECTIVE ORDER.

emergency search. See SEARCH.

emergency-treatment doctrine. See EMERGENCY DOCTRINE (2).

emerita. See EMERITUS.

emeritus. (18c) An honorary title conferred on a former officer or professor who has honorably retired, usu. after serving for an extended period well beyond the norm. • The term is loosely used as an adjective meaning “honored,” but it is not a synonym for “former,” “retired,” or “immediate past” (as in “immediate past president”). See HONORARY. Pl. emeriti. Fem. emerita. Fem. pl. emeritae.

emigrant (em-ə-grənt), n. (18c) One who leaves his or her country for any reason with the intent to establish a permanent residence elsewhere. Cf. IMMIGRANT.

emigration (em-ə-gray-shən), n. (17c) The act of leaving a country with the intent not to return and to reside elsewhere. Cf. IMMIGRATION. — emigrate, vb.

“Emigration is usually defined as the voluntary removal of an individual from his home State with the intention of residing abroad. However, not all emigration is voluntary; there sometimes exists forced emigration, even mass emigration. Emigration may also be due to flight for political reasons or expulsion. One then speaks of refugees or exiles.” Paul Weis, “Emigration,” in 2 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 76 (1995).

émigré (em-ə-gray or em-ə-gray), n. [French] (18c) One who is forced to leave his or her country for political reasons. — Also spelled émigré.

eminence (em-ə-nənts), (17c) (usu. cap.) Eccles. law. An honorary title given to cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church. • Until the pontificate of Urban VIII, cardinals were called illustrissimi and reverendissimi.

eminent domain. (18c) The inherent power of a governmental entity to take privately owned property, esp. land, and convert it to public use, subject to reasonable compensation for the taking. — Also (rarely) termed compulsory purchase; (in Scots law) compulsory surrender. See CONDEMNATION (2); EXPROPRIATION; TAKING (2). [Cases: Eminent Domain ↷ 1, 69.]

"The term 'eminent domain' is said to have originated with Grotius, the seventeenth century legal scholar. Grotius believed that the state possessed the power to take or destroy property for the benefit of the social unit, but he believed that when the state so acted, it was obligated to compensate the injured property owner for his losses. Blackstone, too, believed that society had no general power to take the private property of landowners, except on the payment of a reasonable price. The just compensation clause of the fifth amendment to the Constitution was built upon this concept of a moral obligation to pay for governmental interference with private property. . . . No provision for the power of eminent domain appears in the federal Constitution. The Supreme Court, however, has said that the power of eminent domain is an incident of federal sovereignty and an 'offspring of political necessity.' The Court has also noted that the fifth amendment's limitation on taking private property is a tacit recognition that the power to take private property exists." John E. Nowak & Ronald D. Rotunda, Constitutional Law § 11.11, at 424–25 (4th ed. 1991) (quoting Bauman v. Ross, 167 U.S. 548, 574, 17 S.Ct. 966, 976 (1897)).

Eminent Domain Clause. The Fifth Amendment provision providing that private property cannot be taken for public use without just compensation. See TAKINGS CLAUSE. [Cases: Eminent Domain ↷ 70.]

emissary. (17c) One sent on a special mission as another's agent or representative, esp. to promote a cause or to gain information.

emit, vb. (16c) 1. To give off or discharge into the air <emit light>. 2. To issue with authority <emit a new series of currency>. — emission, n.

emolument (i-mol-yə-mənt), n. (15c) (usu. pl.) Any advantage, profit, or gain received as a result of one's employment or one's holding of office. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↷ 94.]

Emoluments Clause. (1991) 1. The clause of the United States Constitution preventing members of Congress from continuing to serve in Congress after accepting an appointment to another federal office, and also prohibiting such an appointment if the office was created or its emoluments increased while the Senator or Representative served in Congress. U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 2. — Also written Emolument Clause. 2. FOREIGN EMOLUMENTS CLAUSE.

e-money. See MONEY.

emotional distress. (1933) A highly unpleasant mental reaction (such as anguish, grief, fright, humiliation, or fury) that results from another person's conduct; emotional pain and suffering. • Emotional distress, when severe enough, can form a basis for the recovery of tort damages. — Also termed emotional harm; mental anguish; mental distress; mental suffering. See INTENTIONAL INFLECTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS; NEGLIGENT INFLECTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS. Cf. mental cruelty under CRUELTY. [Cases: Damages ↷ 57.1–57.60.]

"Emotional distress passes under various names, such as mental suffering, mental anguish, mental or nervous shock, or the like. It includes all highly unpleasant mental reactions, such as fright, horror, grief, shame, humiliation, embarrassment, anger, chagrin, disappointment, worry, and nausea. It is only where it is extreme that the liability arises. Complete emotional tranquility is seldom attainable in this world, and some degree of transient and trivial emotional distress is a part of the price of living among people. The law intervenes only where the distress inflicted is so severe that no reasonable man could be expected to endure it. The intensity and the duration of the distress are factors to be considered in determining its severity. Severe distress must be proved; but in many cases the extreme and outrageous character of the defendant's conduct is in itself important evidence that the distress has existed." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 46 cmt. j (1965).

emotional harm. See EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

emotional incapacity. 1. The inability to control one's emotions or express appropriate emotions because of a mental disorder. 2. Hist. Evidence. (Of a witness) hostility or partiality rooted in bias, corruption, or interest. • At common law, an interested witness was not competent to testify on grounds of emotional incapacity. See State v. Craft, 41 So. 550, 551 (La. 1906).

emotional insanity. See INSANITY.

empanel, vb. (15c) To swear in (a jury) to try an issue or case. — Also spelled impanel. [Cases: Jury ↷ 146.] — empanelment, empaneling, n.

empaneled jury. See JURY emparnours (em-pahr-nərz), n. pl. [French] Hist. Persons who undertook lawsuits on behalf of others.

emperor. (13c) 1. The title of the sovereign ruler of an empire. 2. The chief of a confederation of states of which kings are members. • The rulers of the Roman world adopted the designation emperor after the fall of the republic. The title was later assumed by those — including Napoleon — who claimed to be their successors in the Holy Roman Empire. The sovereigns of Japan and Morocco are often called emperors, as were, in Western speech, the former sovereigns of Turkey and China. The title denotes a power and dignity superior to that of a king. It appears to be the appropriate style of the executive head of a federal government constructed on the monarchical principle and comprising several distinct kingdoms or other quasi-sovereign states, as with the German empire from 1871 to 1918.

emphasis added. (1945) A citation signal indicating that the writer quoting another's words has italicized or otherwise emphasized some of them. — Also termed emphasis supplied.

emphyteusis (em-fi-t[y]oo-sis), n. [Greek “implanting”] (16c) Greek, Roman & civil law. A contract by which one person delivered to another (the emphyteuta) a tract of land, either in perpetuity or for a long period of time, in exchange for the obligation to cultivate the land and to pay annual rental. • In Roman law, the land was state-owned (ager vectigalis). In the 5th century, emphyteusis was officially recognized as distinct from ownership or a lease. The land’s lessee or tenant, called an emphyteuta, had to bear any burdens imposed on the land. Although the emphyteusis was alienable, the owner had to consent to the sale. (Cf. SUPERFICIARIUS.) Unlike a usufruct, emphyteusis did not terminate with the death of the emphyteuta. Perpetual emphyteusis was abolished in the 18th century.

emphyteuta (em-fi-t[y]oo-tə), n. [Latin] (18c) Roman & civil law. The person to whom an emphyteusis is granted; the lessee or tenant under a contract of emphyteusis. See FEE FARM.

emphyteutic (em-fi-t[y]oo-tik), adj. [Latin] (17c) Civil law. Founded on, growing out of, or having the character of an emphyteusis; held under an emphyteusis.

empire. (14c) The jurisdiction of an emperor; the region over which an emperor’s dominion extends.

empirical (em-pir-i-kəl), adj. (16c) Of, relating to, or based on experience, experiment, or observation <the expert’s theory was not supported by empirical data>. — Also termed empiric.

emplazamiento (em-plah-zah-myen-toh), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. A summons; esp., a court-issued citation requiring the addressee to appear at a designated time and place.

emplead. See IMPLEAD.

emploi (om-plwah), n. [French] French law. Equitable conversion. • When property covered by the régime dotal is sold, the purchaser must ensure that the sale proceeds are reinvested for the wife’s benefit. See régime dotal under REGIME.

employ, vb. (15c) 1. To make use of. 2. To hire. 3. To use as an agent or substitute in transacting business. 4. To commission and entrust with the performance of certain acts or functions or with the management of one’s affairs.

employee. (1822) A person who works in the service of another person (the employer) under an express or implied contract of hire, under which the employer has the right to control the details of work performance. — Also spelled employe. Cf. AGENT (1); INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨23.]

borrowed employee. (1932) An employee whose services are, with the employee’s consent, lent to another employer who temporarily assumes control over the employee’s work. • Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, the borrowing employer is vicariously liable for the borrowed employee’s acts. But the borrowing employer may also be entitled to assert immunity under workers’-compensation laws. — Also termed borrowed servant; loaned employee; loaned servant; employee pro hac vice; special employee. See RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨26; Workers’ Compensation ⇨202.]

probationary employee. A recently hired employee whose ability and performance are being evaluated during a trial period of employment.

statutory employee. Workers’ compensation. An employee who is covered, or required to be covered, by the employer’s workers’-compensation insurance and who therefore has no independent tort claim against the employer for unintentional injuries suffered on the job. See statutory employer under EMPLOYER. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation ⇨187, 2161.]

defined-benefit plan. A plan established and maintained by an employer primarily to provide systematically for the payment of definitely determinable benefits to employees over a period of years, usu. for life, after retirement; any pension plan that is not a defined-contribution plan. • Retirement benefits under a defined benefit plan generally are based on a formula that included such factors as years of service and compensation. If the trust funding the plan lacks sufficient assets to pay the promised benefits, ERISA requires the employer to cover the shortfall. 29 USCA § 1002(35). Cf. defined contribution plan. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨422.]

defined-contribution plan. Under ERISA, an employee retirement plan in which each participant has a separate account — funded by the employee’s contributions and the employer’s contributions (usu. in a preset amount) — and each participant’s benefits are based solely on what has accumulated in the participant’s account. 29 USCA § 1002(34). — Also termed defined-contribution pension plan; individual account plan. Cf. defined-benefit plan. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨423.]

disability retirement plan. 1. A plan that is invoked when a covered person is disabled from working to normal retirement age. 2. A plan that provides increased benefits if a person retires because of a disability. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨427.]

employee-stock-ownership plan. A type of profit-sharing plan that invests primarily in the employer’s stock. • Employee-stock-ownership plans receive special tax benefits and can borrow money to fund employee stock purchases, which makes them a useful corporate finance tool. IRC (26 USCA) § 4975(e)(7). — Abbr. ESOP. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3578, 4297; Labor and Employment ⇨ 491(2).]

excess-benefit plan. An employee benefit plan maintained by an employer solely for the purpose of providing benefits for certain employees in excess of limitations on contributions and benefits imposed by the Internal Revenue Code. 29 USCA § 1002(36). [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 420.]

401(k) plan. A retirement and savings plan that allows an employee to elect to have a portion of his or her pretax salary contributed to a defined contribution plan. • Employers often match all or part of the employee's contributions. Employees usu. can choose investments from a list of options. IRC (26 USCA) § 401(k). [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3575.]

403(b) plan. A retirement plan for employees of public educational systems and certain tax-exempt organizations that is funded by pretax employee contributions much like a 401(k) plan, but may also provide for employer contributions. IRC (26 USCA) § 403(b). — Also termed tax-sheltered annuity; tax-deferred annuity. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3587.]

457 plan. A type of deferred-compensation plan for employees of state and local governments and tax-exempt organizations that operates much like a 401(k) plan, but (except for governmental plans) is unfunded. IRC (26 USCA) § 457. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 417.]

governmental plan. Under ERISA, an employee benefit plan established or maintained for its employees by the federal government, state or local governments, or their agencies or instrumentalities. 29 USCA § 1002(32). • If a collective-bargaining agreement between a labor union and a governmental entity includes a benefit plan, that plan may be a governmental plan if it is funded by and covers only employees of the governmental entity. — Also termed governmental employee benefit plan; government plan.

individual account plan. See defined-contribution plan.

Keogh plan. See KEOGH PLAN.

medical-expense reimbursement plan. An arrangement provided by an employer to reimburse employees for medical expenses, including vision and dental expenses, that are not covered under a medical plan available to all employees. • Some plans may also be used to substitute for health insurance, or to pay for medical expenses in excess of insurance-policy limits. IRC (26 USCA) 105. — Abbr. MERP. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 426.]

money-purchase plan. A defined-contribution plan that provides for mandatory employer contributions without regard to employer profits. • Contributions are frequently stated as a percentage of employee compensation. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 423.]

nonqualified deferred-compensation plan. An unfunded compensation arrangement, frequently offered to executives, that defers compensation and the recognition of its accompanying taxable income to a later date. • It is termed “nonqualified” because it does not qualify for favorable tax treatment under IRC (26 USCA) § 401(a). The plan avoids the restrictions on qualified plans, esp. the limits on contributions and benefits and rules against discrimination in favor of highly compensated employees. — Abbr. NQDC. — Also termed nonqualified executive-compensation plan; unfunded deferred-compensation plan. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3596.]

pension plan. See PENSION PLAN.

profit-sharing plan. See PROFIT-SHARING PLAN.

qualified plan. 1. See qualified pension plan under PENSION PLAN. 2. See qualified profit-sharing plan under PROFIT-SHARING PLAN.

survivor-income benefit plan. An agreement between an employer and an employee whereby the employer agrees that if the employee dies before retirement, the employer will pay a specified or determinable amount to the employee's spouse or other designated beneficiary. • Typically, a formula is used, so the benefit amount may be a multiple of the employee's salary (e.g., two times the average base pay in the three years preceding death) or based on the length of employment. — Abbr. SIB. — Also written survivor's-income benefit plan. — Also termed death-benefit-only plan (abbr. DBO). [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 428.]

retirement plan. An employee benefit plan — such as a pension plan or Keogh plan — provided by an employer (or a self-employed person) for an employee's retirement. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 420.]

SIMPLE plan. An arrangement under which an individual retirement account or annuity is established for each eligible employee and funded by elective pretax employee contributions, much as with a 401(k) plan, and certain matching or minimum employer contributions. • The plan can be attractive to employers because it is easier to administer than a 401(k) plan. The name is a loose acronym for “Savings Incentive Match Plan for Employees.” IRC (26 USCA) § 408(p). [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 420.] simplified employee pension plan. An arrangement under which an individual retirement account or annuity is established for each eligible employee and funded by discretionary employer contributions. IRC (26 USCA) § 408(k). • A simplified employee pension plan operates much like a 401(k) plan, in that the employee contributions can be made by deferred compensation and the employer can contribute. But the plan is attractive to small employers because it is much easier to administer than a 401(k) plan and gives the employer complete discretion on whether to make an annual contribution. IRC (26 USCA) § 408(k). — Abbr. SEP; SEP-IRA. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻420.]

split-funded plan. A retirement plan combining elements of both life-insurance and investment plans.

target benefit plan. A money-purchase plan that sets a "target" benefit for each participant and mandates employer contributions determined by an actuarial cost method designed to fund the target benefit.

unfunded deferred-compensation plan. See nonqualified deferred-compensation plan.

welfare plan. Under ERISA, any plan, fund, or program established or maintained by an employer or an employee organization for the purpose of providing to participants or their beneficiaries any number of potential benefits: medical, surgical, or hospital care or benefits; benefits in the event of sickness, accident, disability, death or unemployment; vacation benefits; apprenticeship or other training programs; daycare centers; scholarship funds; prepaid legal services; or holiday and severance benefits. 29 USCA § 1002(1). [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻425.]

employee givebacks. See CONCESSION BARGAINING.

employee-liability exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

employee pro hac vice. See borrowed employee under EMPLOYEE.

Employee Retirement Income Security Act. A federal statute that regulates private pension plans and employee benefit plans and that established the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. 29 USCA §§ 1001 et seq. — Abbr. ERISA. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻401.]

"ERISA was adopted in 1974 in response to highly publicized instances of fraud and mismanagement in employee pension funds, which had resulted in thousands of workers losing retirement benefits accumulated over a lifetime of work. ERISA was intended primarily as an instrument for regulating pensions, as its title suggests, and most of its substantive provisions address protection of retirement benefits. ERISA also, however, applies to employee welfare benefit plans, and thus covers employer provided health insurance, the dominant vehicle for private finance of health care in the United States." Barry R. Farrow et al., Health Law § 2-9, at 48 (2d ed. 2000).

employee stock option. See STOCK OPTION (2).

employee-stock-ownership plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

Employee's Withholding Allowance Certificate. See W-4 FORM.

employer. (16c) A person who controls and directs a worker under an express or implied contract of hire and who pays the worker's salary or wages. Cf. PRINCIPAL (1). [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻23.]

equal-opportunity employer. An employer who agrees not to discriminate against any job applicant or employee on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, natural origin, age, or disability. — Abbr. EOE. [Cases: Civil Rights ↻110.]

general employer. An employer who transfers an employee to another employer for a limited period. See borrowed employee under EMPLOYEE.

special employer. An employer who has borrowed an employee for a limited period and has temporary responsibility for and control over the employee's work.

statutory employer. Workers' compensation. One who employs a statutory employee. See statutory employee under EMPLOYEE. [Cases: Workers' Compensation ↻187.] employer-employee relationship. See RELATIONSHIP.

employer-identification number. See TAX-IDENTIFICATION NUMBER.

employers' liability. See WORKERS' COMPENSATION.

employers'-liability insurance. See INSURANCE.

employment. (15c) 1. The relationship between master and servant. See MASTER AND SERVANT. 2. The act of employing. 3. The state of being employed. 4. Work for which one has been hired and is being paid by an employer.

casual employment. Work that is occasional, irregular, or for a short time — often associated with day labor.

employment at will. Employment that is usu. undertaken without a contract and that may be terminated at any time, by either the employer or the employee, without cause. — Also termed at-will employment; hiring at will. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻40.]

"Surprisingly, the employment at will doctrine is not an ancient one. On the contrary, it dates only from the period in the mid-nineteenth century that saw the transformation of the employment relation from one of status to one of contract. The relentless logic of the contract approach dictated the rule that the employee had only such rights as were expressly agreed to in his contract of employment — no more and no less. This meant that there was no implication that an indefinite hiring would last for a year or any other presumed period, since if the parties had wanted a particular term they would have expressly agreed to it." 1 Lex K. Larson, Unjust Dismissal § 1.01, at 1-3 (1992).

"The doctrine of employment at will prescribed that an employee without a contract for a fixed term could be hired or fired for any reason or no reason at all. . . . [The] rule provided that employees categorized as 'at will' had no legal interest in continuing job security. Whereas early American masters had some responsibility to the public as well as to their servants when they turned dependent servants out on the world, under [this] formulation, masters could simply fire employees who had no contracts." Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 1.4, at 9-10 (1994).

gainful employment. Work that a person can pursue and perform for money.

hazardous employment. High-risk work; work involving extra peril. • In the context of workers' compensation, hazardous employment often requires an employer to carry workers'-compensation coverage or its equivalent, regardless of the number of employees.

joint employment. A job in which the essential terms and conditions of the employee's work are controlled by two or more entities, as when a company hires a contractor to perform a task and retains control over the contractor's employees in matters such as hiring, firing, discipline, conditions of employment, promulgation of work rules, assignment of day-to-day job duties, and issuance of operating instructions.

permanent employment. Work that, under a contract, is to continue indefinitely until either party wishes to terminate it for some legitimate reason.

seasonal employment. An occupation possible only during limited parts of the year, such as a summer-camp counselor, a baseball-park vendor, or a shopping-mall Santa.

temporary employment. Work for a specific need or fixed duration, usu. agreed upon beforehand.

employment agency. (19c) A business that procures, for a fee, employment for others and employees for employers. • Whether the employer or the employee pays the fee depends on the terms of the agreement. See FINDER (1). [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇄ 935.]

Employment and Training Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Labor responsible for developing plans for training dislocated and unemployed workers, including young people and those who are disabled; and for interpreting federal workforce-security laws as they apply to the states.

employment contract. See CONTRACT.

employment-practices-liability insurance. See INSURANCE.

employment-related-practices exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

Employment Standards Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Labor responsible for enforcing various laws and administering programs pertaining to minimum-wage and overtime standards, registration of farm-labor contractors, wage rates to be paid and the nondiscrimination and affirmative-action programs to be followed by government contractors and subcontractors, workers'-compensation programs for federal and certain private employers, financial integrity and the internal organizational practices of labor unions, and certification of employee protection for federally sponsored transportation programs. • The Administration operates through four divisions that have regional offices or administrators in various cities: the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs, the Wage and Hour Division, the Office of Labor-Management Standards, and the Office of Workers' Compensation Programs. — Abbr. ESA.

emporium (em-por-ee-əm), n. (16c) 1. A place for wholesale trade in commodities carried by sea. • The term is sometimes applied to a seaport town, but properly signifies only a particular place in such a town. 2. An important marketplace. 3. A large retail store that sells a wide variety of goods.

empresario (em-pre-sahr-ee-oh), n. [Spanish] 1. Spanish law. A businessperson; one who invests in or manages a business; esp., a land developer. 2. Hist. A person receiving extensive land grants as consideration for bringing people into Mexico (esp. into what would become Texas) and settling them on the land for the purpose of increasing the population, developing the country's resources, and controlling the aboriginal peoples.

emptio (emp-shee-oh), n. [Latin "purchase"] Roman & civil law. The act of buying; a purchase. — Also spelled emtio. Pl. emptionses.

emptio bonorum (bə-nor-əm). [Latin "purchase of goods"] A type of forced assignment for the benefit of creditors, involving a public sale of an insolvent debtor's estate whereby the purchaser succeeded to all the debtor's property, rights, and claims, and became responsible for the debtor's debts and liabilities to an extent fixed before the transfer.

emptio et venditio (et ven-dish-ee-oh). [Latin "purchase and sale"] A contract of sale. • The double name reflects that both the buyer and seller had duties and rights in the transaction. In Roman law, agreement on the thing to be sold and its price were essential. The buyer could enforce the contract by actio empti, and the seller could enforce by actio venditi. — Also termed emptio venditio. See VENDITIO.

emptio rei facta a pluribus ementibus (emp-shee-oh ree-ɪ fak-tə ay pluur-ə bəs i-men-tə-bəs). [Latin] Hist. A purchase made by many buyers. La. Civ. Code art. 2450. • An emptio rei facta a pluribus ementibus did not automatically create a partnership among the purchasers.

emptio rei speratae (ree-ɪ spə-ray-tee). [Latin "purchase of a hoped-for thing"] The purchase of a thing not yet in existence or not yet in the seller's possession; e.g., a future crop. La. Civ. Code art. 2451. • The price of such a purchase typically depended on the actual yield and thus could fluctuate.

emptio spei (spee-ɪ). [Latin "purchase of a hope"] An emptio rei speratae in which the price is fixed, regardless of actual gain. • Even if the future event, such as the casting of a net, produced nothing, the buyer had to pay.

emptio venditio. See emptio et venditio.

emptor (emp-tor or -tər), n. [Latin] Civil law. A buyer; purchaser. — Also spelled emtor. See caveat emptor under CAVEAT. Pl. emptores.

emptor familiae. See FAMILIAE EMPTOR.

emprix (em[p]-trəks), n. [Latin] Civil law. A female buyer. — Also spelled emrix. Pl. emptrices.

empty-chair defense. See DEFENSE (2).

empty-chair doctrine. See ADVERSE-INTEREST RULE.

empty-suit defense. See DEFENSE (1).

emptio. See EMPTIO.

emptor. See EMPTOR.

emrix. See EMPRIX.

enable, vb. To give power to do something; to make able.

enablement. Patents. The disclosure in a patent application; specif. the description of the subject matter clear and complete enough to teach a person of ordinary skill in the art how to make and use the invention. ● If the artisan would still be unable to work the invention without undue experimentation after reading the description — in light of the information known in the art as of the filing date of the patent application — the patent application will be rejected for lack of enablement. 35 USCA § 112. Cf. NONENABLEMENT. [Cases: Patents ↷99.] enablement by deposit. See DEPOSIT (6).

enablement requirement. Patents. The rule that the specification of a patent application must describe the invention so that a person with ordinary skill in the art could make and use the invention without undue experimentation. ● A specification that meets this requirement is referred to as enabling. Cf. ENABLING SOURCE. [Cases: Patents ↷99.]

enabling act. See enabling statute under STATUTE.

enabling clause. See CLAUSE.

enabling disclosure. See DESCRIPTION (5).

enabling power. See POWER OF APPOINTMENT.

enabling source. Patents. A document that defeats the patentability of an invention because the information provided made it possible — before the patent application was filed — for a person skilled in the art to make the invention. Cf. ENABLEMENT REQUIREMENT.

enabling statute. 1. See STATUTE. 2. Hist. (cap.) The Lease Act (1540), by which tenants in tail, husbands seised in right of their wives, and others were empowered to make leases for their lives or for 21 years. St. 32 Hen. 8, ch. 28.

enact, vb. (15c) 1. To make into law by authoritative act; to pass <the statute was enacted shortly before the announced deadline>. 2. (Of a statute) to provide <the statute of frauds enacts that no action may be brought on certain types of contracts unless the plaintiff has a signed writing to prove the agreement>. — enactor, n.

enacted law. See LAW.

enacting clause. See CLAUSE.

enacting words. The statutory phrasing denoting that an act is taking effect as law. ● The most common enacting words are Be it enacted that . . . [Cases: Statutes ↷40.]

en autre droit (en oh-trə droyt or on noh-trə drwah). [French] In the right of another, as when an executor sues on behalf of the estate. — Also spelled in autre droit. See AUTRE DROIT.

en banc (en bangk or on bongk). [Law French “on the bench”] adv. & adj. (1863) With all judges present and participating; in full court <the court heard the case en banc> <an en banc rehearing>. — Also spelled in banc; in bank. — Also termed in banco.

en banc sitting. See SITTING.

enbancworthy, adj. Slang. Worthy of being considered en banc <the Fifth Circuit concluded that two of the four issues are truly enbancworthy>. — enbancworthiness, n.

en bloc (on blok or en blok), adj. & adv. [French] As a whole; as a unit. ● In parliamentary law, this term can refer to a series of resolutions or other motions that are disposed of with a single vote. — Also termed en grosse.

enbrever (en-bree-vər), vb. [Law French] 1. To abbreviate. 2. To put into a schedule.

encheson (en-chee-zən), n. [Law French] The occasion, cause, or reason for which something is done. — Also spelled encheason.

enclave (en-klayv or on-). (19c) Int'l law. An isolated part of a country's territory entirely surrounded by the territory of one foreign country, so that any communication with the main part of the country must pass through the territory of the foreign country. ● Although international enclaves were once common, they are now relatively rare; examples include Baarle-Hertog, a Belgian enclave in the Netherlands, and Kaliningrad, a Russian enclave between Lithuania and Poland. — Also termed international enclave.

federal enclave. Territory or land that a state has ceded to the United States. ● Examples of federal enclaves are military bases, national parks, federally administered highways, and federal Indian reservations. The U.S. government has exclusive authority and jurisdiction over federal enclaves. [Cases: United States ↻3.]

quasi-enclave. An isolated part of a country's territory that, though not entirely surrounded by the territory of a foreign country, is inaccessible by way of the country's own territory because of topographical features such as impassable mountains.

enclose, vb. (14c) 1. To surround or encompass; to fence or hem in on all sides. 2. To place (something) in a parcel or envelope. — Also spelled inclose.

enclosed land. See LAND.

enclosed please find. See TRANSMITTAL LETTER.

enclosure. (15c) 1. Something enclosed in a parcel or envelope. 2. Land surrounded by some visible obstruction; CLOSE (1). 3. An artificial fence around one's estate. — Also spelled inclosure. [Cases: Fences ↻1.]

encomienda (en-koh-mee-en-dah), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. 1. A royal grant to a private person of a certain portion of territory in the Spanish colonies, together with the concession of a certain number of the native inhabitants, on the feudal principle of commendation. 2. A royal grant of privileges to the military orders of Spain. 3. A mandate for a person to do a specific commission. 4. Something given by mandate; esp., a parcel.

encroach, vb. (16c) 1. To enter by gradual steps or stealth into the possessions or rights of another; to trespass or intrude. 2. To gain or intrude unlawfully upon another's lands, property, or authority. — Formerly also spelled incroach. [Cases: Trespass ↻1, 10.]

encroachment, n. (16c) 1. An infringement of another's rights. 2. An interference with or intrusion onto another's property <the court remedied the encroachment by ordering the defendant to cut down the tree limb hanging over the plaintiff's yard>. — Formerly also spelled incroachment. See TRESPASS. [Cases: Trespass ↻12.]

encumbrance, n. (16c) A claim or liability that is attached to property or some other right and that may lessen its value, such as a lien or mortgage; any property right that is not an ownership interest. • An encumbrance cannot defeat the transfer of possession, but it remains after the property or right is transferred. — Also spelled incumbrance. [Cases: Mortgages ↻1; Secured Transactions ↻1.] — encumber, vb.

"Encumbrances are not confined to the law of property, but pertain to the law of obligations also. Choses in action may be mortgaged, settled in trust, or otherwise made the subject-matter of jura in re aliena, no less than land and chattels." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 435-36 n.(k) (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"'Encumbrance' means a right, other than an ownership interest, in real property. The term includes a mortgage or other lien on real property." UCC § 9-102(a)(32).

mesne encumbrance (meen). An intermediate encumbrance; an encumbrance that first occurred both earlier and later than other encumbrances.

engagement, n. (17c) 1. A contract or agreement involving mutual promises. [Cases: Contracts ↷55.] 2. An agreement to marry; the period after which a couple has agreed to marry but before they do so. — Also termed (in sense 2) betrothal; betrothment. [Cases: Breach of Marriage Promise ↷1.]

engagement fee. See RETAINER (3).

engagement letter. A document identifying the scope of a professional's services to a client and outlining the respective duties and responsibilities of both.

engagement slip. (1933) A note sent by a lawyer to a court informing the court that the lawyer is professionally engaged in a second court on a given day and thus cannot appear before the first court on that day as scheduled. • The term is used in Pennsylvania.

engender, vb. To cause; to bring about; to occasion.

engineering, procurement, and construction contract. See CONTRACT.

England procedure. A procedure by which — after a federal court has referred a case back to state court under the Pullman abstention doctrine, and the state court has adjudicated the state-court issues — a litigant may return to federal court to have the federal claims adjudicated. England v. Louisiana State Bd. of Med. Examiners, 375 U.S. 411, 84 S.Ct. 461 (1964). See Pullman abstention under ABSTENTION. [Cases: Federal Courts ↷65.]

English rule. The requirement that a losing litigant must pay the winner's costs and attorney's fees. — Also termed loser-pays rule. Cf. AMERICAN RULE (1). [Cases: Costs ↷194.14.]

engrossed bill. See BILL (3).

engrosser, n. 1. A person who engrosses legal documents. 2. Hist. A person who buys large quantities of a commodity in an effort to control the price.

Engrosser of the Great Roll. See CLERK OF THE PIPE.

engrossing, n. Hist. The practice of buying large quantities of commodities or merchandise with the intent of gaining a monopoly and selling them at a very high price. • Engrossing was a misdemeanor in England until 1834. — Also termed engrossment. See CORNERING THE MARKET.

"Engrossing . . . is the getting into one's possession, or buying up, of corn or other dead victuals, with intent to sell them again. This must of course be injurious to the public, by putting it in the power of one or two rich men to raise the price of provisions at their own discretion." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 158 (1769).

engrossment, n. (16c) 1. The preparation of a legal document (such as a deed) for execution. 2. The drafting of a resolution or bill just before a final vote on the matter in the legislature. 3. ENGROSSING.

enhanced, adj. Made greater; increased <because of his recidivism, Monte was subject to an enhanced sentence after his latest conviction>.

entia pars (ə-nish-ee-ə pahrz). [Latin] The share of the eldest. • In English law, this describes the lot or share chosen by the eldest of coparceners when they make a voluntary partition. The first choice (primer election) belongs to the eldest.

enjoin, vb. (13c) 1. To legally prohibit or restrain by injunction <the company was enjoined from selling its stock>. [Cases: Injunction ↷1.] 2. To prescribe, mandate, or strongly encourage <the graduating class was enjoined to uphold the highest professional standards>. — Also spelled injoin. — enjoiment (for sense 1), n. — enjoinder (for sense 2), n.

enjoinable, adj. Capable of being prohibited by injunction <an enjoinal nuisance>. [Cases: Injunction ↷26-105.]

enjoy, vb. (15c) To have, possess, and use (something) with satisfaction; to occupy or have the benefit of (property).

enjoyment, n. (16c) 1. Possession and use, esp. of rights or property. 2. The exercise of a right.

adverse enjoyment. (18c) The possession or use of land under a claim of right against the property owner. [Cases: Easements ↷8.]

beneficial enjoyment. (18c) The possession and benefit of land or other property, but without legal title.

present enjoyment. (18c) The immediate possession and use of land or other property.

quiet enjoyment. (18c) The possession of land with the assurance that the possession will not be disturbed by a superior title. See covenant for quiet enjoyment under COVENANT (4). [Cases: Covenants ↷43, 65.]

en juicio (en hwee-syoh), adv. [Spanish] Judicially; in a court of law.

enlarge, vb. (14c) 1. To increase in size or extend in scope or duration <the court enlarged the time allotted for closing arguments>. 2. To free from custody or imprisonment <at common law, an action for escape lay when a prisoner was wrongly enlarged>. Cf. AT LARGE. — enlargement, n.

enlargement of time. (18c) A usu. court-ordered extension of the time allowed to perform an action, esp. a procedural one.

enlarger l'estate (en-lahr-jər lə-stayt). [Law French] Hist. A release that enlarges an estate and consists of a conveyance of the ulterior interest to the tenant. • If an estate was held by a tenant for life or years, with the remainder to another in fee, and if the one in remainder released all rights to the tenant and his or her heirs (through an enlarger l'estate), the tenant then held the estate in fee.

enlisted member. Military law. A person in an enlisted grade; a person in military service below the grade of officer or warrant officer. [Cases: Armed Services ⇨ 21.] — Also termed enlisted man.

enlistment, n. (18c) Voluntary entry into a branch of the armed services. [Cases: Armed Services ⇨ 17.] — enlist, vb.

en mort mayne (en mort mayn). [French "in dead hand"] In mortmain. See MORTMAIN.

Enoch Arden law (ee-nək ahrd-ən). (1923) A statute that grants a divorce or an exemption from liability so that a person can remarry when his or her spouse has been absent without explanation for a specified number of years (usu. five or seven). • This type of law is named after a Tennyson poem, in which the eponymous hero, having been shipwrecked for years on a desert island, returns home to find that his wife has remarried. He selflessly conceals his identity from her so that she can remain with her new husband. — Also spelled Enoc Arden law. See presumptive death under DEATH; ABANDONMENT (3). Cf. SEVEN-YEARS' ABSENCE RULE. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 37(5); Marriage ⇨ 11.]

enorm (i-norm), adj. (15c) Hist. (Of a crime or other wrong) monstrously evil; wicked.

enormia (i-nor-mee-ə), n. [Latin] Common-law pleading. Unlawful or wrongful acts; wrongs. • This word, esp. as part of the phrase et alia enormia ("and other outrages"), appeared regularly in writs and declarations of trespass.

enorm lesion (i-norm lee-zhən). See LAESIO ENORMIS.

enormous, adj. Aggravated; excessively large <enormous crimes>.

en owel main (en ow-əl mayn). [Law French] In equal hand.

enquête (on-ket), n. [French] Eccles. law. An examination of witnesses (taken down in writing) by or before an authorized judge for the purpose of gathering testimony to be used in a trial. — Also termed enquest (on[g]-kwes[t]).

en recouvrement (on ray-koo-vrə-mən). [French "for purpose of recovery"] French law. An indorsement on a bill of exchange that does not transfer the property in the bill of exchange but merely gives the indorsee the authority to recover the amount of the bill.

enrégistrement (on-ray-zhees-trə-mən), n. [French] French law. Registration. • This formality is performed by a clerk who inscribes a government register with a summary analysis of a deed or other document. The clerk then puts a stamped or sealed note on the deed or document, indicating the date on which it was registered.

enrichment. (17c) The receipt of a benefit. Cf. UNJUST ENRICHMENT.

enroll, vb. (14c) 1. To register or transcribe (a legal document, as a deed) into an official record on execution. — Formerly also spelled inroll. 2. To prepare (a bill passed by the legislature) for the executive's signature. Cf. ENGROSS. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 37.]

enrolled, adj. Registered; recorded.

enrolled agent. One who, though neither a certified public accountant nor an attorney, has been admitted to practice before the IRS, either by passing an examination or by working for the IRS in a technical area for at least five years. • The enrolled agent is one of four types of persons who are allowed to practice before the IRS, the other three being attorneys, certified public accountants, and persons who are admitted to represent either themselves or others in a particular case. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4444.]

enrolled-bill rule. (1914) The conclusive presumption that a statute, once formalized, appears precisely as the legislature intended, thereby preventing any challenge to the drafting of the bill. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 283(2).]

"Under the 'enrolled bill rule,' an enrolled bill, properly authenticated and approved by the governor, is conclusive as to regularity of its enactment. Ordinarily, the courts will not go behind the enrolled bill to determine its validity. The supreme court can look behind the enrolled bill only to determine whether the constitutional mandate relative to vote and journal entry upon the final passage have been complied with." National Conference of State Legislatures, Mason's Manual of Legislative Procedure § 702, at 497 (2000).

enrollment, n. The act of recording or registering. — Also spelled (archaically) inrollment.

enrollment of vessels. Maritime law. The recording and certification of vessels used in coastal or inland navigation, as distinguished from the "registration" of vessels used in foreign commerce. • Enrollment and registry are used to distinguish certificates granted to two classes of vessels. Enrollment evidences the national character of a vessel engaged in coasting trade or home traffic; registry is used to declare the nationality of a vessel engaged in foreign trade. Cf. REGISTRY (2). [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 6.]

Enrollment Office. Hist. A department of the Court of Chancery responsible for storing enrolled deeds and judgments. • The Enrollment Office was abolished in 1879; its duties were transferred to the Central Office.

en route (en or on root). [French] On the way; in the course of transportation or travel.

enschedule, vb. Archaic. To insert in a list, account, or writing.

enseal, vb. Archaic. To seal (a document).

enserver (en-sər-vər), vb. [Law French] To make subject to a service or servitude.

ens legis (enz lee-jis). [Law Latin] A creature of the law; an artificial being as opposed to a natural person. • The term describes an entity, such as a corporation, that derives its existence entirely from the law.

entail, n. (14c) A fee abridged or limited to the owner's issue or class of issue rather than descending to all the heirs. See BARRING OF ENTAIL; FEE TAIL. — Also termed (in Scots law) tailzie. [Cases: Estates in Property ↻12.] — entailable, adj.

"Entail is fee entailed, viz; abridged, limited, and tied to certain conditions at the will of the donor; where lands are given to, or settled on others." The Pocket Lawyer and Family Conveyancer 97 (3d ed. 1833).

quasi-entail. An estate pur autre vie that is granted to a person and the heirs of the person's body. • The interest so granted is not properly an estate-tail (because it is not granted by inheritance), but it is similar enough that the interest will go to the heir of the body as special occupant during the life of the cestui que vie, in the same manner as an estate of inheritance would descend if limited to the grantee and the heirs of his body.

entail, vb. (14c) 1. To make necessary; to involve <responding to this onerous discovery will entail countless hours of work>. 2. To limit the inheritance of (an estate) to only the owner's issue or class of issue, so that none of the heirs can transfer the estate <the grantor entailed the property through a so-called "tail female">. See FEE TAIL. [Cases: Wills ↻604.] — entailable, adj.

entailed, adj. Settled or limited to specified heirs or in tail <entailed gifts>.

entailed estate. See FEE TAIL.

entailed interest. See INTEREST (2).

entailment, n. 1. The act of entailing an estate. 2. An estate so entailed.

entencion (en-ten-shən), n. [Law French] Hist. A plaintiff's count or declaration.

entendment. Archaic. See INTENDMENT.

entente (ahn-tahnt). [French "intent, understanding"] (19c) Int'l law. 1. An understanding that two or more nations have for carrying out a common policy or course of action. • An entente is looser than an alliance but stronger than the nations' merely having good relations. 2. The nations having such an understanding. Cf. ALLIANCE; DÉTENTE.

enter, vb. (13c) 1. To come or go into; esp., to go onto (real property) by right of entry so as to take possession <the landlord entered the defaulting tenant's premises>. 2. To put formally before a court or on the record <the defendant entered a plea of no contest>. 3. To become a party to <they entered into an agreement>. See ENTRY.

enterceur (en-tər-sər), n. [Law French] A party claiming goods; one who has placed goods in the hands of a third party.

enterpleder. Archaic. See INTERPLEADER (1).

enterprise, n. (15c) 1. An organization or venture, esp. for business purposes.

governmental enterprise. An enterprise undertaken by a governmental body, such as a parks department that creates a public park. — Also termed government enterprise.

enterprise goodwill. See GOODWILL.

enterprise liability. See LIABILITY.

enterprise organization. See BUSINESS ENTERPRISES.

enterprise value. See VALUE (2) entertain, vb. (15c) 1. To bear in mind or consider; esp., to give judicial consideration to <the court then entertained motions for continuance>. 2. To amuse or please. 3. To receive (a person) as a guest or provide hospitality to (a person). 4. Parliamentary law. To recognize and state (a motion); to receive and take into consideration <the chair will entertain the motion>.

entertainment expense. See EXPENSE.

entertainment law. (1953) The field of law dealing with the legal and business issues in the entertainment industry (such as film, music, and theater), and involving the representation of artists and producers, the negotiation of contracts, and the protection of intellectual-property rights.

entice, vb. (14c) To lure or induce; esp., to wrongfully solicit (a person) to do something.

enticement, n. (14c) 1. The act or an instance of wrongfully soliciting or luring a person to do something. 2. Hist. The tort of inducing a man's wife to leave him or to remain away from him against his will. [Cases: Seduction ↷ 1-26.]

enticement of a child. Criminal law. The act or offense of inviting, persuading, or attempting to persuade a child to enter a vehicle, building, room, or secluded place with the intent of committing an unlawful sexual act against the child. — Often shortened to enticement. [Cases: Infants ↷ 13.]

enticement of a parent. Rare. Torts. The tortious interference with a child's rights and interests in maintaining the parent-child relationship, usu. caused by a third person who induces a parent to abandon the child. • Actions based on enticement, where they are recognized, are rarely successful because many states do not recognize a child's legal right to a parent's consortium or affection.

entire, adj. 1. Whole; complete in all its parts. 2. Not divisible into parts.

entire-agreement clause. (1960) 1. INTEGRATION CLAUSE. 2. A provision in an insurance contract stating that the entire agreement between the insured and insurer is contained in the contract, often including the application (if attached), declarations, insuring agreement, exclusions, conditions, and endorsements. — Also termed entire-contract clause. [Cases: Insurance ↷ 1838, 1856.]

entire benefit. See entire use under USE (4). entire blood. See full blood under BLOOD.

entire-contract clause. See ENTIRE-AGREEMENT CLAUSE.

entire-controversy doctrine. (1970) The principle that a plaintiff or defendant who does not assert all claims or defenses related to the controversy in a legal proceeding is not entitled to assert those claims or defenses in a later proceeding. — Also termed single-controversy doctrine. Cf. compulsory counterclaim under COUNTERCLAIM; RES JUDICATA (2). [Cases: Action ↷ 53; Judgment ↷ 591.]

entire day. See DAY.

entire interest. See INTEREST (2).

entire-output contract. See output contract under CONTRACT.

entire tenancy. See TENANCY.

entirety (en-trī-ər-tee). (16c) 1. The whole, as opposed to a moiety or part. 2. Something (such as certain judgments and contracts) that the law considers incapable of being divided into parts.

entirety, tenancy by the. See estate by entirety under ESTATE (1).

entirety clause. Oil & gas. A mineral-lease or deed provision specifying that royalties must be apportioned if the property is subdivided after the lease is granted. • For the lessee, the clause makes it clear that the lessee's duties will increase if the lessor transfers a part of the leased premises. For the lessor, the clause avoids the nonapportionment rule. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷ 79.1(3).]

entire use. See USE (4).

entitle, vb. (14c) 1. To grant a legal right to or qualify for. 2. Eccles. law. To ordain as a minister. — Formerly also spelled intitle.

entitlement. (19c) An absolute right to a (usu. monetary) benefit, such as social security, granted immediately upon meeting a legal requirement. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ↷ 4.10.]

entitlement program. A government program guaranteeing certain benefits, such as financial aid or government-provided services, to people or entities that meet the criteria set by law. • Some examples of entitlement programs are unemployment benefits, Social Security, food stamps, and agricultural price-support plans. Qualified beneficiaries have an enforceable right to participate in the programs. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare ↷ 4.10.]

entity. An organization (such as a business or a governmental unit) that has a legal identity apart from its members or owners.

corporate entity. A corporation's status as an organization existing independently of its shareholders. • As a separate entity, a corporation can, in its own name, sue and be sued, lend and borrow money, and buy, sell, lease, and mortgage property. [Cases: Corporations ↷ 1.3.]

public entity. A governmental entity, such as a state government or one of its political subdivisions.

entity assumption. (1972) The presumption that a business is a unit separate from its owners and from other firms.

entity theory of partnership. (1916) The theory that a partnership is an entity with a legal existence apart from the partners who make it up. • Under the Uniform Partnership Act, "[a] partnership is an entity distinct from its partners." UPA § 201 (1994). Cf. AGGREGATE THEORY OF PARTNERSHIP. [Cases: Partnership ↷ 63.]

entrapment, n. (1899) 1. A law-enforcement officer's or government agent's inducement of a person to commit a crime, by means of fraud or undue persuasion, in an attempt to later bring a criminal prosecution against that person. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷ 37.] 2. The affirmative defense of having been so induced. • To establish entrapment (in most states), the defendant must show that he or she would not have committed the crime but for the fraud or undue persuasion. — entrap, vb.

"Entrapment, so-called, is a relatively simple and very desirable concept which was unfortunately misnamed, with some resulting confusion. It is socially desirable for criminals to be apprehended and brought to justice. And there is nothing whatever wrong or out of place in setting traps for those bent on crime, provided the traps are not so arranged as likely to result in offenses by persons other than those who are ready to commit them. What the State cannot tolerate is having crime instigated by its officers who are charged with the duty of enforcing the law. . . . Obviously 'entrapment' is not the appropriate word to express the idea of official investigation of crime, but it is so firmly entrenched that it seems wiser to accept it with due explanation than attempt to supplant it. . . ." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1161 (3d ed. 1982).

derivative entrapment. Entrapment in which the government uses a private person, acting either as an agent of the government or as an unwitting participant, to induce the subject of the entrapment to commit a crime. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷37(5).]

objective entrapment. Entrapment as judged by focusing on egregious law-enforcement conduct, not on the defendant's predisposition. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷37(2.1).]

sentencing entrapment. Entrapment of a defendant who is predisposed to commit a lesser offense but who is unlawfully induced to commit a more serious offense that carries a more severe sentence. — Also termed sentence-factor manipulation.

entrebat (on-trə-ba), n. [Law French] An intruder or interloper.

entrepôt (on-trə-poh), n. [French] (18c) French law. A building or place where goods from abroad may be deposited and from which those goods may then be exported to another country without paying a duty.

entrepreneur (on-trə-prə-nər or -noor), n. (19c) One who initiates and assumes the financial risks of a new enterprise and who usu. undertakes its management.

entrepreneurial rights. See NEIGHBORING RIGHTS.

entrust, vb. (16c) To give (a person) the responsibility for something, usu. after establishing a confidential relationship. — Also spelled (archaically) intrust. See NEGLIGENT ENTRUSTMENT. — entrustment, n.

entrusting, n. Commercial law. The transfer of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that type and who may in turn transfer the goods and all rights to them to a purchaser in the ordinary course of business. UCC § 2-403(2). [Cases: Sales ↷234(7).]

entry, n. (13c) 1. The act, right, or privilege of entering real property <they were given entry into the stadium>.

forcible entry. See FORCIBLE ENTRY.

lawful entry. (17c) 1. The entry onto real property by a person not in possession, under a claim or color of right, and without force or fraud. 2. The entry of premises under a search warrant. See SEARCH WARRANT.

open entry. (18c) A conspicuous entry onto real property to take possession; an entry that is neither clandestine nor carried out by secret artifice or stratagem and that (by law in some states) is accomplished in the presence of two witnesses.

reentry. See REENTRY.

unlawful entry. (17c) 1. The crime of entering another's real property, by fraud or other illegal means, without the owner's consent. Cf. TRESPASS (1). 2. An alien's crossing of a border into a country without proper documents. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ↷771.]

2. An item written in a record; a notation <Forney made a false entry in the books on March 3>.

blind entry. An accounting entry that indicates only the debited and credited amounts without any explanation.

compound journal entry. A journal entry requiring more than one debit and credit (as when revenue is received partly in cash and partly in securities).

journal entry. An entry in an accounting journal of equal debits and credits, with occasional explanations of the recorded transactions.

3. The placement of something before the court or on the record. 4. Copyright. The deposit of a title of work with the Register of Copyrights to secure its protection. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↷50.10.] 5. Immigration. Any entrance of an alien into the United States, whether voluntary or involuntary. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ↷220, 251, 771.] 6. Criminal law. The unlawful coming into a building to commit a crime. [Cases: Burglary ↷9(2).] entry, right of. See POWER OF TERMINATION.

entry, writ of. See WRIT OF ENTRY.

entry ad communem legem (ad kə-myoo-nəm lee-jəm). [Latin] Hist. 1. Entry at common law. 2. AD COMMUNEM LEGEM.

entry ad terminum qui praeteriit (ad tər-mə-nəm kwī pri-ter-ee-it). See AD TERMINUM QUI PRAETERIIT. entry fiction. The assumption, for purposes of immigration and deportation proceedings, that an excludable alien is to be treated as if detained at the border despite his or her physical presence in the United States.

entry for marriage in speech. See causa matrimonii praelocuti under CAUSA (1).

entry in casu consimili (en-tree in kay-s[y]oo kən-sim-ə-lī). [Latin] See CASU CONSIMILI.

entryman (en-tree-mən), n. Archaic. A person who enters public land and stakes a claim with the intention of settling.

entry of judgment. (17c) The ministerial recording of a court's final decision, usu. by noting it in a judgment book or civil docket. Cf. RENDITION OF JUDGMENT. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↷2621; Judgment ↷270-284.]

entry on the roll. Hist. 1. A clerk's notation on a parchment roll of the proceedings and issues in a particular case. ● Before parties began submitting written pleadings, they would appear (in person or through counsel) in open court and state their respective contentions orally until they settled on the issue or precise point in dispute. During the progress of these oral statements, an appointed officer of the court would make minutes of the various proceedings on a parchment roll that then became the official record of the suit. Even after the practice of oral pleadings had fallen into disuse, proceedings continued to be entered "on the roll." This practice was abolished early in the 19th century. 2. A future interest created in a transferor who conveys an estate on condition subsequent.

enumerate (i-n[y]oo-mə-rayt), vb. To count off or designate one by one; to list. — enumeration, n.

enumerated motion. See MOTION (1).

enumerated power. See POWER (3).

enumerator. A person appointed to collect census papers or schedules.

enunciate (i-nən-see-ayt), vb. (17c) 1. To state publicly; to announce or proclaim <the court enunciated a new doctrine yesterday>. 2. To articulate or pronounce <enunciate your syllables more clearly when you speak>. — enunciation, n. — enunciable, adj. — enunciator, n.

enure. See INURE.

en ventre sa mere (on von-trə sa mair). [Law French "in utero"] (18c)(Of a fetus) in the mother's womb <child en ventre sa mere>. • This phrase refers to an unborn child, usu. in the context of a discussion of that child's rights. If the child is en ventre sa mere at the time of a decedent's death and is subsequently born alive, the child is treated as having been in existence at the time of the decedent's death for purposes of inheritance. — Also spelled in ventre sa mere. See VENTER.

"An infant in ventre sa mere, or in the mother's womb, is supposed in law to be born for many purposes." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 126 (1765).

en vie (on vee). [Law French "in life"] Alive.

environmental audit. See AUDIT.

environmental crime. (1972) Environmental law. A statutory offense involving harm to the environment, such as a violation of the criminal provisions in the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1970, the Federal Water Pollution Control Act of 1972 (commonly called the Clean Water Act), or the Endangered Species Act of 1973. • Although the most significant environmental-crime statutes were passed in the 1970s, they date back to the late 19th century, with statutes such as the Pure Food and Drug Act of 1896 and the assorted statutes that ultimately became the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1899. — Also termed crime against the environment.

environmental criminology. See CRIMINOLOGY.

environmental effect. (1967) Environmental law. A natural or artificial disturbance of the physical, chemical, or biological components that make up the environment.

environmental-impact statement. (1971) Environmental law. 1. A document that the National Environmental Policy Act (42 USCA § 4332(2)(c)) requires a federal agency to produce for a major project or legislative proposal so that better decisions can be made about the positive and negative environmental effects of an undertaking. 2. In some states, a public document used by a government agency to analyze the significant environmental effects of a proposed project, to identify alternatives, and to disclose possible ways to reduce or avoid possible environmental damage. — Abbr. EIS. — Also termed environmental-impact report (EIR). [Cases: Environmental Law ⇨ 571-615.]

environmental law. (1971) The field of law dealing with the maintenance and protection of the environment, including preventive measures such as the requirements of environmental-impact statements, as well as measures to assign liability and provide cleanup for incidents that harm the environment. • Because most environmental litigation involves disputes with governmental agencies, environmental law is heavily intertwined with administrative law. [Cases: Environmental Law ⇨ 1.]

Environmental Protection Agency. An independent federal agency in the executive branch responsible for setting pollution-control standards in the areas of air, water, solid waste, pesticides, radiation, and toxic materials; enforcing laws enacted to protect the environment; and coordinating the antipollution efforts of state and local governments. • The commission was created by Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1970. — Abbr. EPA. [Cases: Environmental Law ⇨ 15.]

environmental terrorism. See ecoterrorism under TERRORISM.

environmental tort. See TORT.

enviroterrorism. See ecoterrorism under TERRORISM.

envoy (en-voy). (17c) 1. A high-ranking diplomat sent to a foreign country to execute a special mission or to serve as a permanent diplomatic representative. — Formerly also termed envoy extraordinary. 2. A messenger or representative.

envoy extraordinary. Int'l law. 1. A person who heads a legation rather than an embassy. • In current usage, the term is honorific and has no special significance. 2. Hist. ENVOY (1).

envoy plenipotentiary. See ambassador plenipotentiary under AMBASSADOR.

eo die (ee-oh di-ee). [Latin] On that day; on the same day.

EOE. abbr. 1. See equal-opportunity employer under EMPLOYER. 2. Errors and omissions excepted. • This phrase is sometimes appended to an account stated to allow for slight errors. See errors-and-omissions insurance under INSURANCE.

eo instante (ee-oh in-stan-tee). [Latin] At that very instant. — Also spelled eo instanti.

eo intuitu (ee-oh in-t[y]oo-ə-too). [Latin] With or in that view; with that intent or object.

eo ipso (ee-oh ip-soh). [Latin] By that very act.

eo loci (ee-oh loh-si). [Latin] In that state; in that condition.

eo loco (ee-oh loh-koh). [Latin] 1. In that place. 2. In that state; in that condition.

E.O.M. abbr. End of month. • This appears as a payment term in some sales contracts.

eo nomine (ee-oh nahm-ə-nee). [Latin] (17c) By or in that name <interest eo nomine>.

EPA. abbr. ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY.

EPC. abbr. 1. EUROPEAN PATENT CONVENTION. 2. Engineering, procurement, and construction. See engineering, procurement, and construction contract under CONTRACT.

EPC contract. See engineering, procurement, and construction contract under CONTRACT.

ephemeral recording. Copyright. A temporary copy of a work that may be created and used by a broadcaster under a license or under a statutory exemption that waives the need to obtain the copyright owner's permission. • A broadcaster must still pay royalties, and usu. must destroy the ephemeral recording within a statutorily defined time after creation or use. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↷67.2.]

e pili ana (ay pee-lee ah-nah). [Hawaiian] Adjoining. • This term usu. refers to land that adjoins a stream.

epimēnia (ep-ə-mee-nee-ə), n. pl. [Latin] Expenses; gifts.

epiqueya (ep-ee-kay-ah), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. An equitable principle calling for the benign and prudent interpretation of the law according to the circumstances of the time, place, and person.

episcopacy (i-pis-kə-pə-see), n. (17c) Eccles. law. 1. The office of a bishop. 2. A form of church government by bishops. 3. An office of overlooking or overseeing.

episcopalia (i-pis-kə-pay-lee-ə), n. pl. (19c) Eccles. law. Synodals, pentecostals, and other customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, collected by rural deans and forwarded to the bishop.

episcopate (i-pis-kə-pit), n. (17c) Eccles. law. 1. A bishopric. 2. The dignity or office of a bishop.

episcoporum ecdicus (i-pis-kə-por-əm ek-di-kəs). [Latin] Eccles. law. A bishop's proctor; a church lawyer.

episcopus (i-pis-kə-pəs), n. [Latin fr. Greek] 1. Roman law. An overseer; an inspector, such as the municipal officer responsible for oversight of the bread and other provisions that served as the citizens' daily food. 2. A bishop.

episcopus puerorum (i-pis-kə-pəs pyoo-ər-or-əm). [Latin "bishop of the boys"] Hist. Eccles. law. A layperson who would, on certain feasts, braid his hair, dress like a bishop, and act ludicrous. • This English custom outlasted several laws passed to abolish it.

episodic criminal. See CRIMINAL.

epistle (ee-pis-əl), n. (13c) Roman & Civil law. A rescript replying to a magistrate or official body. See RESCRIPT (3).

epistola (i-pis-tə-lə), n. [Latin "letter"] Hist. A charter; a written instrument to convey lands or to assure contracts. See ASSURANCE. — Also spelled epistula.

epistulae (i-pis-tyoo-lee), n. pl. [Latin "letters"] Roman law. 1. Rescripts; esp., opinions given by the emperors in cases submitted to them for decision. 2. Opinions of juris consulti, such as Neratius, on questions of law in the form of letters to those consulting them. — Also spelled epistolae.

EPL insurance. See employment-practices liability insurance under INSURANCE.

e pluribus unum (ee ploor-ə-bəs [y]oo-nəm). [Latin] One out of many. • This is the motto on the official seal of the United States and on several U.S. coins.

EPO. abbr. 1. See emergency protective order under PROTECTIVE ORDER. 2. EUROPEAN PATENT OFFICE.

epoch (ep-ək), n. 1. A period of time marked by distinctive features or noteworthy events. 2. A time when a new computation is begun; a time from which memorable dates are counted. — epochal (ep-ək-əl), adj.

EPR. abbr. EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE DIRECTORATE.

EPS. abbr. EARNINGS PER SHARE.

Equal Access Act of 1984. A federal law that prohibits school districts receiving federal funds and allowing extracurricular activities to be held in its facilities from denying secondary-school students the right to meet for religious and other purposes in public-school facilities. 20 USCA § 4071. • The constitutionality of the Act was upheld in Board of Education of Westside Community Schools v. Mergens, 496 U.S. 226, 110 S.Ct. 2356 (1990). [Cases: Schools ↷72.]

equal-access rule. (1989) Criminal law. The doctrine that contraband found on a defendant's premises will not support a conviction if other persons have the same access to the premises as the defendant. • To invoke this defense successfully, the defendant must show that other persons did in fact have equal access to the premises; speculative evidence that trespassers might have come onto the premises will not bar a conviction. [Cases: Controlled Substances ↷30.]

Equal Access to Justice Act. A 1980 federal statute that allows a prevailing party in certain actions against the government to recover attorney's fees and expert-witness fees. Pub. L. No. 96-481, title II, 94 Stat. 2325 (codified as amended in scattered sections of 5, 15, and 28 USCA). — Abbr. EAJA. [Cases: United States ↷147.]

equal and uniform taxation. See TAXATION.

Equal Credit Opportunity Act. A federal statute that prohibits creditors from discriminating against credit applicants on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, age, sex, or marital status with respect to any aspect of a credit transaction. 15 USCA §§ 1691(a)-(f). — Abbr. ECOA. [Cases: Consumer Credit ↷31.]

equal degree. See DEGREE.

equal-dignities rule. Agency. The doctrine that an agent can perform all acts requiring a writing signed by the principal only if the agent's authority is set forth in a writing. • This rule is an adjunct to the statute of frauds and applies when one or more of the signatories to a contract acted through an agent. [Cases: Principal and Agent ⇨ 12.]

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. An independent federal commission that investigates claims of employment discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or age and enforces antidiscrimination statutes through lawsuits. • It was created by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The EEOC encourages mediation and other nonlitigious means of resolving employment disputes. A claimant must file a charge of discrimination with the EEOC before pursuing a claim under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act and certain other employment-related statutes. — Abbr. EEOC. [Cases: Civil Rights ⇨ 1503.]

equal-footing doctrine. (1949) The principle that a state admitted to the Union after 1789 enters with the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction within its borders as did the original 13 states.

equality. (15c) The quality or state of being equal; esp., likeness in power or political status. See EQUAL PROTECTION.

"We need not repeat the burning irony of Anatole France: 'The law in its majesty draws no distinction but forbids rich and poor alike from begging in the streets or from sleeping in the public parks.' Equality is meaningless under unequal conditions." Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 101 (1961).

political equality. The sharing of governmental decisions in such a way that, in the setting of governmental policies, the preference of each citizen is assigned an equal value.

equality before the law. (18c) The status or condition of being treated fairly according to regularly established norms of justice; esp., in British constitutional law, the notion that all persons are subject to the ordinary law of the land administered by the ordinary law courts, that officials and others are not exempt from the general duty of obedience to the law, that discretionary governmental powers must not be abused, and that the task of superintending the operation of law rests with an impartial, independent judiciary.

"A number of distinct meanings are normally given to the provision that there should be equality before the law. One meaning is that equality before the law only connotes the equal subjection of all to a common system of law, whatever its content. . . . A second theory asserts that equality before the law is basically a procedural concept, pertaining to the application and enforcement of laws and the operation of the legal system. . . . A third meaning normally borne by declarations that all are equal before the law, perhaps no more than a variant of the second, is that State and individual before the law should be equal." Polyvios G. Polyviou, The Equal Protection of the Laws 1-2 (1980).

equality of states. Int'l law. The doctrine that all fully independent nations are equal under international law. • This doctrine does not, of course, mean that all nations are equal in power or influence, but merely that, as nations, they all have the same legal rights.

equalization, n. (18c) 1. The raising or lowering of assessed values to achieve conformity with values in surrounding areas. 2. Tax. The adjustment of an assessment or tax to create a rate uniform with another. — Also termed equalization of taxes; fair and proper legal assessment. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 2621-2634.]

equalization board. (1875) A local governmental agency responsible for adjusting the tax rates in different districts to ensure an equitable distribution of the tax burden. — Also termed board of equalization. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 2621-2634.]

equalization of taxes. See EQUALIZATION (2).

equalize, vb. To make equal; to cause to correspond or be the same in amount or degree.

equal-knowledge rule. Georgia law. The principle that a complainant who was at least as aware as the defendant of the danger has no grounds for recovery because the consequences could have been readily avoided. Cf. SUPERIOR-KNOWLEDGE RULE. [Cases: Negligence ⇨ 506(2).]

equally divided. (16c) 1. (Of property) apportioned per capita — not per stirpes — among heirs on the testator's death. • A provision in a will calling for property to be divided "share and share alike" has the same effect. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 530.] 2. (Of a court, legislature, or other group) having the same number of votes on each side of an issue or dispute.

equal-management rule. The doctrine that each spouse alone may manage community property unless the law provides otherwise. Cf. HEAD-AND-MASTER RULE. [Cases: Husband and Wife ⇨ 265.]

equal-opportunity employer. See EMPLOYER.

equal-or-superior-knowledge rule. See SUPERIOR-KNOWLEDGE RULE.

Equal Pay Act. A federal law mandating that all who perform substantially the same work must be paid equally. 29 USCA § 206. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 2452.]

equal protection. (1866) The 14th Amendment guarantee that the government must treat a person or class of persons the same as it treats other persons or classes in like circumstances. • In today's constitutional jurisprudence, equal protection means that legislation that discriminates must have a rational basis for doing so. And if the legislation affects a fundamental right (such as the right to vote) or involves a suspect classification (such as race), it is unconstitutional unless it can withstand strict scrutiny. — Also termed equal protection of the laws; equal protection under the law. See RATIONAL-BASIS TEST; STRICT SCRUTINY. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 3000-3833.]

"Equal protection does not require that all persons be dealt with identically, but it does require that a distinction made have some relevance to the purpose for which the classification is made." Baxstrom v. Herold, 383 U.S. 107, 111, 86 S.Ct. 760, 763 (1966).

"As in all equal protection cases, . . . the crucial question is whether there is an appropriate governmental interest suitably furthered by the differential treatment." Police Dep't v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 95, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 2290 (1972).

"[T]he equal protection principle is exclusively associated with written Constitutions and embodies guarantees of equal treatment normally applied not only to the procedural enforcement of laws but also to the substantive content of their provisions. In other words, the equal protection of the laws is invariably treated as a substantive constitutional principle which demands that laws will only be legitimate if they can be described as just and equal." Polyvios G. Polyviou, The Equal Protection of the Laws 4 (1980).

Equal Protection Clause. (1899) The 14th Amendment provision requiring the states to give similarly situated persons or classes similar treatment under the law. Cf. DUE PROCESS CLAUSE. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 3000–3833.]

equal protection of the laws. See EQUAL PROTECTION.

equal protection under the law. See EQUAL PROTECTION.

Equal Rights Amendment. A failed constitutional amendment that, had it been ratified, would have constitutionally prohibited sex-based discrimination. • Congress passed the Amendment in 1972, but it failed in 1982, having been ratified by only 35 of the required 38 states. — Abbr. ERA.

equal-shares clause. Insurance. A clause requiring an insurer to pay its proportionate share of a claimed loss.

Equal Time Act. A federal law requiring that a broadcasting-facility licensee who permits a legally qualified candidate for public office to use the facility for broadcasting must afford an equal opportunity to all other candidates for the office. 47 USCA § 315. [Cases: Telecommunications ⇨ 1153(3).]

equal-time doctrine. See FAIRNESS DOCTRINE.

equus (ee-kweez), n. [Latin] Hist. A knight.

equilocus (ee-kwə-loh-kəs), n. [Latin] An equal.

equinox (ee-kwə-noks or ek-wə-noks), n. (14c) One of the two periods of the year when the time from the sun's rising to its setting is equal to that from its setting to its rising. • The vernal equinox is about March 21, and the autumnal equinox is about September 22.

equip, vb. (16c) To furnish for service or against a need or exigency; to fit out; to supply with whatever is necessary for efficient action.

equipment, n. (17c) The articles or implements used for a specific purpose or activity (esp. a business operation). • Under the UCC, equipment includes goods if (1) the goods are used in or bought for a business enterprise (including farming or a profession) or by a debtor that is a nonprofit organization or a governmental subdivision or agency, and (2) the goods are not inventory, farm products, or consumer goods. UCC § 9-102(a)(33). [Cases: Secured Transactions ⇨ 16.]

equipment trust. A financing device commonly used by railroads in which a trustee and the railroad together buy equipment from a manufacturer, with the trustee providing most of the purchase price, and the trustee then leases the equipment to the railroad, which pays a rental fee comprising interest, amortization for serial retirement, and the trustee's fee. See EQUIPMENT TRUST CERTIFICATE; equipment trust bond under BOND (3).

equipment trust bond. See BOND (3).

equipment trust certificate. A security, usu. issued by a railroad, to pay for new equipment. • Title to the equipment is held by a trustee until the note has been paid off. — Also termed car trust certificate; trust certificate. See EQUIPMENT TRUST.

equitable (ek-wi-tə-bəl), adj. (16c) 1. Just; consistent with principles of justice and right. 2. Existing in equity; available or sustainable by an action in equity, or under the rules and principles of equity.

equitable abstention. See ABSTENTION.

equitable action. See action in equity under ACTION (4).

equitable-adjustment theory. (1979) The doctrine that in settling a federal contract dispute, the contracting officer should make a fair adjustment within a reasonable time before the contractor has to settle with its subcontractors, suppliers, and other creditors. [Cases: United States ⇨ 70(20).]

equitable adoption. See adoption by estoppel under ADOPTION (1).

equitable asset. See ASSET.

equitable assignment. See ASSIGNMENT (2).

equitable-benefit doctrine. Bankruptcy. The principle that allows a bankruptcy court to grant preferred status to claims for service rendered by persons other than bankruptcy officers, to the extent that the service benefited the estate, when the person filing the claim acted primarily for the benefit of the estate as a whole. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 2871.]

equitable construction. See liberal construction under CONSTRUCTION.

equitable conversion. See CONVERSION (1).

equitable defense. See DEFENSE (1).

equitable disseisin. See DISSEISIN.

equitable distribution. (1893) Family law. The division of marital property by a court in a divorce proceeding, under statutory guidelines that provide for a fair, but not necessarily equal, allocation of the property between the spouses. • With equitable distribution, when a marriage ends in divorce, property acquired during the marriage is divided equitably between the spouses regardless of who holds title to the property. The courts consider many factors in awarding property, including a spouse's monetary contributions, nonmonetary assistance to a spouse's career or earning potential, the efforts of each spouse during the marriage, and the length of the marriage. The court may take into account the relative earning capacity of the spouses and the fault of either spouse. Equitable distribution is applied in 47 states (i.e., all the states except California, Louisiana, and New Mexico, which are "equal division" community-property states). — Also termed equitable division; assignment of property. Cf. TITLE DIVISION; COMMUNITY PROPERTY. [Cases: Divorce ↷248.] equitable life tenant. See LIFE TENANT.

equitable mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

equitable owner. See beneficial owner (1) under OWNER.

equitable ownership. See beneficial ownership (1) under OWNERSHIP.

equitable parent. See PARENT.

equitable-parent doctrine. Family law. The principle that a spouse who is not the biological parent of a child born or conceived during the marriage may, in a divorce action, be considered the child's natural father or mother if (1) the other spouse and the child both acknowledge a parent-child relationship, esp. when that other spouse has cooperated in the development of this relationship before the divorce action, (2) the nonbiologically related spouse wants parental rights, and (3) he or she is willing to take on the responsibility of paying support. • The doctrine sometimes applies to nonspousal partners as well. Very few jurisdictions apply the doctrine. See Carolee Kvorciak Lezuch, Michigan's Doctrine of Equitable Parenthood, 45 Wayne L. Rev. 1529 (1999). — Also termed equitable-parenthood doctrine. [Cases: Child Custody ↷274; Child Support ↷31; Children Out-of-Wedlock ↷1; Parent and Child ↷15.] equitable recoupment. (1878) 1. Tax. A doctrine allowing a taxpayer to offset previously overpaid taxes against current taxes due, even though the taxpayer is time-barred from claiming a refund on the previous taxes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4829.10.] 2. Tax. A doctrine allowing the government to offset taxes previously uncollected from a taxpayer against the taxpayer's current claim for a refund, even though the government is time-barred from collecting the previous taxes. • In both senses, this type of recoupment can be asserted only if the statute of limitations has created an inequitable result. See RECOUPMENT (2). [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷4845.] 3. A principle that diminishes a party's right to recover a debt to the extent that the party holds money or property of the debtor to which the party has no right. • This doctrine is ordinarily a defensive remedy going only to mitigation of damages. The doctrine is sometimes applied so that a claim for a tax refund that is barred by limitations may nonetheless be recouped against a tax claim of the government. — Also termed equitable-recoupment doctrine. See SETOFF; RECOUPMENT (3). [Cases: Set-off and Counterclaim ↷6.]

equitable right to setoff. (1895) The right to cancel cross-demands, usu. used by a bank to take from a customer's deposit accounts the amount equal to the customer's debts that have matured and that are owed to that bank. See SETOFF. [Cases: Banks and Banking ↷134; Set-off and Counterclaim ↷8.]

equitable seisin. See SEISIN.

equitable servitude. See restrictive covenant under COVENANT (4).

equitable subrogation. See legal subrogation under SUBROGATION.

equitable title. See TITLE (2).

equitable tolling. (1967) 1. The doctrine that the statute of limitations will not bar a claim if the plaintiff, despite diligent efforts, did not discover the injury until after the limitations period had expired. • Equitable tolling does not require misconduct by the defendant. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ↷104.5.] 2. The doctrine that if a plaintiff files a suit first in one court and then refiles in another, the statute of limitations does not run while the litigation is pending in the first court if various requirements are met. • Among those requirements are (1) timely notice to the defendant; (2) no prejudice to the defendant; and (3) reasonable and good-faith conduct on the part of the plaintiff.

equitable waste. See WASTE (1).

equity, n. (14c) 1. Fairness; impartiality; evenhanded dealing <the company's policies require managers to use equity in dealing with subordinate employees>.

2. The body of principles constituting what is fair and right; natural law <the concept of "inalienable rights" reflects the influence of equity on the Declaration of Independence>.

"In its popular sense it [equity] is practically equivalent to natural justice. But it would be a mistake to suppose that equity, as administered by the Courts, embraces a jurisdiction as wide and extensive as that which would result from carrying into operation all the principles of natural justice. There are many matters of natural justice wholly unprovided for, from the difficulty of framing any general rules to meet them, and from the doubtful wisdom of a policy of attempting to give a legal sanction to duties of imperfect obligation, such as charity, gratitude and kindness. A large proportion of natural justice in its widest sense is thus not judicially enforced, but is left to the conscience of each individual." R.E. Megarry, Snell's Principles of Equity 1 (23d ed. 1947).

3. The recourse to principles of justice to correct or supplement the law as applied to particular circumstances <the judge decided the case by equity because the statute did not fully address the issue>. — Also termed natural equity. [Cases: Equity ⇨ 1.] 4. The system of law or body of principles originating in the English Court of Chancery and superseding the common and statute law (together called "law" in the narrower sense) when the two conflict <in appealing to the equity of the court, she was appealing to the "king's conscience">; CHANCERY (2).

"Equity is that system of justice which was developed in and administered by the High Court of Chancery in England in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction. This definition is rather suggestive than precise; and invites inquiry rather than answers it. This must necessarily be so. Equity, in its technical and scientific legal sense, means neither natural justice nor even all that portion of natural justice which is susceptible of being judicially enforced. It has, when employed in the language of English law, a precise, definite and limited signification, and is used to denote a system of justice which was administered in a particular court — the nature and extent of which system cannot be defined in a single sentence, but can be understood and explained only by studying the history of that court, and the principles upon which it acts. In order to begin to understand what equity is, it is necessary to understand what the English High Court of Chancery was, and how it came to exercise what is known as its extraordinary jurisdiction. Every true definition of equity must, therefore, be, to a greater or lesser extent, a history." George T. Bispham, The Principles of Equity 1-2 (Joseph D. McCoy ed., 11th ed. 1931).

"In its technical sense, equity may . . . be defined as a portion of natural justice which, although of a nature more suitable for judicial enforcement, was for historical reasons not enforced by the Common Law Courts, an omission which was supplied by the Court of Chancery. In short, the whole distinction between equity and law is not so much a matter of substance or principle as of form and history." R.E. Megarry, Snell's Principles of Equity 2 (23d ed. 1947).

"The term 'equity' is an illustration of Mr. Towkington's proposition that some words have a legal meaning very unlike their ordinary one. In ordinary language 'equity' means natural justice; but the beginner must get that idea out of his head when dealing with the system that the lawyers call equity. Originally, indeed, this system was inspired by ideas of natural justice, and that is why it acquired its name; but nowadays equity is no more (and no less) natural justice than the common law, and it is in fact nothing else than a particular branch of the law of England. Equity, therefore, is law. The student should not allow himself to be confused by the lawyer's habit of contrasting 'law' and 'equity,' for in this context 'law' is simply an abbreviation for the common law. Equity is law in the sense that it is part of the law of England; it is not law only in the sense that it is not part of the common law." Glanville Williams, Learning the Law 25-26 (11th ed. 1982).

5. A right, interest, or remedy recognizable by a court of equity <there was no formal contract formation, so they sued for breach in equity>. [Cases: Equity ⇨ 1.] contravening equity (kon-trə-veen-ing). (1888) A right or interest that is inconsistent with or contrary to a right sought to be enforced.

countervailing equity (kown-tər-vayl-ing). (1824) A contrary and balancing equity, equally deserving of consideration.

latent equity (lay-tənt). (18c) An equitable claim or right known only by the parties for and against whom it exists, or that has been concealed from one who is interested in the subject matter. — Also termed secret equity.

perfect equity. (1821) An equitable title or right that, to be a legal title, lacks only the formal conveyance or other investiture that would make it cognizable at law; esp., the equity of a real-estate purchaser who has paid the full amount due but has not yet received a deed.

secret equity. See latent equity.

6. The right to decide matters in equity; equity jurisdiction <the court decided that the wrong was egregious enough to ignore the statute of limitations and decide the case in equity>. [Cases: Equity ⇨ 1.] 7. The amount by which the value of or an interest in property exceeds secured claims or liens; the difference between the value of the property and all encumbrances upon it <thanks to the real-estate boom, the mortgaged house still had high equity>. — Also termed cushion.

negative equity. The difference between the value of an asset and the outstanding amount of the loan secured by the asset when the asset's current value is less than the loan's balance.

8. An ownership interest in property, esp. in a business <the founders gave her equity in the business in return for all her help>. See OWNERS' EQUITY; BOOK EQUITY; MARKET EQUITY. 9. A share in a publicly traded company <he did not want to cash in his equity>.

equity, bill in. See BILL (2).

equity, court of. See COURT.

equity accounting method. See ACCOUNTING METHOD.

equity capital. See CAPITAL.

equity contra legem (kon-trə lee-jəm). Int'l law. The use of equity in derogation of the law, where, under the circumstances of the case, an exception to the law is needed to achieve an equitable and just result. — Sometimes shortened to contra legem. See EX AEQUO ET BONO. Cf. EQUITY INTRA LEGEM.

equity financing. See FINANCING.

equity insolvency. See INSOLVENCY.

equity intra legem (in-træ lee-jəm). A court's power to interpret and apply the law to achieve the most equitable result. — Sometimes shortened to intra legem. — Also written equity infra legem. Cf. EQUITY CONTRA LEGEM.

equity jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

equity jurisprudence. See JURISPRUDENCE.

equity kicker. See EQUITY PARTICIPATION.

equity loan. See home equity loan under LOAN.

equity of exoneration (eg-zon-ə-ray-shən). The right of a person who is secondarily liable on a debt to make the primarily liable party discharge the debt or reimburse any payment that the secondarily liable person has made. • One example is the right of a surety to call on the principal for reimbursement after the surety has paid the debt. Unlike contribution, which exists when the parties are equally liable, the equity of exoneration exists when parties are successively liable. — Also termed right of exoneration. See EXONERATION.

equity of partners. The right of each partner to have the firm's property applied to the firm's debts. [Cases: Partnership ↷ 179.]

equity of redemption. Real estate. The right of a mortgagor in default to recover property before a foreclosure sale by paying the principal, interest, and other costs that are due. • A defaulting mortgagor with an equity of redemption has the right, until the foreclosure sale, to reimburse the mortgagee and cure the default. In many jurisdictions, the mortgagor also has a statutory right to redeem within six months after the foreclosure sale, and the mortgagor becomes entitled to any surplus from the sale proceeds above the amount of the outstanding mortgage. — Also termed right of redemption. See CLOG ON THE EQUITY OF REDEMPTION; REDEMPTION (4); STATUTORY RIGHT OF REDEMPTION. [Cases: Mortgages ↷ 591, 600.]

"A mortgage is technically a conveyance of title to property as security for a debt. The law courts, with typical technicality, early adopted the rule that if the debt was not paid on the very day it was due, the debtor lost his land. The equity courts, however, with more liberality, and with more of a recognition of the real purpose of the transaction, recognized the fact that the securing of the debt, rather than the act of conveyance of title was the principal thing giving character to the transaction. Accordingly they alleviated the severity of the legal rule by, in effect, giving the land back to the debtor if he would pay the debt, even though it had not been paid on time. This equitable right to redeem, even after default in paying the debt when it was due, was called the 'equity of redemption.'" Charles Herman Kinnane, A First Book on Anglo-American Law 309 (2d ed. 1952).

equity of subrogation. (1850) The right of a person who is secondarily liable on a debt, and who pays the debt, to personally enforce any right that the original creditor could have pursued against the debtor, including the right to foreclose on any security held by the creditor and any right that the creditor may have to contribution from others who are liable for the debt. — Also termed right of subrogation; (in Scots law) right of relief. See SUBROGATION. [Cases: Subrogation ↷ 1.]

equity-of-the-statute rule. (1959) In statutory construction, the principle that a statute should be interpreted according to the legislators' purpose and intent, even if this interpretation goes beyond the literal meaning of the text. • Under this little-used rule, for example, if a statute defines jury-tampering to include a party's "giving a juror food or drink," the giving of cigars to a juror would also fall within that definition. Cf. GOLDEN RULE; MISCHIEF RULE; PLAIN-MEANING RULE. [Cases: Statutes ↷ 189.]

equity participation. (1947) The inclusion of a lender in the equity ownership of a project as a condition of the lender's granting a loan. — Also termed equity kicker.

equity pleading. See PLEADING (2).

equity praeter legem (pree-tər lee-jəm) The use of equity to fill a gap in the law. — Sometimes shortened to praeter legem.

equity ratio. 1. The percentage relationship between a purchaser's equity value (esp. the amount of a down payment) and the property value. 2. The measure of a shareholder's equity divided by total equity.

equity security. See SECURITY.

equity stock. See STOCK.

equity term. See TERM (5).

equity to a settlement. (1838) A wife's equitable right, arising when her husband sues in equity for the reduction of her equitable estate to his own possession, to have all or part of that estate settled upon herself and her children. — Also termed wife's equity; wife's settlement. [Cases: Husband and Wife ↷ 12.]

equivalence of advantages. See RECIPROCITY (2).

equivalent, adj. (15c) 1. Equal in value, force, amount, effect, or significance. 2. Corresponding in effect or function; nearly equal; virtually identical.

equivalent, n. Patents. An element that (1) existed before another element; (2) can perform the same function as the other element; and (3) is recognizable as a substitute for the other element. • For instance, mechanical devices are equivalents when one skilled in the art would have recognized that each device would produce the same result. If the equivalent is known at the time an invention is conceived, the invention's patentability may be questioned. See ANALOG. [Cases: Patents ↷ 237.]

"If a given substitute is an equivalent under certain circumstances or in certain settings, and is not an equivalent under certain other circumstances or in certain other settings, then the substitution is patentable, provided the claim contains express limitations to the circumstances or settings in which the substitution is nonequivalent." Roger Sherman Hoar, Patent Tactics and the Law 43 (3d ed. 1950).

equivalents doctrine. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS.

equivocal (i-kwiv-ə-kəl), adj. (17c) 1. Of doubtful character; questionable. 2. Having more than one meaning or sense; ambiguous.

equivocality test (i-kwiv-ə-kal-ə-tee). See RES IPSA LOQUITUR TEST.

equivocation (i-kwiv-ə-kay-shən). See latent ambiguity under AMBIGUITY.

equuleus (i-kwoo-lee-əs), n. [Latin] Roman law. A rack in the shape of a horse, used for torture.

ERA. abbr. EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT.

erase, vb. (14c) 1. To rub or scrape out (something written); to obliterate. 2. To obliterate (recorded material). 3. To seal (criminal records) from disclosure. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 1226(3); Records ⇨ 32.] — erasure, n.

Erastian (i-ras-chən or i-ras-tee-ən). (17c) Hist. A follower of Thomas Erastus (1524–1583), who thought that offenses against religion and morality should be punished by the civil power and not by the censures of the church. • As a sect, Erastians had great influence in England, particularly among 17th-century common-law lawyers.

erasure of record. See EXPUNGEMENT OF RECORD.

erciscundus (er-sis-kən-dəs), adj. [Latin] Civil law. To be divided. • A suit judicium familiae erciscundae was one to partition an inheritance.

erect, vb. (15c) 1. To construct. 2. To establish. • In England, erect is one of the formal words of incorporation in a royal charter, being part of the phrase, “We do incorporate, erect, ordain, name, constitute, and establish.” See ERIGIMUS.

erectile dysfunction. See IMPOTENCE.

E reorganization. See REORGANIZATION (2).

ergo (ər-goh or air-goh), adv. [Latin] Therefore; thus.

ergolabus (ər-goh-lay-bəs), n. [Latin] Civil law. A person who contracts to perform work by personally furnishing the materials and labor.

Erie-bound, adj. (Of a federal court) required to apply the Erie doctrine. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨ 372.]

Erie doctrine (eer-ee). (1943) The principle that a federal court exercising diversity jurisdiction over a case that does not involve a federal question must apply the substantive law of the state where the court sits. Erie R.R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817 (1938). Cf. REVERSE ERIE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Federal Courts ⇨ 373.]

Erie/Klaxon doctrine. See KLAXON DOCTRINE.

erigimus (i-rij-ə-məs). [Latin] Hist. We erect. • This was one of the words used in a corporation’s royal charter. See ERECT (2).

ERISA (ee- or ə-ris-ə). abbr. EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT.

eristic (e-ris-tik), adj. Of or relating to controversy or disputation. — Also termed eristical.

ermine (ər-min), n. (18c) The station of a judge; judgeship. • The term refers to the fur trimmings (made from the coats of white weasels called “ermine”) adorning official robes of English judges. — ermined, adj.

erosion. (1841) The wearing away of something by action of the elements; esp., the gradual eating away of soil by the operation of currents or tides. Cf. ACCRETION (1); DELICTION; AVULSION (2); ALLUVION.

err (ər), vb. (14c) To make an error; to be incorrect or mistaken <the court erred in denying the motion for summary judgment>.

errant (er-ənt), adj. (14c) 1. Fallible; incorrect; straying from what is proper <an errant judicial holding>. 2. Traveling .

errata sheet. (1932) An attachment to a deposition transcript containing the deponent’s corrections upon reading the transcript and the reasons for those corrections. — Also termed errata page.

erratum (i-ray-təm or i-rah-təm), n. [Latin “error”] (16c) An error that needs correction. Pl. errata (i-ray-tə or i-rah-tə). See CORRIGENDUM.

erroneous (i-roh-nee-əs), adj. (15c) Incorrect; inconsistent with the law or the facts.

erroneous assessment. See ASSESSMENT.

erroneous extradition. See extraordinary rendition under RENDITION.

erroneous judgment. See JUDGMENT.

erroneous rendition. See RENDITION.

erroneous tax. See TAX.

erronice (i-roh-nə-see), adv. [Law Latin] Erroneously; through error or mistake.

error, n. (13c) 1. An assertion or belief that does not conform to objective reality; a belief that what is false is true or that what is true is false; MISTAKE.

error in corpore (kor-pə-ree). (18c) A mistake involving the identity of a particular object, as when a party buys a horse believing it to be the one that the party had already examined and ridden, when in fact it is a different horse.

error in negotio (ni-goh-shee-oh). (1944) A mistake about the type of contract that the parties actually wanted to enter.

error in qualitate (kwah-lə-tay-tee). A mistake affecting the quality of the contractual object.

error in quantitate (kwahn-tə-tay-tee). A mistake affecting the amount of the contractual object.

reissuable error. See REISSUABLE ERROR.

2. A mistake of law or of fact in a tribunal’s judgment, opinion, or order. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 2653; Judgment ⇨ 355, 356.]

assigned error. An alleged error that occurred in a lower court and is pointed out in an appellate brief as grounds for reversal <appellants’ two assigned errors appeared to the court to be harmless errors>.

See ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↻718–754; Federal Courts ↻714.]

Caldwell error. The constitutionally impermissible error of resting a death sentence on a determination made by a sentencer who has been led to believe that the responsibility for determining the appropriateness of the defendant's death sentence lies elsewhere. Caldwell v. Mississippi, 472 U.S. 320, 105 S.Ct. 2633 (1985). • The error most often occurs when the prosecutor or the judge tells the jury that the death sentence, if inappropriate, may be overturned on appeal. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1780(2).] clear error. (18c) A trial judge's decision or action that appears to a reviewing court to have been unquestionably erroneous. • Even though a clear error occurred, it may not warrant reversal. — Also termed clear and unmistakable error. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↻999(1), 1008.1(5); Criminal Law ↻1030(1); Federal Courts ↻850.1.]

clerical error. (18c) An error resulting from a minor mistake or inadvertence, esp. in writing or copying something on the record, and not from judicial reasoning or determination. • Among the boundless examples of clerical errors are omitting an appendix from a document; typing an incorrect number; mis-transcribing a word; and failing to log a call. A court can correct a clerical error at any time, even after judgment has been entered. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(a); Fed. R. Crim. P. 36. — Also termed scrivener's error; vitium clerici. See VITIUM SCRIPTORIS. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻2653; Judgment ↻306.]

cross-error. (1838) An error brought by the party responding to a writ of error.

cumulative error. The prejudicial effect of two or more trial errors that may have been harmless individually. • The cumulative effect of multiple harmless errors may amount to reversible error. See CUMULATIVE-ERROR ANALYSIS. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↻1026; Criminal Law ↻1186.1; Federal Courts ↻891.]

error apparent of record. See plain error.

error in vacuo. See harmless error.

fatal error. See reversible error.

fundamental error. See plain error.

harmful error. See reversible error.

harmless error. (1851) An error that does not affect a party's substantive rights or the case's outcome. • A harmless error is not grounds for reversal. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 61; Fed. R. Crim. P. 52. — Also termed technical error; error in vacuo. Cf. substantial error. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↻764; Appeal and Error ↻1025–1074; Criminal Law ↻1162; Federal Courts ↻891.]

invited error. (1893) An error that a party cannot complain of on appeal because the party, through conduct, encouraged or prompted the trial court to make the erroneous ruling. [Cases: Administrative manifest constitutional error. (1985) An error by the trial court that has an identifiably negative impact on the trial to such a degree that the constitutional rights of a party are compromised. • A manifest constitutional error can be reviewed by a court of appeals even if the appellant did not object at trial.

manifest error. (18c) An error that is plain and indisputable, and that amounts to a complete disregard of the controlling law or the credible evidence in the record. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↻999(1), 1008.1(7); Criminal Law ↻1030(1).]

obvious error. See OBVIOUS ERROR.

plain error. (1801) An error that is so obvious and prejudicial that an appellate court should address it despite the parties' failure to raise a proper objection at trial. • A plain error is often said to be so obvious and substantial that failure to correct it would infringe a party's due-process rights and damage the integrity of the judicial process. See Fed. R. Evid. 103(d). — Also termed fundamental error; error apparent of record. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↻181; Criminal Law ↻1030; Federal Courts ↻611.]

reissuable error. See REISSUABLE ERROR.

reversible error. (1855) An error that affects a party's substantive rights or the case's outcome, and thus is grounds for reversal if the party properly objected at trial. — Also termed harmful error; prejudicial error; fatal error. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↻764; Appeal and Error ↻1025–1074; Criminal Law ↻1162; Federal Courts ↻891.]

scrivener's error. See clerical error.

substantial error. An error that affects a party's substantive rights or the outcome of the case. • A substantial error may require reversal on appeal. Cf. harmless error. [Cases: Appeal and Error ↻181; Federal Courts ↻891.]

technical error. See harmless error.

3. An appeal .

error, assignment of. See ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR.

error, writ of. See WRIT OF ERROR.

error calculi (er-or kal-kyuu-lī). [Latin] Roman & civil law. An error in calculation.

"If it occurs in a judgment and is fully evident, no appeal is necessary. The judge himself may correct it. In public administration, error calculi is without any legal effect. A reexamination and correction (retractatio) is admissible even after ten or twenty years." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 456 (1953).

error de persona (dec pār-soh-nə). [Latin "error of the person"] A mistake about a person's identity. Cf. ERROR NOMINIS.

error acerrimo non affectato insimulatove (e-ror-ee ə-ser-i-moh non af-ek-tay-toh in-sim-yuu-lə-toh-vee). [Latin] Hist. Through error of the most pointed or positive character, not merely pretended or feigned.

errore lapsus (e-ror-ee lap-səs). [Latin] Hist. Mistaken through error. • This type of mistake was usu. not sufficient to invalidate a contract.

error in fact. See mistake of fact (1) under MISTAKE.

error in law. See mistake of law (1) under MISTAKE.

error in vacuo (in vak-yoo-oh). [Latin “error in a void”] See harmless error under ERROR.

error nominis (nahm-ə-nis). [Latin “error of name”] A mistake of detail in a person’s name. Cf. ERROR DE PERSONA.

error of fact. See mistake of fact (1) under MISTAKE.

error-of-judgment rule. The doctrine that a professional is not liable to a client for advice or an opinion given in good faith and with an honest belief that the advice was in the client’s best interests, but that was based on a mistake either in judgment or in analyzing an unsettled area of the professional’s business. • For example, an attorney who makes an error in trial tactics involving an unsettled area of the law may, under certain circumstances, defeat a malpractice claim arising from the tactical error. — Also termed judgmental immunity.

error of law. See mistake of law (1) under MISTAKE.

errors, assignment of. See ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

errors-and-omissions insurance. See INSURANCE.

ERS. abbr. ECONOMIC RESEARCH SERVICE.

ESA. abbr. 1. ECONOMICS AND STATISTICS ADMINISTRATION. 2. EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS ADMINISTRATION.

ESBT. abbr. See electing small-business trust under TRUST (3).

escalation clause. See ESCALATOR CLAUSE.

escalator clause. (1930) 1. A contractual provision that makes pricing flexible by increasing or decreasing the contract price according to changing market conditions, such as higher or lower taxes or operating costs. Cf. DE-ESCALATION CLAUSE. [Cases: Contracts ↻229, 231.] 2. A provision in a divorce decree or divorce agreement providing for the automatic increase of alimony payments upon the occurrence of any of various triggering events, such as cost-of-living increases or an increase in the obligor’s salary. • Escalation clauses for child support are often unenforceable. [Cases: Child Support ↻161; Divorce ↻240(2), 243, 245.] 3. Oil & gas. A provision in a long-term gas contract allowing the base price of the gas to be adjusted as the market changes. • The actual adjustment may be up or down. [Cases: Gas ↻14.1(3).] — Also termed escalation clause; fluctuating clause.

escape, n. (14c) 1. The act or an instance of breaking free from confinement, restraint, or an obligation. 2. An unlawful departure from legal custody without the use of force. — Also termed actual escape. Cf. PRISON BREACH. [Cases: Escape ↻1.]

“In the technical sense an ‘escape’ is an unauthorized departure from legal custody; in a loose sense the word is used to indicate either such an unlawful departure or an avoidance of capture. And while the word is regularly used by the layman in the broader sense it usually is limited to the narrower meaning when used in the law, — although this is not always so.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 559 (3d ed. 1982).

constructive escape. A prisoner’s obtaining more liberty than the law allows, while not fully regaining freedom.

3. At common law, a criminal offense committed by a peace officer who allows a prisoner to depart unlawfully from legal custody. — Also termed voluntary escape. [Cases: Escape ↻3.] — escape, vb.

negligent escape. The offense committed by a peace officer who negligently allows a prisoner to depart from legal custody.

“Escapes are either voluntary, or negligent. Voluntary are such as are by the express consent of the keeper, after which he never can retake his prisoner again, (though the plaintiff may retake him at any time) but the sheriff must answer for the debt. Negligent escapes are where the prisoner escapes without his keeper’s knowledge or consent; and then upon fresh pursuit the defendant may be retaken, and the sheriff shall be excused, if he has him again before any action brought against himself for the escape.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 415–16 (1768).

escape clause. (1945) A contractual provision that allows a party to avoid performance under specified conditions; specif., an insurance-policy provision — usu. contained in the “other insurance” section of the policy — requiring the insurer to provide coverage only if no other coverage is available. Cf. EXCESS CLAUSE; PRO RATA CLAUSE.

escapee. (19c) A prisoner or other inmate who has escaped from lawful custody. [Cases: Escape ↻1.]

“The word ‘escapee’ is employed at times by those who are not careful in the use of language. They probably think this word is comparable to ‘arrestee’ or ‘employee.’ But the arrestee did not do the arresting and the employee did not do the employing. The employee does the work but that makes him a worker, not a workee.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 560 (3d ed. 1982).

escape period. Labor law. A time agreed upon in some union contracts during which workers may withdraw from the union near the end of one term covered by the contract and before the start of the next.

escape warrant. See WARRANT (1).

escapium (e-skay-pee-əm), n. [Law Latin] That which comes by chance or accident. • In medieval Latin, the term often referred to the escape of a prisoner or the straying of cattle.

escheat (es-cheet), n. (14c) 1. Hist. The reversion of land ownership back to the lord when the immediate tenant dies without heirs. See WRIT OF ESCHAT. 2. Reversion of property (esp. real property) to the state upon the death of an owner who has neither a will nor any legal heirs. [Cases: Escheat ↻1–8.] 3. Property that has so reverted. See heirless estate under ESTATE (3). — escheat, vb. — escheatable, adj.

que trust without heirs, the lands did not escheat to the crown, but the trustee, being in esse and in the legal seisin of the land, took the land discharged of the trust, and bound as owner for the feudal services. But as the feudal tenures do not exist in this country, there are no private persons who succeeded to the inheritance by escheat; and the state steps in the place of the feudal lord, by virtue of its sovereignty, as the original and ultimate proprietor of all the lands within its jurisdiction." 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *423-24 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

escheat grant. See GRANT.

escheator (es-cheet-ər). Hist. A royal officer appointed to assess the value of property escheating to the Crown.

• Corrupt officers led many to associate the escheator with fraudulent conduct, giving rise to the word cheat as used in the modern sense. — Also termed cheater.

escheat patent. See escheat grant under GRANT.

escheccum (es-chek-əm), n. [Latin] Hist. A jury or inquisition.

Escobedo rule (es-kə-bee-doh). Criminal procedure. The principle that a statement by an unindicted, targeted suspect in police custody is inadmissible at trial unless the police warn the suspect of the right to remain silent and provide an opportunity for the suspect to consult with retained or appointed counsel. • This rule was a precursor to the Miranda rule. Escobedo v. Illinois, 378 U.S. 478, 84 S.Ct. 1758 (1964). See MIRANDA RULE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻412.2(3), 517.2(3), 518.]

escot (e-skot), n. (17c) Hist. English law. A tax paid in boroughs and corporations to support the community.

escribano (es-kree-bah-noh), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. A notary; specif., an officer who has authority to set down in writing, and attest to, transactions and contracts between private persons, as well as judicial acts and proceedings.

escritura (es-kree-toor-ah), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. A written instrument, such as a contract; esp., a deed that either is prepared by an escribano or notary of a corporation or council (concejo) or is sealed with a monarchical or governmental seal.

escritura publica (es-kree-toor-ah pəb-li-kə). See PUBLIC WRITING (2).

escroquerie (es-kroh-kə-ree), n. [French] Fraud; swindling; cheating.

escrow (es-kroh), n. (16c) 1. A legal document or property delivered by a promisor to a third party to be held by the third party for a given amount of time or until the occurrence of a condition, at which time the third party is to hand over the document or property to the promisee <the agent received the escrow two weeks before the closing date>. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows ↻11-26.] 2. An account held in trust or as security <the earnest money is in escrow>. — Also termed escrow account; impound account; reserve account. See escrow account under ACCOUNT. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows ↻11.] 3. The holder of such a document, property, or deposit <the attorney performed the function of escrow>. — Also termed escrow agent. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows ↻13.] 4. The general arrangement under which a legal document or property is delivered to a third person until the occurrence of a condition <creating an escrow>. — escrow, vb.

"Like 'scroll' and 'scrawl,' the word 'escrow' is derived from the Norman-French word for a writing or a written instrument. It has come in practice to refer to a security device: one or both parties to a transaction deposit property or an instrument with a third party until some condition has occurred. The property or instrument may be referred to as 'the escrow'; the delivery is said to be 'in escrow.'" Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 103 cmt. a (1979).

escrow account. See ACCOUNT.

escrow agent. See AGENT (2).

escrow agreement. (1882) The instructions given to the third-party depository of an escrow. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows ↻15.]

escrowee. See escrow agent under AGENT (2).

escrow holder. See escrow agent under AGENT (2).

escrowl (es-kroh), n. Hist. 1. An escrow. 2. A scroll.

escrow officer. See escrow agent under AGENT (2).

escuage (es-kyoo-ij). [French, fr. Latin escuagium] See SCUTAGE.

E-Sign Act. The short name for the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act, a 2000 federal statute that establishes the legal equivalency of electronic contracts, electronic signatures, and other electronic records with their paper counterparts. • The E-Sign Act applies to all types of transactions, whether in interstate or foreign commerce, unless a specific exception applies. Among the few exceptions are documents related to family law and probate law, most documents required by the Uniform Commercial Code, court documents, and a list of notices that directly impact the lives of consumers (e.g., a notice of termination of utility services or a notice of eviction). [Cases: Signatures ↻1.] esketores (es-kə-tor-eez), n. pl. Hist. Robbers; destroyers of others' lands or fortunes.

eskipper (ə-skip-ər), vb. To ship. — Also termed eskippare (es-kə-pair-ee).

eskippeson (ə-skip-[ə]-sən), n. Shippage; passage by sea. — Also termed skippeson.

eslisor (es-lī-zər). See ELISOR.

esne (ez-nee), n. Hist. A hiring of servile condition; a hired laborer or a slave.

esnecy (es-ni-see), n. Hist. Seniority; the condition, right, or privilege of the eldest-born. • The term esp. applied to the privilege of the eldest among coparceners to make a first choice of shares upon a voluntary partition. — Also termed aesnecia.

ESOP (ee-sop). abbr. See employee-stock-ownership plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

espera (es-pə-rə), n. A period fixed by law or by a court within which certain acts are to be performed (such as payment of a debt).

espionage (es-pee-ə-nahzh). (18c) The practice of using spies to collect information about what another government or company is doing or plans to do.

industrial espionage. (1962) Intellectual property. One company's spying on another to steal trade secrets or other proprietary information.

Espionage Act. A federal law that criminalizes and punishes espionage, spying, and related crimes. 18 USCA §§ 793 et seq. • Two Espionage Acts were passed. The 1917 act criminalized false statements intended to interfere with the war effort; to willfully cause or attempt to cause dissension in the armed forces; or to willfully obstruct national recruiting and enlistment activities. This act remains enforceable "when the United States is at war." The 1918 act criminalized speech intended to obstruct war-bond sales; to generate scorn or contempt for democratic government, the flag, or the uniform of the Army or Navy; to urge reduced production of war materials with the intent to hinder the war effort; or to express support for a national enemy or opposition to the United States' cause. The act's constitutionality was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court before it was repealed in 1921. [Cases: War and National Emergency ↻48.]

esplees (es-pleez), n. pl. (17c) Archaic. 1. Products yielded from land. 2. Rents or other payments derived from land. 3. Land itself. — Also termed explees.

espousals (ə-spow-zəlz), n. (14c) Mutual promises between a man and a woman to marry one another. [Cases: Breach of Marriage Promise ↻4, 5.]

"Espousals were of two kinds: sponsalia per verba de futuro, which take place if man and woman promise each other that they will hereafter become husband and wife; sponsalia per verba de praesenti, which take place if they declare that they take each other as husband and wife now, at this very moment." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 368 (2d ed. 1899).

espouse, vb. (15c) 1. To marry. 2. To dedicate oneself to and advocate for (a cause).

esquire (es-kwɪr or e-skwɪr). (15c) 1. Hist. A candidate for knighthood who assisted knights in martial endeavors. 2. Hist. A member of the gentry whose rank was inferior to that of a knight. 3. Archaic. A landed gentleman; a member of the landed gentry. 4. (usu. cap. as an honorific) A title of courtesy commonly appended after the name of a lawyer. — Abbr. Esq.

"Heralds and experts on honour for a long time regarded serjeants either as inferior to esquires or at most as being equals by reason of office. James Whitelocke, a barrister with historical interests and a future serjeant, said in 1601 that becoming a serjeant carried with it the status of esquire, so that the proper description was 'A.B. esquire, serjeant at law.' Chief Justice Dyer, however, argued in 1580 that the name of esquire was 'drowned' on creation as a serjeant, the latter being a higher degree; and the same point of view was urged in 1611 by the serjeants in a precedence dispute. It was probably not until the eighteenth century that the heralds accepted the priority of serjeants before esquires. By that time the rank of esquire had begun its decline, and according to the courts it belonged to all barristers at law by virtue of their profession.: J.H. Baker, The Order of Serjeants at Law 52 (1984).

essence, of the. See OF THE ESSENCE.

essence test. Labor law. A test under which an arbitrator's interpretation of a collective-bargaining agreement must be upheld if it derives in any rational way from the agreement, viewed in light of the agreement's language, its context, and any other evidence of the parties' intention. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻1592; Labor and Employment ↻1623(1).]

essendi quietum de tolonio (e-sen-dɪ kwɪ-ee-təm dee tə-loh-nee-oh). [Latin "a writ to be free of a toll"] Hist. A writ available to a citizen or a burgess of any city or town who, by charter or prescription, is exempt from a particular toll.

essential finding. See FINDING OF FACT.

essentialia (e-sen-shee-ay-lee-ə). [Law Latin "essentials"] Scots law. Terms or qualities essential to the existence of a particular right or contract. Cf. ACCIDENTALIA.

"Essentialia. This term, applied to a contract, or right, or other subject of law, signifies those things which are essential to the very being of the contract or right, as such, and any alteration in which would make the contract or right resolve into one of another kind." William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 406 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

essentialia feudi (e-sen-shee-ay-lee-ə fyoo-dɪ). [Law Latin] Scots law. The essential terms of a feudal right. Cf. ACCIDENTALIA FEUDI.

essential mistake. See MISTAKE.

essential term. See fundamental term under TERM (2).

essoin (e-soyn), n. [fr. Old French essoï(g)ne "excuse"] (14c) Hist. 1. An excuse for not appearing in court on an appointed day in obedience to a summons. 2. The offering or presentation of such an excuse. — Also spelled essoign.

"The first return-day of every term, properly speaking, is the first day of that term; and on that day the court used formerly to sit. . . to hear the essoigns, or excuses, of such as did not appear according to the summons of the writ. This day therefore came to be called the essoign-day of the term." 1 George Crompton, Practice Common-Placed: Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas liv (3d ed. 1787).

essoin, vb. [fr. Old French essoï(g)nier "to excuse"] (14c) Hist. To present an excuse for not appearing in court as ordered.

essoin day. Hist. English law. The first general return day of the term, when the courts sat to receive essoins. •

By the Law Terms Act (1830), essoin days were eliminated as a part of the term. St. 11 Geo. 4; 1 Will. 4, ch. 70, § 6.

essoins de malo villae (dee mal-oh vil-ee). Hist. A procedure by which a defendant, who was in court the first day but was then taken ill without pleading, would send two essoiners to state in court that the defendant was detained by sickness in a particular village and thus unable to attend. • This essoin would be accepted unless the plaintiff could show its falsity.

essoiner (e-soyn-ər), n. Hist. A person making an essoin. — Also termed essoinator (e-soyn-ee-ay-tər).

essoins roll. Hist. A roll upon which essoins were entered, together with the day to which they were adjourned.

establish, vb. (14c) 1. To settle, make, or fix firmly; to enact permanently <one object of the Constitution was to establish justice>. 2. To make or form; to bring about or into existence <Congress has the power to establish Article III courts>. 3. To prove; to convince <the House managers tried to establish the President's guilt>.

established royalty. See ROYALTY (1).

establishment, n. (15c) 1. The act of establishing; the state or condition of being established. 2. An institution or place of business. 3. A group of people who are in power or who control or exercise great influence over something.

Establishment Clause. (1959) The First Amendment provision that prohibits the federal and state governments from establishing an official religion, or from favoring or disfavoring one view of religion over another. U.S. Const. amend. I. Cf. FREE EXERCISE CLAUSE. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⇨ 1294.]

estadal (es-tah-dahl), n. [Spanish] Hist. In Spanish America, a measure of land of 16 square varas, or yards.

estadia (es-tah-dee-ah), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. 1. A delay in a voyage, or in the delivery of cargo, caused by the charterer or consignee, who becomes liable for demurrage. 2. The time for which the party who has chartered a vessel, or is bound to receive the cargo, must pay demurrage because of a delay in performing the contract. — Also termed sobrestadia (soh-bray-stah-dee-ah).

estandard (ə-stan-dərd), n. [Law French] A standard of weights and measures.

est a scavoir (ay ah skah-vwahr). [Law French, prob. fr. Latin est sciendum "it is to be known"] It is to be understood or known; to wit. • This expression is common in Sir Thomas de Littleton's 15th-century Treatise on Tenures, written in Law French. See SCIENDUM EST.

estate. (15c) 1. The amount, degree, nature, and quality of a person's interest in land or other property; esp., a real-estate interest that may become possessory, the ownership being measured in terms of duration. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY.

absolute estate. A full and complete estate that cannot be defeated.

"The epithet absolute is used to distinguish an estate extended to any given time, without any condition to defeat or collateral limitation to determine [i.e., terminate] the estate in the mean time, from an estate subject to a condition or collateral limitation. The term absolute is of the same signification with the word pure or simple, a word which expresses that the estate is not determinable by any event besides the event marked by the clause of limitation." G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 54 (3d ed. 1933).

base estate. Hist. An estate held at the will of the lord, as distinguished from a freehold.

concurrent estate. (18c) Ownership or possession of property by two or more persons at the same time. • In modern practice, there are three types of concurrent estates: tenancy in common, joint tenancy, and tenancy by the entirety. — Also termed concurrent interest.

"A concurrent estate is simply an estate — whether present or future, defeasible or non-defeasible, in fee simple, in tail, for life, or for years — that is owned by two or more persons at the same time. O transfers 'to A and B and their heirs.' A and B own a present concurrent estate in fee simple absolute." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 53 (2d ed. 1984).

conditional estate. See estate on condition.

contingent estate. (17c) An estate that vests only if a specified event does or does not happen. Cf. estate on condition.

defeasible estate. (17c) An estate that may come to an end before its maximum duration has run because of the operation of a special limitation, a condition subsequent, or an executory limitation. • If an estate is defeasible by operation of a special limitation, it is called a determinable estate.

derivative estate. (18c) A particular interest that has been carved out of another, larger estate. Cf. original estate.

determinable estate. (17c) An estate that is defeasible by operation of a special limitation. — Also termed determinable freehold.

equitable estate. (17c) An estate recognized in equity, such as a trust beneficiary's interest. See EQUITY.

"[A] legal estate was a right in rem, an equitable estate a right in personam, that is to say, the former conferred a right enforceable against the whole world, the latter one which could be enforced only against a limited number of persons." G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 54 (3d ed. 1933).

equitable life estate. An interest in real or personal property that lasts for the life of the holder of the estate and that is equitable as opposed to legal in its creation. • An example is a life estate held by a trust beneficiary. [Cases: Life Estates ⇨ 1, 21.]

estate ad remanentiam (ad rem-ə-nen-shee-əm). An estate in fee simple.

estate at sufferance. See tenancy at sufferance under TENANCY.

estate at will. See tenancy at will under TENANCY.

estate by curtesy. An estate owned by a wife, to which the husband is entitled upon her death. See CURTESY.

estate by elegit. An estate held by a judgment creditor, entitling the creditor to the rents and profits from land owned by the debtor until the debt is paid. See ELEGIT.

estate by entirety. A common-law estate in which each spouse is seized of the whole of the property.

- An estate by entirety is based on the legal fiction that a husband and wife are a single unit. The estate consists of five unities: time, title, interest, possession, and marriage. The last of these unities distinguishes the estate by entirety from the joint tenancy. A joint tenancy can exist with any number of persons, while an estate by entirety can be held only by a husband and wife and is not available to any other persons. And it can be acquired only during the marriage. This estate has a right of survivorship, but upon the death of one spouse, the surviving spouse retains the entire interest rather than acquiring the decedent's interest. Most jurisdictions have abolished this estate. — Also termed estate by the entirety; estate by entireties; estate by the entireties; tenancy by the entirety; tenancy by the entireties. Cf. joint tenancy and tenancy in common under TENANCY. [Cases: Husband and Wife ↷ 14.2.] estate by purchase. An estate acquired in any manner other than by descent. See PURCHASE.

estate by statute staple. An estate in a defendant's land held by a creditor under the statute staple until the debt was paid. See STATUTE STAPLE.

estate by the curtesy of England. See CURTESY.

estate for a term. See tenancy for a term under TENANCY.

estate for life. See life estate.

estate for years. See tenancy for a term under TENANCY.

estate in common. See tenancy in common under TENANCY.

estate in fee simple. See FEE SIMPLE.

estate in fee tail. See FEE TAIL.

estate in gage. An estate that has been pledged as security for a debt. See MORTGAGE.

estate in partnership. A joint estate that is vested in the members of a partnership when real estate is purchased with partnership funds and for partnership purposes. [Cases: Partnership ↷ 76.]

estate in possession. An estate in which a present interest passes to the tenant; an estate in which the tenant is entitled to receive the rents and other profits arising from the estate. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷ 1.]

estate in remainder. See REMAINDER (1).

estate in reversion. See REVERSION (1).

estate in severalty (sev-ə-rəl-tee). An estate held by a tenant separately, without any other person being joined or connected in interest.

estate in tail. See FEE TAIL.

estate in vadio (in vad-ee-oh). An estate in gage or pledge. See MORTGAGE.

estate less than freehold. An estate for years, an estate at will, or an estate at sufferance.

estate on condition. (18c) An estate that vests, is modified, or is defeated upon the occurrence or non-occurrence of some specified event. • While an estate on limitation can revert without any action by the grantor or the grantor's heirs, an estate on condition requires the entry of the grantor or the grantor's heirs to end the estate whenever the condition occurs. — Also termed estate on conditional limitation; conditional estate. Cf. estate on limitation.

estate on conditional limitation. See estate on condition.

estate on condition expressed. (18c) A contingent estate in which the condition upon which the estate will fail is stated explicitly in the granting instrument.

estate on condition implied. (18c) A contingent estate having some condition that is so inseparable from the estate's essence that it need not be expressed in words.

estate on limitation. (18c) An estate that automatically reverts back to the grantor according to a provision, usu. regarding the passage of a determined time period, designated by words such as "during," "while," and "as long as." See fee simple determinable under FEE SIMPLE. Cf. estate on condition.

estate pur autre vie. See life estate pur autre vie.

estate tail. See FEE TAIL.

estate tail quasi. An estate granted by a life tenant, who, despite using language of conveyance that is otherwise sufficient to create an estate tail, is unable to grant in perpetuity.

executed estate. See REMAINDER (1).

expectant estate. See FUTURE INTEREST.

fast estate. See real property under PROPERTY.

freehold estate. See FREEHOLD.

future estate. See FUTURE INTEREST.

joint estate. (15c) Any of the following five types of estates: (1) a joint tenancy, (2) a tenancy in common, (3) an estate in coparcenary (a common-law estate in which coheirs hold as tenants in common), (4) a tenancy by the entirety, or (5) an estate in partnership. [Cases: Husband and Wife ↷ 14.2-14.7; Joint Tenancy ↷ 1; Tenancy in Common ↷ 1.]

landed estate. An interest in real property, esp. suburban or rural land, as distinguished from real estate situated in a city. — Also termed landed property.

leasehold estate. See LEASEHOLD.

legal estate. An interest enforced in law rather than in equity.

legal life estate. See life estate.

life estate. (18c) An estate held only for the duration of a specified person's life, usu. the possessor's. • Most life estates — created, for example, by a grant "to Jane for life" — are beneficial interests under trusts, the corpus often being personal property, not real property. — Also termed estate for life; legal life estate; life tenancy. See LIFE TENANT. [Cases: Life Estates ⇨ 1.]

life estate pur autre vie (pər oh-trə vee). (1888) A life estate for which the measuring life — the life whose duration determines the duration of the estate — is someone's other than the possessor's. — Also spelled life estate per autre vie. [Cases: Life Estates ⇨ 1.]

marital estate. See marital property under PROPERTY.

next eventual estate. (1836) An estate taking effect upon an event that terminates the accumulation of undisposed rents and profits; an estate taking effect when the existing estate terminates.

nonancestral estate. An estate from any source other than the owner's ancestors. — Also termed nonancestral property.

nonfreehold estate. Any estate in real property without seisin, such as an estate for years, from period to period, at will, or at sufferance; any estate except a fee simple, fee tail, or life estate.

original estate. An estate that is the first of one or more derivative estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion.

particular estate. An estate or interest less than a fee simple, such as a fee tail, a life estate, or a term for years. • It is so called because the estate is a mere part (particula) of the fee simple.

periodic estate. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY.

possessory estate. (18c) An estate giving the holder the right to possess the property, with or without an ownership interest in the property.

present estate. An estate in immediate possession; one vested at the present time, as distinguished from a future estate. See present interest under INTEREST (2).

qualified estate. Any estate that is not absolute and unconditional; a limited or conditional estate.

reversionary estate. See REVERSION.

separate estate. The individual property of one of two persons who stand in a marital or business relationship. See SEPARATE PROPERTY. [Cases: Divorce ⇨ 252.3(3); Husband and Wife ⇨ 110–202.]

settled estate. An estate created or limited under a settlement; an estate in which the powers of alienation, devising, and transmission according to the ordinary rules of descent are restrained by the settler's terms.

stipendiary estate (sti-pen-dee-er-ee). Hist. An estate granted in return for services, usu. of a military kind.

vested estate. (18c) An estate with a present right of enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment.

2. All that a person or entity owns, including both real and personal property.

bankruptcy estate. See BANKRUPTCY ESTATE.

3. The property that one leaves after death; the collective assets and liabilities of a dead person. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ⇨ 38–73.]

"The word 'estate' was probably adopted because in early days it was possible to ascertain a man's status or position in life by discovering the particular kind of tenure by which he held his lands. The quality of his tenure gave a clue to his status. The baron for example ought in theory to be the holder of a barony; he has the status of a baron because he has the estate of a baron. . . . [O]ne of the distinguishing marks of [the] freehold estates was the uncertainty of their duration. They were invariably held either for life, or for some other space of time dependent upon an event which might not happen within a lifetime, and thus a freehold estate came to be regarded as one which involved the performance of free services only, but as one which endured for an uncertain time. In this way, the word 'estate' came to denote the quantity of a man's interest in land." G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 26 (3d ed. 1933).

adjusted gross estate. 1. The total value of a decedent's property after subtracting administration expenses, funeral expenses, creditors' claims, and casualty losses. • The value of the adjusted gross estate is used in computing the federal estate tax. Cf. net probate estate under PROBATE ESTATE. 2. See gross estate (1).

ancestral estate. An estate that is acquired by descent or by operation of law with no other consideration than that of blood.

augmented estate. A refinement of the elective share to which a surviving spouse is entitled, whereby the "fair share" is identified as something other than the traditional one-third of the probate estate. • The current version of the Uniform Probate Code uses a sliding scale that increases with each year of marriage. Under the UPC, a surviving spouse has accrued full marital-property rights after 15 years of marriage. This percentage of spousal entitlement is applied to a reconceptualization of the decedent's estate to take into account more than just the assets remaining in the probate estate at death. Also added into the calculation are the value of certain inter vivos transfers that the decedent made to others in a way that depleted the probate estate; the value of similar transfers made to others by the spouse as well as the value of the marital property owned by the spouse at the decedent's death; and the value of inter vivos transfers of property made by the decedent to the spouse. The Uniform Probate Code adopted this version of the augmented-estate concept in an attempt to equalize the treatment of surviving spouses in non-community-property states vis-à-vis community-property states. Unif. Probate

Code § 2-202. See ELECTIVE SHARE. [Cases: Wills ↷ 778–803.]

decedent's estate. (18c) The real and personal property that a person possesses at the time of death and that passes to the heirs or testamentary beneficiaries. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↷ 38–73.]

estate of inheritance. An estate that may descend to heirs.

gross estate. 1. The total value of a decedent's property without any deductions. 2. Loosely, adjusted gross estate. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷ 4168–4182.30.]

heirless estate. The property of a person who dies intestate and without heirs. See ESCHEAT.

net estate. See net probate estate under PROBATE ESTATE.

net probate estate. See PROBATE ESTATE.

probate estate. See PROBATE ESTATE.

residuary estate. (18c) The part of a decedent's estate remaining after payment of all debts, expenses, statutory claims, taxes, and testamentary gifts (special, general, and demonstrative) have been made. — Also termed residual estate; residue; residuary; residuum. [Cases: Wills ↷ 586.]

taxable estate. (18c) A decedent's gross estate reduced by allowable deductions (such as administration costs and ESOP deductions). IRC (26 USCA) § 2051. • The taxable estate is the amount that is subject to the federal unified transfer tax at death. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷ 4168–4182.30.]

4. A tract of land, esp. one affected by an easement.

"The old definitions of this word [estate] generally confine it to lands or realty. Thus, according to Lord Coke, 'state or estate signifieth such inheritance, freehold, term for years, &c., as any man hath in lands or tenements.' Co. Litt. 345a. So Cowell defines it to be 'that title or interest which a man hath in lands or tenements,' and the same definition is given in the Termes de la Ley. And this limited sense of the word has been relied on, in argument, in some cases . . . But, according to the settled modern doctrine, the term estate is of much more extensive import and application, being indeed genus generalissimum, and clearly comprehending things personal as well as real; person as well as real estate." 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 561 (2d ed. 1867).

dominant estate. (18c) An estate that benefits from an easement. — Also termed dominant tenement; dominant property; upper estate. Cf. servient estate. [Cases: Easements ↷ 1, 38.]

lower estate. See servient estate.

real estate. See real property under PROPERTY.

servient estate (sər-vee-ənt). (18c) An estate burdened by an easement. — Also termed servient tenement; servient property; lower estate. Cf. dominant estate. [Cases: Easements ↷ 1, 38.]

upper estate. See dominant estate.

estate duty. See DUTY (4).

estate freeze. (1986) An estate-planning maneuver whereby an owner of a closely held business exchanges common stock for dividend-paying preferred stock and gives the common stock to his or her children, thus seeking to guarantee an income in retirement and to avoid estate tax on future appreciation in the business's value.

estate from period to period. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY.

estate in expectancy. See FUTURE INTEREST.

estate in freehold. See FREEHOLD.

estate in lands. (16c) 1. Property that one has in lands, tenements, or hereditaments. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷ 1.] 2. The conditions or circumstances under which a tenant stands in relation to the leased property.

estate planning. (1938) 1. The preparation for the distribution and management of a person's estate at death through the use of wills, trusts, insurance policies, and other arrangements, esp. to reduce administration costs and transfer-tax liability. [Cases: Wills ↷ 1–202.] 2. A branch of law that involves the arrangement of a person's estate, taking into account the laws of wills, taxes, insurance, property, and trusts.

estates of the realm. 1. The lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons of Great Britain. — Also termed the three estates. 2. In feudal Europe, the clergy, nobles, and commons. • Because the lords spiritual had no separate assembly or negative in their political capacity, some authorities reduce the estates in Great Britain to two, the lords and commons. In England (until about the 14th century), the three estates of the realm were the clergy, barons, and knights. In legal practice, the lords spiritual and lords temporal are usu. collectively designated simply as lords.

estate's property. See PROPERTY OF THE ESTATE.

estate tax. See TAX.

estate trust. See TRUST.

ester in judgment (es-tər). [Law French] To appear before a tribunal, as either plaintiff or defendant.

estimated damages. See liquidated damages under DAMAGES.

estimated tax. See TAX.

estimated useful life. See USEFUL LIFE.

estop (e-stop), vb. (15c) To bar or prevent by estoppel.

estoppage (e-stop-ij), n. (18c) The state or condition of being estopped.

estoppel (e-stop-əl), n. (16c) 1. A bar that prevents one from asserting a claim or right that contradicts what one has said or done before or what has been legally established as true. [Cases: Estoppel ↷ 52–59.] 2. A bar that prevents the relitigation of issues. 3. An affirmative defense alleging good-faith reliance on a misleading representation and an injury or detrimental change in position resulting from that reliance. Cf. WAIVER (1). [Cases: Estoppel ↷ 83–87.] — estop, vb.

"'Estoppel,' says Lord Coke, 'cometh of the French word estoupe, from whence the English word stopped; and it is called an estoppel or conclusion, because a man's own act or acceptance stoppeth or closeth up his mouth to allege or plead the truth.' [Co. Litt. 352a.] Estoppel may also be defined to be a legal result or 'conclusion' arising from an admission which has either been actually made, or which the law presumes to have been made, and which is binding on all persons whom it affects." Lancelot Feilding Everest, Everest and Strode's Law of Estoppel 1 (3d ed. 1923).

"In using the term 'estoppel,' one is of course aware of its kaleidoscopic varieties. One reads of estoppel by conduct, by deed, by laches, by misrepresentation, by negligence, by silence, and so on. There is also an estoppel by judgment and by verdict; these, however, obviously involve procedure. The first-named varieties have certain aspects in common. But these aspects are not always interpreted by the same rules in all courts. The institution seems to be flexible." John H. Wigmore, "The Scientific Role of Consideration in Contract," in Legal Essays in Tribute to Orrin Kip McMurray 641, 643 (1935).

administrative collateral estoppel. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

assignee estoppel. Patents. The equitable doctrine that bars the assignee of a patent from contesting the patent's validity under some circumstances, as when the assignee seeks to avoid royalty payments, to void an assignment contract, or to mitigate damages related to the assignee's fraudulent acquisition of the patent. • The doctrine prevents an assignee from simultaneously attacking and defending the validity of the same patent. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 129(3).]

assignor estoppel. Patents. Estoppel barring someone who has assigned the rights to a patent from later attacking the patent's validity. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. v. Formica Insulation Co., 266 U.S. 342, 45 S.Ct. 117 (1924). • The doctrine was narrowed by Diamond Scientific Co. v. Ambico, Inc., 848 F.2d 1220 (Fed. Cir. 1988), in which the court held that in some circumstances equity may outweigh the public-policy reasons behind the estoppel doctrine. [Cases: Patents ⇨ 129(2).] collateral estoppel. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

equitable estoppel. (18c) 1. A defensive doctrine preventing one party from taking unfair advantage of another when, through false language or conduct, the person to be estopped has induced another person to act in a certain way, with the result that the other person has been injured in some way. • This doctrine is founded on principles of fraud. The five essential elements of this type of estoppel are that (1) there was a false representation or concealment of material facts, (2) the representation was known to be false by the party making it, or the party was negligent in not knowing its falsity, (3) it was believed to be true by the person to whom it was made, (4) the party making the representation intended that it be acted on, or the person acting on it was justified in assuming this intent, and (5) the party asserting estoppel acted on the representation in a way that will result in substantial prejudice unless the claim of estoppel succeeds. — Also termed estoppel by conduct; estoppel in pais. [Cases: Estoppel ⇨ 52–96.] 2. See promissory estoppel.

estoppel by conduct. See equitable estoppel.

estoppel by contract. A bar that prevents a person from denying a term, fact, or performance arising from a contract that the person has entered into.

estoppel by deed. Estoppel that prevents a party to a deed from denying anything recited in that deed if the party has induced another to accept or act under the deed; esp., estoppel that prevents a grantor of a warranty deed, who does not have title at the time of the conveyance but who later acquires title, from denying that he or she had title at the time of the transfer. See AFTER-ACQUIRED-TITLE DOCTRINE. — Also termed estoppel by warranty. [Cases: Estoppel ⇨ 12–51.]

"The apparent odiousness of some classes of estoppel, chiefly estoppels by deed, seems to result not so much from the nature of an estoppel, as from the highly technical rules of real property law upon which it operated, and with which it was associated. Estoppels by record, indeed, stand upon a considerably higher footing than estoppels by deed . . ." Lancelot Feilding Everest, Everest and Strode's Law of Estoppel 10 (1923).

estoppel by election. The intentional exercise of a choice between inconsistent alternatives that bars the person making the choice from the benefits of the one not selected.

estoppel by inaction. See estoppel by silence.

estoppel by judgment. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by laches. (1894) An equitable doctrine by which some courts deny relief to a claimant who has unreasonably delayed or been negligent in asserting a claim. [Cases: Equity ⇨ 67.]

estoppel by misrepresentation. An estoppel that arises when one makes a false statement that induces another person to believe something and that results in that person's reasonable and detrimental reliance on the belief. [Cases: Estoppel ⇨ 82–87.]

estoppel by negligence. An estoppel arising when a negligent person induces someone to believe certain facts, and then the other person reasonably and detrimentally relies on that belief. [Cases: Estoppel ⇨ 96.]

estoppel by record. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by representation. An estoppel that arises when one makes a statement or admission that induces another person to believe something and that results in that person's reasonable and detrimental reliance on the belief; esp., equitable estoppel. [Cases: Estoppel ⇨ 82–87.]

estoppel by silence. (1872) Estoppel that arises when a party is under a duty to speak but fails to do so. — Also termed estoppel by standing by; estoppel by inaction. [Cases: Estoppel ⇨ 95.]

estoppel by standing by. See estoppel by silence.

estoppel by verdict. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

estoppel by warranty. See estoppel by deed.

estoppel in pais. See equitable estoppel.

estoppel on the record. See prosecution-history estoppel.

file-wrapper estoppel. See prosecution-history estoppel.

judicial estoppel. (1886) Estoppel that prevents a party from contradicting previous declarations made during the same or an earlier proceeding if the change in position would adversely affect the proceeding or constitute a fraud on the court. — Also termed doctrine of preclusion of inconsistent positions; doctrine of the conclusiveness of the judgment. [Cases: Estoppel ↷ 68.]

legal estoppel. Estoppel recognized in law (as distinguished from equitable estoppel or estoppel in pais), such as an estoppel resulting from a recital or other statement in a deed or official record, and precluding any denial or assertion concerning a fact. [Cases: Estoppel ↷ 1–51.]

marking estoppel. Patents. Estoppel that prevents a party from asserting that a product is not covered by a patent if that party has marked the product with a patent number. • This type of estoppel has been questioned in recent years, and has been sharply limited by some courts. [Cases: Patents ↷ 222.]

promissory estoppel. (1924) The principle that a promise made without consideration may nonetheless be enforced to prevent injustice if the promisor should have reasonably expected the promisee to rely on the promise and if the promisee did actually rely on the promise to his or her detriment. — Also termed (inaccurately) equitable estoppel. [Cases: Estoppel ↷ 85.]

"The doctrine of promissory estoppel is equitable in origin and nature and arose to provide a remedy through the enforcement of a gratuitous promise. Promissory is distinct from equitable estoppel in that the representation at issue is promissory rather than a representation of fact. 'Promissory estoppel and estoppel by conduct are two entirely distinct theories. The latter does not require a promise.'" Ann Taylor Schwing, California Affirmative Defenses § 34:16, at 35 (2d ed. 1996) (quoting Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Transpacific Transp. Co., 88 Cal. App. 3d 823, 829 (Cal. Ct. App. 1979)).

prosecution-history estoppel. Patents. The doctrine limiting a patent-holder's invocation of the doctrine of equivalents by eliminating from the claims those elements that the holder surrendered or abandoned during the prosecution of the patent. — Also termed estoppel on the record; file-wrapper estoppel. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS. [Cases: Patents ↷ 168(2.1).]

quasi-estoppel. (1823) An equitable doctrine preventing one from repudiating an act or assertion if it would harm another who reasonably relied on the act or assertion.

technical estoppel. 1. An estoppel arising from a matter of record or from a deed made by the party who is claimed to be estopped. • Estoppels by deed or by record are called "technical" because the rules of estoppel apply with certainty in appropriate cases. [Cases: Estoppel ↷ 1, 12.] 2. COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL. See estoppel by deed.

estoppel certificate. (1897) 1. A signed statement by a party (such as a tenant or a mortgagee) certifying for another's benefit that certain facts are correct, such as that a lease exists, that there are no defaults, and that rent is paid to a certain date. • A party's delivery of this statement estops that party from later claiming a different state of facts. 2. See WAIVER OF CLAIMS AND DEFENSES.

estoppel per rem judicatam (pær rem joo-di-kay-täm). See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

estover (e-stoh-vər). (usu. pl.) 1. Wood that a tenant is allowed to take for fuel, the manufacture or repair of agricultural instruments, and the erection and maintenance of fences and hedges; necessary supplies. — Also termed botes. See BOTE (1); common of estovers under common. 2. The tenant's right to obtain that wood. 3. ALIMONY.

estoveriis habendis (es-tə-veer-ee-is hæ-ben-dis). [Latin] Hist. See DE ESTOVERIIS HABENDIS.

estrange, vb. 1. To separate, to keep away (a person or thing), or to keep away from (a person or thing). 2. To destroy or divert affection, trust, and loyalty. — estrangement, n.

estray (e-stray), n. 1. A valuable tame animal found wandering and ownerless; an animal that has escaped from its owner and wanders about. • At common law, an estray belonged to the Crown or to the lord of the manor, but today the general rule is that it passes to the state in trust for the true owner, who may regain it by proving ownership. An animal cannot be an estray when on the range where it was raised and where its owner permits it to run, and esp. when the owner is known to the party who takes the animal. [Cases: Animals ↷ 58.] 2. FLOTSAM.

estreat (e-street), n. (15c) A copy or duplicate of some original writing or record, esp. of a fine or amercement imposed by a court, extracted from the record, and certified to one who is authorized and required to collect it. — Also termed (in Scots law) extract.

estreat, vb. (16c) To take out a forfeited recognizance from the recordings of a court and return it to the court to be prosecuted.

estrep (e-streep), vb. (17c) 1. To strip; to despoil; to commit waste upon an estate, as by cutting down trees or removing buildings. 2. To injure the value of a reversionary interest by stripping or spoiling the estate. See WASTE (1).

estrepement (e-streep-mənt), n. (16c) A species of aggravated waste, by stripping or devastating land to the injury of the reversioner, esp. pending a suit for possession. See DE ESTREPAMENTO. [Cases: Waste ↷ 16.]

et, conj. [Latin] And. • This conjunction was the introductory word of several Latin and Law French phrases that were once common.

et adjournatur (et əj-ər-nay-tər). [Latin] Hist. And it is adjourned. • This phrase was used in the old reports, when argument of a case was adjourned to another day, or where a second argument was had.

et al. (et al or ahl). abbr. 1. [Latin et alii or et alia] And other persons <the office of Thomas Webb et al.>. 2. [Latin et alibi] And elsewhere.

et alii e contra (et ay-lee-i ee kon-trə). [Latin “and others on the other side”] Hist. A phrase often used in the Year Books, describing a joinder in issue.

et alius (et ay-lee-əs). [Latin] And another.

et allocatur (et al-ə-kay-tər). [Latin] And it is allowed.

etc. abbr. ET CETERA.

et cetera (et set-ər-ə). [Latin “and others”] (12c) And other things. • The term usu. indicates additional, unspecified items in a series. — Abbr. etc.

et de ceo se mettent en le pays (ay də say-oh sə me-tawn on lə pay). [Law French] Hist. And of this they put themselves upon the country. See CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY; GOING TO THE COUNTRY.

et de hoc ponit se super patriam (et dee hok poh-nit see s[y]oo-pər pay-tree-əm). [Latin] Hist. And of this he puts himself upon the country. • This was the formal conclusion of a common-law plea in bar by way of traverse.

et ei legitur in haec verba (et ee-i lee-jə-tər in heek vər-bə). [Latin] Hist. And it is read to him in these words. • This phrase was formerly used in entering the prayer of oyer on the record.

eternal law. See NATURAL LAW.

et habeas ibi tunc hoc breve (et hay-bee-əs ib-i təngk hok bree-vee). [Latin] Hist. And that you have then and there this writ. • These were the formal words directing the return of a writ. The literal translation was retained in the later form of a considerable number of writs.

et habuit (et hab-yoo-it). [Latin “and he had [it]”] Hist. A common phrase in the Year Books, indicating that a party’s application or demand was granted.

ethical, adj. (16c) 1. Of or relating to moral obligations that one person owes another; esp., in law, of or relating to legal ethics <the ethical rules regarding confidences>. See LEGAL ETHICS. 2. In conformity with moral norms or standards of professional conduct <refusing to identify the informant was a perfectly ethical act>.

ethical absolutism. See MORAL ABSOLUTISM.

ethical consideration. (often cap.) A structural component of the ethical canons set forth in the legal profession’s Model Code of Professional Responsibility, containing a goal or ethical principle intended to guide a lawyer’s professional conduct. • Ethical considerations are often used in the interpretation and application of the Model Rules of Professional Conduct. — Abbr. EC.

Cf. DISCIPLINARY RULE. [Cases: Attorney and Client] ↻32(2).]

ethical drug. See DRUG.

ethical jurisprudence. See JURISPRUDENCE.

ethical relativism. See MORAL RELATIVISM.

ethical wall. (1988) A screening mechanism maintained by an organization, esp. a law firm, to protect client confidences from improper disclosure to lawyers or staff who are not involved in a particular representation. • The screening mechanism is designed to prevent lawyer or law-firm disqualification from certain representations because of conflicts of interest. — Also termed screening mechanism; Chinese wall. [Cases: Attorney and Client] ↻21.15.]

ethics. See LEGAL ETHICS.

ethnic cleansing. (1991) The officially sanctioned forcible and systematic diminution or elimination of targeted ethnic minorities from a geographic area, usu. by confiscating real and personal property, ordering or condoning mass murders and mass rapes, and expelling the survivors. • In theory, the purpose of ethnic cleansing is to drive all members of the victimized group out of a territory. In practice, ethnic cleansing is nearly synonymous with genocide as mass murder is a characteristic of both. Ethnic cleansing additionally includes mass rapes for two cultural reasons: (1) the victims are often put to death by their relatives or commit suicide, and (2) any children born are regarded as belonging to the father’s ethnic group, not the mother’s. Both acts — murder and rape — are intended to diminish or extinguish the victimized minority. Cf. GENOCIDE.

ethnic profiling. See RACIAL PROFILING.

et hoc paratus est verificare (et hok pə-ray-təs est ver-ə-fi-kair-ee). [Latin] And this he is prepared to verify. • This phrase traditionally concluded a plea in confession and avoidance, or any pleading that contained new affirmative matter. A pleading containing this phrase was technically said to “conclude with a verification,” as opposed to a simple denial.

et hoc petit quod inquiretur per patriam (et hok pet-it kwod in-kwə-ray-tər pər pay-tree-əm). [Latin “and this he prays may be inquired of by the country”] Archaic. The conclusion of a plaintiff’s pleading that tendered an issue to the country. See CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY.

etiam causa non cognita (ee-shee-əm kaw-zə non kog-ni-tə). [Latin] Hist. Even where the cause is not known; absent an investigation. • Some decrees could be issued without a full factual inquiry or trial.

etiam in articulo mortis (ee-shee-əm in ahr-tik-yə-loh mor-tis). [Latin] Scots law. Even at the point of death. • The phrase appeared in reference to a circumstance under which one could revoke a will.

etiam in lecto (ee-shee-əm in lek-toh). [Law Latin] Hist. Even upon deathbed.

et inde petit iudicium (et in-dee pet-it joo-dish-ee-əm). [Latin “and thereupon he prays judgment”] Archaic.

A clause found at the end of a pleading, requesting judgment in that party's favor.

etiquette of the profession. See LEGAL ETIQUETTE.

et modo ad hunc diem (et moh-doh ad hængk dī-əm). [Latin "and now at this day"] Archaic. The formal beginning of an entry of appearance or of a continuance.

et non (et non). [Latin "and not"] Archaic. A phrase formerly used in pleading to introduce the negative averments of a special traverse. See ABSQUE HOC.

et seq. (et sek). abbr. [Latin et sequens "and the following one," et sequentes (masc.) "and the following ones," or et sequentia (neuter) "and the following ones"] (18c) And those (pages or sections) that follow <11 USCA §§ 101 et seq.>.

et sic (et sik). [Latin "and so"] Archaic. The introductory words of a special conclusion to a plea in bar, intending to render the plea positive and not argumentative.

et sic ad iudicium (et sik ad joo-dish-ee-əm). [Latin] Archaic. And so to judgment.

et sic ad patriam (et sik ad pay-tree-əm). [Latin] Hist. And so to the country. • This phrase was used in the Year Books to record an issue to the country.

et sic de anno in annum quamdiu ambobus partibus placuerit (et sik dee an-oh in an-əm kwam-dee-yoo am-bə-bəs pah-r-tə-bəs plak-yoo-air-it). Hist. And so, from year to year, so long as both parties please, or are agreed. • The phrase appeared in reference to tacit relocation. See TACIT RELOCATION.

et sic fecit (et sik fee-sit). [Latin] Archaic. And he did so.

et sic pendet (et sik pen-dit). [Latin] Hist. And so it hangs. • This phrase was used in the old reports to signify that a point was left undetermined.

et sic ulterius (et sik əl-teer-ee-əs). [Latin] Archaic. And so on; and so further; and so forth.

et uxor (et ək-sor). [Latin] Archaic. And wife. • This phrase was formerly common in case names and legal documents (esp. abstracts of title) involving a husband and wife jointly. It usu. appears in its abbreviated form, et ux. <conveyed the land to Donald Baird et ux.>. See UXOR.

et vir (et veer). [Latin] Archaic. And husband. See VIR.

EU. abbr. EUROPEAN UNION.

Euclidean zoning. See ZONING.

eundo et redeundo (ee-ən-doh et red-ee-ən-doh). [Latin] Hist. Going and returning. • This phrase was once used to describe vessels in transit.

eundo, morando, et redeundo (ee-ən-doh, mə-ran-doh, et red-ee-ən-doh). [Latin] Hist. Going, remaining, and returning. • This phrase was once used to describe a person (for example, a witness or legislator) who is privileged from arrest while traveling to the place where assigned duties are to be performed, while remaining there, and while returning.

eunomy (yoo-nə-mee), n. (19c) A system of good laws that lead to civil order and justice. — Also termed eunomia. Cf. DYSNOMY. — eunomic, adj.

Euratom. A European Union organization that coordinates the development and use of nuclear energy in Europe. • It was created in 1958 and merged with the European Economic Community in 1967. It is governed by the Council of the European Union.

eureka model. Patents. The view that the inventive process is the product of a stroke of luck rather than labor. • The notion is used to counter labor-based theories justifying intellectual-property rights, since no labor is involved in a "eureka" discovery. Cf. LABOR-DESERT MODEL; VALUE-ADDED MODEL.

eureka moment. Slang. The instant when an inventor realizes the answer to a question or the significance of a discovery. — Also termed flash of genius.

Euribor. abbr. EURO INTERBANK OFFERED RATE.

euro (yuur-oh). (1981) The official currency of most countries in the European Union. • On January 1, 1999, the euro became the single currency of the participating countries. Euro notes and coins began circulating on January 1, 2002.

Eurodollar. (1960) United States currency held in a bank outside the U.S., usu. in Europe, and used to settle international transactions.

Euro Interbank Offered Rate. A measure of what major international banks charge each other for large-volume, short-term loans of euros, based on interest-rate data provided daily by a panel of representative banks across Europe. — Abbr. Euribor. Cf. LONDON INTERBANK OFFERED RATE.

European Commission of Human Rights. A body of the Council of Europe charged with overseeing the operation of the European Convention on Human Rights. • The commission was abolished in 1998. The European Court of Human Rights absorbed its functions. See EUROPEAN COURT OF HUMAN RIGHTS.

European Community. See EUROPEAN UNION.

European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. A 1950 international agreement to protect human rights. • The European Commission for Human Rights and the European Court for Human Rights were created under the convention's terms. [Cases: Treaties ⇨ 8.]

European Copyright Directive. An official instruction of the European Union designed to promote uniformity in certain aspects of copyright law and related rights, esp. on the Internet. • Officially titled Directive 2001/29 on the Harmonisation of Certain Aspects of Copyright and Related Rights in the Information Society, this is the European Union equivalent of the Digital Millennium Copyright Act. Among other provisions, the directive provides broad exclusive rights of reproduction and distribution to copyright holders, and requires E.U. member nations to prohibit the circumvention of technical measures and devices intended to prevent the alteration or reproduction of copyrighted works. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ↻34.]

European Court of Human Rights. The judicial body of the Council of Europe. • The court was set up in 1959 and was substantially changed in 1994–1998. As of 2008, the court had 47 judges, each elected by the Council of Europe's Parliamentary Assembly. The court adjudicates alleged violations of the civil and political rights enumerated in the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.

European Currency Unit. A monetary unit that was the precursor of the euro. • Created in 1979, it was an artificial currency used by the members of the European Union as their internal accounting unit. It ceased to exist in January 1999, when it was replaced by the euro. — Abbr. ECU; ecu. See EURO.

European Economic Community. See EUROPEAN UNION.

European law. (1844) 1. The law of the European Union. 2. More broadly, the law of the European Union, together with the conventions of the Council of Europe, including the European Convention on Human Rights. 3. More broadly still, all the law current in Europe, including the law of European organizations, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and all the bilateral and multilateral conventions in effect, as well as European customary law.

European option. See OPTION.

European Patent Convention. A 1973 treaty allowing a patent applicant to obtain patent protection in all signatory nations, mostly European Union members, through a single blanket filing and examination procedure. • The Community patent is valid in any member nation in which it is registered. The procedure is administered through the European Patent Office in Munich, Germany and The Hague, Netherlands. — Abbr. EPC. — Also termed Convention on the Grant of European Patent.

European Patent Office. The office that receives filings, conducts examinations, and issues Community patents applied for under the European Patent Convention. • The office is located in Munich, Germany, and The Hague, Netherlands.

European Patent Organization. A centralized patent-grant system, established in 1978, comprising a legislative body (the Administrative Council) and an executive body (the European Patent Office).

European-style option. See European option under OPTION.

European Union. An association of European nations whose purpose is to achieve full economic unity (and eventual political union) by agreeing to eliminate barriers to the free movement of capital, goods, and labor among the member-nations. • The European Union was formed as the European Economic Community (EEC) by the Treaty of Rome in 1957, and later renamed the European Community (EC). The euthanasia (yoo-thə-nay-zhə), n. (1869) The act or practice of causing or hastening the death of a person who suffers from an incurable or terminal disease or condition, esp. a painful one, for reasons of mercy. • Euthanasia is sometimes regarded by the law as second-degree murder, manslaughter, or criminally negligent homicide. In 2001, the Netherlands became the first nation to legalize euthanasia. — Also termed mercy killing. See LIVING WILL; ADVANCE DIRECTIVE. Cf. assisted suicide under SUICIDE; DYATHANASIA. [Cases: Homicide ↻765.] — euthanasic (yoo-thə-nay-zik), adj.

"The translation of the Greek word euthanasia — 'easy death' — contains an ambiguity. It connotes that the means responsible for death are painless, so that the death is an easy one. But it also suggests that the death sought would be a relief from a distressing or intolerable condition of living (or dying), so that death, and not merely the means through which it is achieved, is good or right in itself. Usually, both aspects are intended when the term euthanasia is used; but when that is not the case, there can be consequences in legal analysis." Alexander Morgan Capron, "Euthanasia," in 2 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 709, 709 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

active euthanasia. Euthanasia performed by a facilitator (such as a healthcare practitioner) who not only provides the means of death but also carries out the final death-causing act.

involuntary euthanasia. Euthanasia of a competent, nonconsenting person.

nonvoluntary euthanasia. Euthanasia of an incompetent, and therefore nonconsenting, person.

passive euthanasia. The act of allowing a terminally ill person to die by either withholding or withdrawing life-sustaining support such as a respirator or feeding tube.

voluntary euthanasia. Euthanasia performed with the terminally ill person's consent. [Cases: Health ↻913.]

euthanize (yoo-thə-nīz), vb. (1873) To put to death by euthanasia. • This term is used chiefly in reference to animals. — Also termed euthanatize.

evacuee. A person who has been evacuated, esp. because of a natural disaster or an imminent man-made danger, such as war. • This loanword from French dates from World War I. Cf. displaced person under PERSON (1); REFUGEE.

evaluative fact. See FACT.

Evarts Act (ev-arts). An 1891 federal statute that established the circuit courts of appeals (now U.S. courts of appeals) and fixed the contemporary method of federal appellate review.

evasion. See TAX EVASION.

evasive, adj. (17c) Tending or seeking to evade; elusive; shifting. • If a pleading requiring a response is evasive, the responding party may move for a more definite statement. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e). evasive answer. See ANSWER (2).

even date. The same date. • This jargonistic phrase is sometimes used in one instrument to refer to another instrument with the same date, esp. when both relate to the same transaction (as a deed and a mortgage).

evenings. Hist. The delivery at evening or night to a customary tenant of a gratuity in the form of a portion of the grass, corn, or other crop that the tenant cuts, mows, or reaps for the lord.

even lot. See round lot under LOT (3).

event-driven audit. See AUDIT.

evergreen contract. See CONTRACT.

evict, vb. (15c) 1. To expel (a person, esp. a tenant), from real property, usu. by legal process. — Also termed put out. 2. Archaic. To recover (property or title) from a person by legal process. — evictor, n.

eviction. (16c) The act or process of legally dispossessing a person of land or rental property. See FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER. Cf. EJECTMENT. [Cases: Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇨6; Landlord and Tenant ⇨287.]

actual eviction. (18c) A physical expulsion of a person from land or rental property. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨171(1).]

constructive eviction. (1826) 1. A landlord's act of making premises unfit for occupancy, often with the result that the tenant is compelled to leave. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨172.] 2. The inability of a land purchaser to obtain possession because of paramount outstanding title. • Such an eviction usu. constitutes a breach of the covenants of warranty and quiet enjoyment.

eviction by paramount title. An eviction by judicially establishing title superior to that under which the possessor claims. — Also termed eviction by title paramount. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨174.]

eviction by title paramount. See eviction by paramount title.

partial eviction. An eviction, either constructive or actual, from a portion of a tenant's premises. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨172(1), 190(2).]

retaliatory eviction. (1966) An eviction — nearly always illegal — commenced in response to a tenant's complaints or involvement in activities with which the landlord does not agree. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨278, 284(1), 290(3), 298(1).]

summary eviction. (1907) An eviction accomplished through a simplified legal procedure, without the formalities of a full trial. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨293.]

total eviction. (1832) An eviction that wholly deprives the tenant of any right in the premises. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant ⇨172(1), 190(1).]

evidence, n. (14c) 1. Something (including testimony, documents and tangible objects) that tends to prove or disprove the existence of an alleged fact <the bloody glove is the key piece of evidence for the prosecution>. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨661; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2011; Trial ⇨33, 43.] 2. See fact in evidence under FACT. 3. The collective mass of things, esp. testimony and exhibits, presented before a tribunal in a given dispute <the evidence will show that the defendant breached the contract>. 4. The body of law regulating the admissibility of what is offered as proof into the record of a legal proceeding <under the rules of evidence, the witness's statement is inadmissible hearsay that is not subject to any exception>. — Also termed (in sense 4) rules of evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨661; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2011; Trial ⇨43.] — evidence, vb.

"Evidence is any matter of fact which is furnished to a legal tribunal, otherwise than by reasoning or a reference to what is noticed without proof, as the basis of inference in ascertaining some other matter of fact." James B. Thayer, Presumptions and the Law of Evidence, 3 Harv. L. Rev. 141, 142 (1889).

"Evidence, broadly defined, is the means from which an inference may logically be drawn as to the existence of a fact; that which makes evident or plain. Evidence is the demonstration of a fact; it signifies that which demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue, either on the one side or on the other. In legal acceptance, the term 'evidence' includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved. 'Evidence' has also been defined to mean any species of proof legally presented at the trial of an issue, by the act of the parties and through the medium of witnesses, records, documents, concrete objects, and the like." 31A C.J.S. Evidence § 3, at 67-68 (1996).

admicular evidence. Rare. Corroborating or auxiliary evidence presented for the purpose of explaining or completing other evidence.

admissible evidence. (18c) Evidence that is relevant and is of such a character (e.g., not unfairly prejudicial, based on hearsay, or privileged) that the court should receive it. — Also termed competent evidence; proper evidence; legal evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨661; Federal Civil Procedure ⇨2011; Trial ⇨43.]

autoptic evidence. See demonstrative evidence.

best evidence. (17c) Evidence of the highest quality available, as measured by the nature of the case rather than the thing being offered as evidence. • The term is usu. applied to writings and recordings. If the original is available, it must be offered rather than a copy or oral rendition. Fed. R. Evid. 1002. — Also termed primary evidence; original evidence. See BEST-EVIDENCE RULE. Cf. secondary evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨398-403; Evidence ⇨157-187.]

"In some circumstances, 'best evidence' may mean that evidence which is more specific and definite as opposed to that which is merely general and indefinite or descriptive. However, 'best evidence' or 'primary evidence' is variously defined as that particular means of proof which is indicated by the nature of the fact under investigation as the most natural and satisfactory, or as that kind of proof which under any possible circumstances affords the greatest certainty of the fact in question; or as evidence which carries on its face no indication that better remains behind." 32A C.J.S. Evidence § 1054, at 417 (1996).

character evidence. (1949) Evidence regarding someone's general personality traits or propensities, of a praiseworthy or blameworthy nature; evidence of a person's moral standing in a community. Fed. R. Evid. 404, 405, 608. • Character evidence is usu., but not always, prohibited if offered to show that the person acted in conformity with that character. Cf. reputation evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻375; Evidence ↻106; Witnesses ↻333–362.]

circumstantial evidence. (18c) 1. Evidence based on inference and not on personal knowledge or observation. — Also termed indirect evidence; oblique evidence. Cf. direct evidence (1). [Cases: Criminal Law ↻338(2), 552; Evidence ↻100, 587.] 2. All evidence that is not given by eyewitness testimony.

"Indirect evidence (called by the civilians, oblique, and more commonly known as circumstantial evidence) is that which is applied to the principal fact, indirectly, or through the medium of other facts, by establishing certain circumstances or minor facts, already described as evidentiary, from which the principal fact is extracted and gathered by a process of special inference. . . ." Alexander M. Burrill, A Treatise on the Nature, Principles and Rules of Circumstantial Evidence 4 (1868).

"Some circumstantial evidence is very strong, as when you find a trout in the milk." Henry David Thoreau, Journal, 11 Nov. 1850, in 2 Journal of Henry D. Thoreau 94 (Bradford Torrey & Francis H. Allen eds., 1962).

"Evidence of some collateral fact, from which the existence or non-existence of some fact in question may be inferred as a probable consequence, is termed circumstantial evidence." William P. Richardson, The Law of Evidence § 111, at 68 (3d ed. 1928).

"Testimonial evidence readily defines itself by its name; it is any assertion by a human being, offered to evidence the truth of the matter asserted. Circumstantial evidence is any and all other evidence. Scientifically the term 'circumstantial' is indefensible, for it does not correlate with 'testimonial'; a more correct equivalent would be 'nontestimonial.' But no one has yet invented an acceptable substitute for 'circumstantial.'" John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 38 (1935).

clear and convincing evidence. (17c) Evidence indicating that the thing to be proved is highly probable or reasonably certain. • This is a greater burden than preponderance of the evidence, the standard applied in most civil trials, but less than evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, the norm for criminal trials. — Also termed clear and convincing proof. See REASONABLE DOUBT. Cf. PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE. [Cases: Evidence ↻596(1).] communicative evidence. See testimonial evidence.

competent evidence. 1. See admissible evidence. 2. See relevant evidence.

conclusive evidence. (17c) 1. Evidence so strong as to overbear any other evidence to the contrary. — Also termed conclusive proof. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻549; Evidence ↻584(1).] 2. Evidence that so preponderates as to oblige a fact-finder to come to a certain conclusion.

concomitant evidence. (17c) Evidence that, at the time of the act, the alleged doer of the act was present and actually did it.

conflicting evidence. (1803) Evidence that comes from different sources and is often irreconcilable.

corroborating evidence. (17c) Evidence that differs from but strengthens or confirms what other evidence shows (esp. that which needs support). — Also termed corroborative evidence. Cf. cumulative evidence.

credible evidence. (17c) Evidence that is worthy of belief; trustworthy evidence.

critical evidence. (18c) Evidence strong enough that its presence could tilt a juror's mind. • Under the Due Process Clause, an indigent criminal defendant is usu. entitled to an expert opinion of the merits of critical evidence. — Also termed crucial evidence.

crucial evidence. See critical evidence.

cumulative evidence. (18c) Additional evidence that supports a fact established by the existing evidence (esp. that which does not need further support). Cf. corroborating evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻675; Federal Civil Procedure ↻2011; Trial ↻56.]

demeanor evidence. (1909) The behavior and appearance of a witness on the witness stand, to be considered by the fact-finder on the issue of credibility. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻553; Evidence ↻588.]

demonstrative evidence (di-mōn-strə-tiv). (17c) Physical evidence that one can see and inspect (i.e. an explanatory aid, such as a chart, map, and some computer simulations) and that, while of probative value and usu. offered to clarify testimony, does not play a direct part in the incident in question. • This term sometimes overlaps with and is used as a synonym of real evidence. — Also termed illustrative evidence; autoptic evidence; autoptic preference; real evidence; tangible evidence. See nonverbal testimony under TESTIMONY. Cf. real evidence; testimonial evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻404.5–404.85; Evidence ↻188–198.]

"There remains a source of proof, distinct from either circumstantial or testimonial evidence, viz., what the tribunal sees or hears by its own senses. Whether this should be termed 'evidence' or not is a question of words, open to difference of view. But it is universally conceded to be an available source of proof. Bentham's term for it, 'real evidence,' came into wide vogue, but is ambiguous. The term 'autoptic preference' (etymologically meaning 'showing to the tribunal's own vision') is preferable." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 39 (1935).

derivative evidence. (1961) Evidence that is discovered as a result of illegally obtained evidence and is therefore inadmissible because of the primary taint. See EXCLUSIONARY RULE; FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻394.1(3).]

direct evidence. (16c) 1. Evidence that is based on personal knowledge or observation and that, if true, proves a fact without inference or presumption. — Also termed positive evidence. Cf. circumstantial evidence; negative evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 549; Evidence ↻ 587.] 2. See original evidence (1).

"A little reflection shows that no disputed case will ordinarily be proved solely by circumstantial or solely by testimonial evidence. Ordinarily there is evidence of both kinds. The matter has been obscured by the use of the term 'direct evidence,' — a term sometimes used to mean testimonial evidence in general, but sometimes also limited to apply only to testimony directly asserting the fact-in-issue. . . . The term 'direct' evidence has no utility." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 40 (1935).

documentary evidence. (18c) Evidence supplied by a writing or other document, which must be authenticated before the evidence is admissible. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 429–446; Evidence ↻ 325–383.]

downright evidence. See DOWNRIGHT EVIDENCE.

evidence aliunde. See extrinsic evidence (1).

evidence-in-chief. (18c) Evidence used by a party in making its case-in-chief. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 682; Federal Civil Procedure ↻ 2015; Trial ↻ 61.]

exclusive evidence. (18c) The only facts that have, or are allowed by law to have, any probative force at all on a particular matter in issue.

"[T]here is an important class of rules declaring certain facts to be exclusive evidence, none other being admissible. The execution of a document which requires attestation can be proved in no other way than by the testimony of an attesting witness, unless owing to the death or some other circumstance his testimony is unavailable. A written contract can generally be proved in no other way than by the production of the writing itself, whenever its production is possible." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 485 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

exculpatory evidence (ek-skəl-pə-tor-ee). (18c) Evidence tending to establish a criminal defendant's innocence. Fed. R. Crim. P. 16. • The prosecution has a duty to disclose exculpatory evidence in its possession or control when the evidence may be material to the outcome of the case. See BRADY MATERIAL. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 359, 1992.]

expert evidence. (16c) Evidence about a scientific, technical, professional, or other specialized issue given by a person qualified to testify because of familiarity with the subject or special training in the field. — Also termed expert testimony. Fed. R. Evid. 702–705. See DAUBERT TEST. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 469–494; Evidence ↻ 505–574.]

extrajudicial evidence. (18c) Evidence that does not come directly under judicial cognizance but nevertheless constitutes an intermediate link between judicial evidence and the fact requiring proof. • It includes all facts that are known to the tribunal only by way of inference from some form of judicial evidence. See JUDICIAL NOTICE. Cf. judicial evidence.

extrinsic evidence. (17c) 1. Evidence relating to a contract but not appearing on the face of the contract because it comes from other sources, such as statements between the parties or the circumstances surrounding the agreement. • Extrinsic evidence is usu. not admissible to contradict or add to the terms of an unambiguous document. — Also termed extraneous evidence; parol evidence; evidence aliunde. [Cases: Evidence ↻ 384–469.] 2. Evidence that is not legitimately before the court. Cf. intrinsic evidence. 3. Evidence that is calculated to impeach a witness's credibility, adduced by means other than cross-examination of the witness. • The means may include evidence in documents and recordings and the testimony of other witnesses. See Fed. R. Evid. 608(b) & note.

"Under [Federal Rule of Evidence] 608(b), if the witness denies engaging in untruthful misconduct, the cross-examiner must 'take the witness' answer,' meaning the questioner may not introduce extrinsic evidence to contradict the witness' denial through other witness testimony or the introduction of impeaching documents, or indeed any other evidence than the cross-examination, even if the questioner waits until it is his turn to put on evidence." Paul F. Rothstein, The Federal Rules of Evidence 312 (3d ed. 2003).

fabricated evidence. (18c) False or deceitful evidence that is unlawfully created, usu. after the relevant event, in an attempt to achieve or avoid liability or conviction. — Also termed fabricated fact.

false evidence. See false testimony under TESTIMONY.

forensic evidence. (18c) Evidence used in court; esp., evidence arrived at by scientific or technical means, such as ballistic or medical evidence. [Cases: Evidence ↻ 150.]

foundational evidence. (1946) Evidence that determines the admissibility of other evidence.

habit evidence. (1921) Evidence of one's regular response to a repeated specific situation. Fed. R. Evid. 406. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 385; Evidence ↻ 138.]

hearsay evidence. See HEARSAY.

illegally obtained evidence. (1924) Evidence obtained by violating a statute or a person's constitutional or other right, esp. the Fourth Amendment guarantee against unreasonable searches, the Fifth Amendment right to remain silent, or the Sixth Amendment right to counsel. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 394.1–394.6; Evidence ↻ 154.]

illustrative evidence. See demonstrative evidence.

immaterial evidence. (18c) 1. Evidence lacking in probative value. 2. Evidence offered to prove a matter that is not in issue. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 382; Evidence ↻ 143.]

impeachment evidence. (1861) Evidence used to undermine a witness's credibility. Fed. R. Evid. 607–610. [Cases: Witnesses ↻ 311–409.] impertinent evidence. See irrelevant evidence.

incompetent evidence. (18c) Evidence that is for any reason inadmissible. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 385; Evidence ↻ 148.]

incriminating evidence. (1878) Evidence tending to establish guilt or from which a fact-trier can infer guilt.

inculpatory evidence (in-kəl-pə-tor-ee). (1849) Evidence showing or tending to show one's involvement in a crime or wrong.

indirect evidence. See circumstantial evidence (1).

indispensable evidence. (18c) Evidence without which a particular fact cannot be proved.

insufficient evidence. (17c) Evidence that is inadequate to prove or support a finding of something. • This term usu. describes a case that is not strong enough to even get to the fact-finder. [Cases: Evidence ↻ 584–601.]

intrinsic evidence. (17c) 1. Evidence brought out by the examination of the witness testifying. 2. Evidence existing within a writing. Cf. extrinsic evidence (2).

irrelevant evidence. Evidence not tending to prove or disprove a matter in issue. Fed. R. Evid. 401–403. — Also termed impertinent evidence. See IRRELEVANT. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 338; Evidence ↻ 99.]

judicial evidence. (17c) Evidence produced in court, consisting of all facts brought to the attention of or admitted into evidence before the tribunal. Cf. extrajudicial evidence.

legal evidence. (17c) 1. See admissible evidence. 2. All admissible evidence, both oral and documentary, of such a character that it reasonably and substantially proves the point rather than merely raising suspicion or conjecture.

material evidence. (17c) Evidence having some logical connection with the facts of consequence or the issues. Cf. relevant evidence; immaterial evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 382; Evidence ↻ 143.]

mathematical evidence. (18c) 1. Loosely, evidence that establishes its conclusions with absolute certainty. 2. Evidence pertaining to mathematical or statistical matters, or probabilities.

mediate evidence. See secondary evidence.

medical evidence. (18c) Evidence furnished by a doctor, nurse, or other qualified medical person testifying in a professional capacity as an expert, or by a standard treatise on medicine or surgery. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 473, 476; Evidence ↻ 555.10.]

moral evidence. (17c) Loosely, evidence that depends on a belief, rather than complete and absolute proof. • Generally, moral evidence is testimonial.

multiple evidence. (1926) Evidence with probative or other value on more than one issue but usu. admitted into evidence for one specific purpose. • Impeachment evidence, for example, may not be probative on a particular issue but may nonetheless affect the jury's perceptions of several issues.

negative evidence. (17c) Evidence suggesting that an alleged fact does not exist, such as a witness's testifying that he or she did not see an event occur. • Negative evidence is generally regarded as weaker than positive evidence because a positive assertion that a witness saw an event is a stronger statement than an assertion that a witness did not see it. But a negative assertion will sometimes be considered positive evidence, depending on the witness's opportunity to see the event. For instance, testimony that the witness watched the entire game and saw no riot in the stands is stronger than testimony stating only that the witness did not see a riot. — Also termed negative testimony. Cf. direct evidence (1). [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 387; Evidence ↻ 147, 586.]

newly discovered evidence. (18c) Evidence existing at the time of a motion or trial but then unknown to a party, who, upon later discovering it, may assert it as grounds for reconsideration or a new trial. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b). [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 938; Federal Civil Procedure ↻ 928, 2350, 2655; New Trial ↻ 99.]

no evidence. See NO EVIDENCE.

oblique evidence. See circumstantial evidence (1).

opinion evidence. (1955) A witness's belief, thought, inference, or conclusion concerning a fact or facts. Fed. R. Evid. 701–705. See OPINION (3); OPINION RULE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 448; Evidence ↻ 470–574.]

"In a sense all testimony to matter of fact is opinion evidence; i.e. it is a conclusion formed from phenomena and mental impressions." James B. Thayer, A Preliminary Treatise on Evidence at the Common Law 524 (1898).

oral evidence. See testimonial evidence.

original evidence. (18c) 1. A witness's statement that he or she perceived a fact in issue by one of the five senses, or that the witness was in a particular physical or mental state. — Also termed direct evidence. Cf. HEARSAY. 2. See best evidence.

parol evidence (pə-rohl or par-əl). (18c) 1. Evidence of oral statements. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻ 447; Evidence ↻ 384–469.] 2. See extrinsic evidence (1). See PAROL-EVIDENCE RULE.

partial evidence. (17c) Evidence that establishes one of a series of facts.

personal evidence. See TESTIMONY.

positive evidence. See direct evidence (1). preappointed evidence. (1850) Evidence prescribed in advance (as by statute) for the proof of certain facts.

preliminary evidence. (18c) Evidence that is necessary to begin a hearing or trial and that may be received conditionally in anticipation of other evidence linking it to issues in the case. Fed. R. Evid. 104. [Cases: Evidence ↻ 117; Federal Civil Procedure ↻ 2014.]

presumptive evidence. (17c) 1. Evidence deemed sufficient to establish another fact unless discredited by other evidence. [Cases: Evidence ↻ 53–89.] 2. Archaic. Circumstantial evidence as distinct from testimonial evidence. — Also termed probable evidence.

prima facie evidence (pri-mə fay-shə). (18c) Evidence that will establish a fact or sustain a judgment unless contradictory evidence is produced. [Cases: Evidence ↻584(1).]

"The legislative branch may create an evidential presumption, or a rule of 'prima facie' evidence, i.e., a rule which does not shut out evidence, but merely declares that certain conduct shall suffice as evidence until the opponent produces contrary evidence." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 237 (1935).

primary evidence. See best evidence.

privileged evidence. (1897) Evidence that is exempt from production to an opposing party or tribunal (with certain, limited exceptions) because it is covered by one or more statutory or common-law protections, such as the attorney-client privilege. See privileged communication under COMMUNICATION. [Cases: Privileged Communications and Confidentiality ↻1, 2, 100.]

probable evidence. See presumptive evidence.

probative evidence (prōh-bə-tiv). (1877) Evidence that tends to prove or disprove a point in issue. Cf. relevant evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻338; Evidence ↻99.]

proffered evidence (prōf-ərd). (1904) 1. Evidence that is offered to the court to obtain a ruling on its admissibility. 2. Evidence whose admissibility depends on the existence or nonexistence of a preliminary fact. [Cases: Evidence ↻117; Federal Civil Procedure ↻2011.]

proper evidence. See admissible evidence.

prospectant evidence (prə-spēk-tənt). (1924) Evidence that, before someone does an act, suggests that the person might or might not do the act. • This evidence typically falls into any of five categories: (1) moral character or disposition, (2) physical and mental capacity, (3) habit or custom, (4) emotion or motive, and (5) plan, design, or intention.

Queen's evidence. English law. Testimony provided by one criminal defendant, usu. under a promise of pardon, against another criminal defendant. — Also termed (when a king reigns) King's evidence. See state's evidence.

real evidence. (17c) 1. Physical evidence (such as clothing or a knife wound) that itself plays a direct part in the incident in question. — Also termed physical evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻405; Evidence ↻188.] 2. See demonstrative evidence.

"Anything which is believed for any other reason than that someone has said so, is believed on real evidence." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 480 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

rebuttal evidence. (1859) Evidence offered to disprove or contradict the evidence presented by an opposing party. • Rebuttal evidence is introduced in the rebutting party's answering case; it is not adduced, e.g., through cross-examination during the case-in-chief of the party to be rebutted. — Also termed rebutting evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻683; Federal Civil Procedure ↻2015; Trial ↻62.]

relevant evidence. (18c) Evidence tending to prove or disprove a matter in issue. • Relevant evidence is both probative and material and is admissible unless excluded by a specific statute or rule. Fed. R. Evid. 401–403. — Also termed competent evidence. Cf. material evidence; probative evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻338; Evidence ↻99.]

reputation evidence. (1888) Evidence of what one is thought by others to be. • Reputation evidence may be introduced as proof of character when character is in issue or is used circumstantially. Fed. R. Evid. 405(a). — Also termed reputational evidence. Cf. character evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻375; Evidence ↻106; Witnesses ↻333–362.]

retrospectant evidence (re-trə-spēk-tənt). (1929) Evidence that, although it occurs after an act has been done, suggests that the alleged doer of the act actually did it <when goods have been stolen, and the thief is sought, a person's later possession of those goods amounts to retrospectant evidence that this person took them>. — Also termed traces.

satisfactory evidence. (17c) Evidence that is sufficient to satisfy an unprejudiced mind seeking the truth. — Also termed sufficient evidence; satisfactory proof. [Cases: Evidence ↻584(1).]

scientific evidence. (17c) Fact or opinion evidence that purports to draw on specialized knowledge of a science or to rely on scientific principles for its evidentiary value. See DAUBERT TEST. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻388; Evidence ↻150, 505–574.]

secondary evidence. (17c) Evidence that is inferior to the primary or best evidence and that becomes admissible when the primary or best evidence is lost or inaccessible. • Examples include a copy of a lost instrument or testimony regarding a lost instrument's contents. — Also termed mediate evidence; mediate testimony; substitutionary evidence. See Fed. R. Evid. 1004. Cf. best evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻398, 403; Evidence ↻157–187.]

secret evidence. (1983) Classified information that may be used against a defendant in an immigration proceeding but withheld from the defendant, the defendant's lawyer, and the public on national-security grounds. • The use of secret evidence was made easier under the Anti-Terrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ↻423.]

signature evidence. Highly distinctive evidence of a person's prior bad acts. • While ordinarily inadmissible, signature evidence will be admitted if it shows, for example, that two crimes were committed through the same planning, design, scheme, or modus operandi, and in such a way that the prior act and the current act are uniquely identifiable as those of the defendant. See Fed. R. Evid. 404(b). [Cases: Criminal Law ↻369.15; Evidence ↻129(5), 133.]

slight evidence. (18c) A small quantity of evidence; esp., the small amount of evidence sufficient to remove a presumption from a case or for a rational fact-finder to conclude that something essential has not been established beyond a reasonable doubt. See SLIGHT-EVIDENCE RULE.

state's evidence. (1886) Testimony provided by one criminal defendant — under a promise of immunity or reduced sentence — against another criminal defendant. See TURN STATE'S EVIDENCE.

substantial evidence. (17c) 1. Evidence that a reasonable mind could accept as adequate to support a conclusion; evidence beyond a scintilla. See SUBSTANTIAL-EVIDENCE RULE. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↷791; Evidence ↷597.] 2. The product of adequately controlled investigations, including clinical studies, carried out by qualified experts that establish the effectiveness of a drug under FSA regulations. 21 USCA § 355(e). substantive evidence (səb-stən-tiv). Evidence offered to help establish a fact in issue, as opposed to evidence directed to impeach or to support a witness's credibility. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷337; Evidence ↷266.]

substitutionary evidence. See secondary evidence.

sufficient evidence. See satisfactory evidence.

tainted evidence. (1876) Evidence that is inadmissible because it was directly or indirectly obtained by illegal means. See FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷394; Evidence ↷154.]

tangible evidence. Physical evidence that is either real or demonstrative. See demonstrative evidence; real evidence.

testimonial evidence. (1831) A person's testimony offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; esp., evidence elicited from a witness. — Also termed communicative evidence; oral evidence. Cf. demonstrative evidence. [Cases: Trial ↷43.]

"An assertion is testimonial evidence whether made out of court or in court, if it is offered with a view to persuading the tribunal of the matter asserted." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 120 (1935).

traditionary evidence. (18c) Evidence derived from a deceased person's former statements or reputation. ● Traditionary evidence is admissible to prove ancestry, ancient boundaries, or similar facts, usu. when no living witnesses are available to testify. [Cases: Boundaries ↷35(2); Evidence ↷274, 302.]

unwritten evidence. (18c) Evidence given orally, in court or by deposition.

evidence by inspection. See demonstrative evidence under EVIDENCE.

evidence code. A relatively comprehensive set of statutory provisions or rules governing the admissibility of evidence at hearings and trials.

evidence of debt. See SECURITY (4).

evidence of insurability. Information — such as medical records or a medical examination — that an insurer may require to establish a potential insured's qualification for a particular insurance policy. [Cases: Insurance ↷2052.]

evidence of title. (17c) The means by which the ownership of land is satisfactorily demonstrated within a given jurisdiction. See DEED (2), (3). [Cases: Property ↷9.]

"There are four kinds of evidence of title: abstract and opinion, certificate of title, title insurance and Torrens certificate. The certificate of title is used extensively in the Eastern states, and some Southern states. In urban centers in a great many sections of the country, title insurance occupies a dominant position in real estate transactions. In farm areas the abstract and opinion method is common. To a great extent, the acceptability of a particular kind of evidence of title depends on the local custom." Robert Kratovil, Real Estate Law 170 (6th ed. 1974).

evidence rules. See EVIDENCE (4).

evidencing feature. Evidence. A group of circumstances that, when taken as a whole, form a composite feature that can be reliably associated with a single object. ● This term appears more frequently in criminal cases than in civil. In criminal cases, it usu. refers to evidence that establishes a perpetrator's identity, but in civil cases it often refers to evidence that an event did or did not occur. — Also termed evidencing mark; evidential mark.

evidencing mark. See EVIDENCING FEATURE.

ex aequitate (eks ee-kwə-tay-tee). [Latin] According to equity; in equity.

ex aequo et bono (eks ee-kwoh et boh-noh). [Latin] According to what is equitable and good. ● A decision-maker (esp. in international law) who is authorized to decide ex aequo et bono is not bound by legal rules and may instead follow equitable principles. For example, article 38(2) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice provides that the Court may “decide a case ex aequo et bono if the parties agree thereto.” 37 ILM 999. [Cases: Equity ↻54.]

ex-all. Without all rights and privileges. ● Securities sold ex-all reserve all rights and privileges, such as pending dividends, to the seller.

ex altera parte (eks al-tər-ə [or awl-] pah-tee). [Latin] Of the other part.

examen (eg-zay-mən), n. [Law Latin] A trial; investigation.

examen computi (eg-zay-mən kəm-pyoo-tr). [Latin] The balance of an account.

examination. (14c) 1. The questioning of a witness under oath. See DIRECT EXAMINATION; CROSS-EXAMINATION. [Cases: Witnesses ↻224–228.] 2. Bankruptcy. The questioning of a debtor, esp. at the first meeting of creditors, concerning such matters as the bankrupt’s debts and assets. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↻3040.] 3. An inquiry made at the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, upon application for a patent, into the alleged invention’s novelty and utility, and whether it interferes with any other pending application or in-force patent. [Cases: Patents ↻104.] 4. Banking. The government’s fact-finding mechanism for determining the soundness of a bank’s finances and management. [Cases: Banks and Banking ↻17, 235.] 5. Insurance. A periodic investigation by a state insurance commission into the affairs and soundness of an insurance company licensed in that state. [Cases: Insurance ↻1048.] preliminary examination. Patents. A patent office’s initial review of an application, usu. to see whether the specification is properly set out and to prepare a search report. [Cases: Patents ↻104.]

4. PRELIMINARY HEARING. 5. A test, such as a bar examination.

examination before trial. See DEPOSITION (1).

examination-in-chief. See DIRECT EXAMINATION.

examination on the voir dire. See VOIR DIRE.

examination pro interesse suo (proh in-tər-es-ee s[y]oo-oh). [Latin “according to his interest”] A judicial inquiry into the merits of a person’s claim to sequestered property. [Cases: Sequestration ↻18.]

“In practice, an examination pro interesse suo is an inquiry described as follows: When any person claims to be entitled to an estate or other property sequestered, whether by mortgage or judgment, lease or otherwise, or has a title paramount to the sequestration, he should apply to the court to direct an inquiry whether the applicant has any and what interest in the property sequestered.” 79A C.J.S. Sequestration § 31, at 589 (1995).

examination system. Patents. A patent system in which an invention is subjected to official scrutiny to determine whether it qualifies for patent protection. Cf. REGISTRATION SYSTEM.

examined copy. See COPY.

examiner. (16c) 1. One authorized to conduct an examination; esp., a person appointed by the court, esp. a court of equity, to administer an oath and take testimony. — Also formerly termed examiner in chancery. excambion (eks-kam-bee-ahn), n. Scots law. 1. The exchange of one piece of property for another, esp. an exchange of heritable estates. 2. EXCAMBIUM (1).

excambium (eks-kam-bee-əm), n. [Latin] 1. An exchange; a place where merchants meet to transact their business. — Also termed (in Scots law) excambion. 2. An equivalent in recompense; a recompense in lieu of dower ad ostium ecclesiae.

ex capite (eks kap-i-tee). [Latin] On the ground of; by reason of. See LIEGE POUSTIE.

ex capite doli (eks kap-i-tee doh-lī). [Law Latin] Hist. On the ground of dole; for the reason of fraud. — Also termed ex capite fraudis.

ex capite inhibitionis (eks kap-i-tee in-hi-bish-ee-oh-nis). [Law Latin] Scots law. On the ground of inhibition. See INHIBITION (4).

ex capite interdictionis (eks kap-i-tee in-tər-dik-shee-oh-nis). [Law Latin] Hist. On the ground of interdiction. See INTERDICTION.

ex capite lecti (eks kap-i-tee lek-tī). [Law Latin] Scots law. On the ground of deathbed. • Under some circumstances, a legal heir could overturn a deed that a grantor made to the heir's detriment if the deed were made within 60 days before the grantor's death.

ex capite metus (eks kap-i-tee mee-təs). [Law Latin] Scots law. On the ground of fear. • A transaction could be rescinded if it were induced by serious threats.

ex capite minorenmitatis et laesionis (eks kap-i-tee min-or-en-i-tay-tis et lee-z[h]ee-oh-nis). [Law Latin] Scots law. On the ground of minority and lesion. • The phrase appeared in reference to a ground upon which a minor could be restored against deeds granted by him during his minority. The phrase also referred to a basis upon which a minor could set aside a deed (on the ground of lesion) if the deed were substantially onerous.

ex cathedra (eks kə-thee-drə or kath-ə-drə), adv. & adj. [Latin “from the chair”] (17c) By virtue of one's high office or position; with authority <ex cathedra pronouncements>.

ex causa (eks kaw-zə). [Latin] By title.

ex causa lucrativa (eks kaw-zə loo-krə-tī-və). [Latin] Hist. From a lucrative source; gratuitously.

ex causa mandati (eks kaw-zə man-day-tī). [Latin] Scots law. On account of the mandate; because of the mandate.

“A mandatory is entitled to claim from the mandant reimbursement of all moneys disbursed, as well as relief from all obligations incurred, ex causa mandati — i.e., on account of the matter which the mandate authorised to be done or performed.” John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 195 (4th ed. 1894).

ex causa potestatis (eks kaw-zə poh-tes-tay-tis). Roman law. Because of his position of authority. • Certain men could not marry women who were subject to their guardianship or control, and the reason was said to be ex causa potestatis.

excellency. (usu. cap.) (16c) A title of honor given to certain high officials or dignitaries, such as governors, ambassadors, and Roman Catholic bishops or archbishops.

Excelsior list. Labor law. A roster of the names and addresses of employees who are eligible to vote in a union election. • The NLRB requires an employer to file the list within seven days after the employer and a union reach a consent-election agreement. Excelsior Underwear, Inc., 156 N.L.R.B. 1236 (1966). [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻ 1191.]

exceptio (ek-sep-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. 1. An exception, plea, or objection. 2. Roman & civil law. A defendant's plea admitting the claim in principle but alleging facts or legal provisions that negate it in this instance. 3. A defense to a claim that is justly brought but that unjustly accuses the particular defendant named. Pl. exceptiones (ek-sep-shee-oh-nee-z).

exceptio dilatoria (dil-ə-tor-ee-ə). A dilatory exception; an exception that defeated the action for a time and created a delay, such as an agreement not to sue within a certain time.

exceptio doli mali (doh-lī mal-ī). An exception, defense, or plea of fraud. — Sometimes shortened to exceptio doli.

exceptio dominii (də-min-ee-ī). A claim of ownership by the defendant in an action to recover property.

exceptio dotis cautae non numeratae (doh-tis kaw-tee non n[y]oo-mə-ray-tee). A defense to an action for the restitution of dowry, asserting that, although promised, dowry was never paid.

exceptio in factum (in fak-təm). An exception on the facts; an exception or plea founded on the peculiar circumstances of a case.

exceptio in personam (in pər-soh-nəm). A plea or defense of a personal nature that only the person to whom it is granted by law may assert.

exceptio in rem (in rem). A plea or defense that is not of a personal nature but is connected with the legal circumstances on which the suit is founded, and that may therefore be alleged by any party in interest, such as an heir or surety of the proper or original debtor.

exceptio jurisjurandi (joo-ris-juu-ran-dī). An exception of oath; an exception or plea that the matter had been sworn to. • This kind of exception was allowed if a debtor, at a creditor's instance, had sworn that nothing was due the creditor, but the creditor sued anyway.

exceptio metus (met-əs). An exception, defense, or plea of fear or compulsion.

exceptio non adimpleti contractus (non ad-im-plee-tī kən-trak-təs). An exception in a contract action involving mutual duties or obligations, to the effect that the plaintiff may not sue if the plaintiff's own obligations have not been performed.

exceptio non numeratae pecuniae (ek-sep-shee-oh non n[y]oo-mə-ray-tee pi-kyoo-nee-ee). [Latin] Roman law. An exception or defense that money was not paid.

"This was one of the Roman law exceptions, founded on the obligatio literarum of the Romans. The obligatio literarum was constituted by a writing, the granter of which acknowledged receipt from the creditor of a certain sum of money. But as the obligation was sometimes granted before the money was advanced, spe numerandae pecuniae, by the Roman law, the obligation, until the lapse of two years after its date and delivery, did not prove the receipt of the money; and the debtor against whom, within that time, a demand for repayment was made, might plead the exceptio non numeratae pecuniae; that is, that the money of which repayment was demanded, was truly never advanced. The exception was sufficient to elide the demand, unless the creditor proved that he had advanced the money." William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 426 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

exceptio non solutae pecuniae (non sə-loo-tee pi-kyoo-nee-ee). A plea that the debt at issue in the suit had not been discharged by payment (as the adverse party alleged), notwithstanding the existence of a receipt or acquittance reflecting payment. Cf. exceptio pecuniae non numeratae.

exceptio pacti conventi (pak-trī-kən-ven-tī). An exception of compact; a defense or plea that the plaintiff had agreed not to sue.

exceptio pecuniae non numeratae (pi-kyoo-nee-ee non n[y]oo-mə-ray-tee). An exception or plea of money not paid; a defense by a party who was sued on a promise to repay money that was never received from the plaintiff. Cf. exceptio non solutae pecuniae; PECUNIA NON NUMERATA.

exceptio peremptoria (pər-emp-tor-ee-ə). A peremptory exception that forever destroyed the subject matter or ground of the action, such as the exceptio doli mali and the exceptio metus. — Also termed exceptio perpetua.

exceptio plurium concubentium (ploor-ee-əm kon-kyoo-ben-shee-əm). Rare. The plea or defense in a paternity action that the plaintiff had several lovers around the time of conception.

exceptio rei judicatae (ree-ī joo-də-kay-tee). An exception or plea of matter adjudged; a plea that the subject matter of the action had been determined in a previous action.

exceptio rei venditae et traditae (ree-ī ven-də-tee et trad-ə-tee). An exception or plea of the sale and delivery [of a thing]. • This exception presumes a valid sale but, because no one can transfer a right greater than what is possessed, no valid transfer of property occurred, yet the real owner is nonetheless estopped from contesting the sale.

exceptio senatusconsulti Macedoniani (sə-nay-təs-kən-səl-tī mas-ə-doh-nee-ay-nī). A defense to an action for the recovery of money loaned, on the ground that the loan was made to a person who was under another person's paternal power. • This defense is so named from the decree of the senate that forbade the recovery of such loans.

exceptio senatusconsulti Velleiani (sə-nay-təs-kən-səl-tī vel-ee-ay-nī). A defense to an action on a contract of suretyship, on the ground that the surety was a woman and thus incapable of becoming bound for another. • This defense is so named from the decree of the senate forbidding such sureties.

exception temporis (tem-pə-ris). An exception or plea that the time prescribed by law for bringing a particular action has expired.

exception, n. (14c) 1. A formal objection to a court's ruling by a party who wants to preserve an overruled objection or rejected proffer for appeal <the prosecutor stated her exception to the court's ruling disallowing the witness's testimony>. • To make an exception or objection, attorneys sometimes say, "I except" or "I object." Exception properly refers only to an objection made after an initial objection or proffer is made and overruled. In most courts, an exception is no longer required to preserve the initial objection. [Cases: Appeal and Error ⇨ 248-280; 1048-1060; Pleading ⇨ 228-228.23.]

The following quotation reflects former practice: "The exception must be distinguished from the objection. Many counsel are heard carelessly saying 'I except' when the thing they are doing is 'I object.' The exception serves an entirely distinct purpose from the objection, — a double purpose, in fact. It warns the judge and the other party that the excepter is not satisfied with the ruling and takes issue with a view to appeal; and it sums up and preserves the precise terms of the ruling. The proponent of the evidence is the excepter if the ruling excludes the evidence; but if it admits the evidence, the opponent of the evidence is the excepter. Thus the excepter and the objector are not necessarily the same parties." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 421 (1935).

declinatory exception (di-klīn-ə-tor-ee). Louisiana law. An exception to a court's jurisdiction. • Grounds for refusing to submit to a court's jurisdiction include lack of personal jurisdiction and insufficient service of process. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 228.2.] dilatory exception (dil-ə-tor-ee). (1822) Louisiana law. An exception intended to delay but not dismiss an action. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 228.6, 228.7.]

general exception. (16c) 1. An objection pointing out a substantive defect in an opponent's pleading, such as the insufficiency of the claim or the court's lack of subject-matter jurisdiction; an objection to a pleading for want of substance. — Also termed general demurrer. Cf. SPECIAL EXCEPTION (1). [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 228.13.] 2. An objection in which the excepting party does not specify the grounds of the objection.

peremptory exception. (16c) Louisiana law. A defensive pleading asserting that no legal remedy exists for the plaintiff's alleged injury, that res judicata or prescription bars the claim, or that an indispensable party has not been included in the litigation. [Cases: Pleading ⇨ 228.8.]

special exception. See SPECIAL EXCEPTION.

2. Something that is excluded from a rule's operation <employers with fewer than five employees are an exception to the rule>.

statutory exception. (18c) A provision in a statute exempting certain persons or conduct from the statute's operation. [Cases: Statutes ⇨ 228.]

3. The retention of an existing right or interest, by and for the grantor, in real property being granted to another. Cf. RESERVATION (1). [Cases: Deeds ⇨ 137, 141.] — except, vb.

exceptionable (ek-sep-shən-ə-bəl), adj. (17c) Liable to objection; OBJECTIONABLE.

exceptional charge. See special charge under CHARGE.

exception clause. A clause that attempts to modify or exclude the prima facie obligations that arise when a document is signed. — Also termed exemption clause. [Cases: Deeds ⇨ 137-140.]

exceptio plurium concubentium defense. 1. See MULTIPLE ACCESS. 2. See exceptio plurium concubentium under EXCEPTIO.

exceptis excipiendis (ek-sep-tis ek-sip-ee-en-dis). [Latin] With all necessary exceptions.

exceptor, n. One who takes exception; an objector. — Also spelled excepter.

excerpta (ek-sərp-tə), n. pl. [Latin] Extracts.

ex certa scientia (eks sər-tə si-en-shee-ə). [Latin] Of certain or sure knowledge. • This phrase was anciently used in patents, and imported full knowledge of the subject matter on the part of the sovereign.

excès de pouvoir (ek-say də poo-vwahr). [French "excess of power"] 1. Int'l law. Beyond the powers (of a tribunal). 2. Administrative law. Beyond the powers of an official.

excess-benefit plan. See EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.

excess clause. An insurance-policy provision — usu. contained in the "other insurance" section of the policy — that limits the insurer's liability to the amount exceeding other available coverage. • This clause essentially requires other insurers to pay first. Cf. ESCAPE CLAUSE; PRO RATA CLAUSE. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2110.]

excess-lines insurance. See surplus-lines insurance under INSURANCE.

excess margin. Equity in a brokerage firm's customer account that exceeds either the legal-minimum dollar amount for a margin account or the maintenance requirement.

excess of jurisdiction. (17c) 1. A court's acting beyond the limits of its power, usu. in one of three ways: (1) when the court has no power to deal with the kind of matter at issue, (2) when the court has no power to deal with the particular person concerned, or (3) when the judgment or order issued is of a kind that the court has no power to issue. [Cases: Courts ⇨29, 40.] 2. A court's departure from recognized and established requirements of law, despite apparent adherence to procedural form, the effect of which is a deprivation of one's constitutional right. — Also termed excess jurisdiction.

excess of privilege. (1889) 1. An excessive publication of a privileged statement — that is, beyond the limits of the privilege. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⇨50.5.] 2. The improper and malicious use of the privilege to publish a statement. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⇨50.]

excess policy. See excess insurance under INSURANCE.

excess-profits tax. See TAX.

excess reinsurance. See REINSURANCE.

excess reserve. See RESERVE.

excess theory. Insurance. The principle that a tortfeasor will be considered underinsured if the injured party's damages exceed the tortfeasor's liability-insurance coverage. • This principle allows an injured party to invoke underinsured-motorist coverage. Cf. GAP THEORY. [Cases: Insurance ⇨2787.]

Exchequer (eks-chek-ər or eks-chek-ər). (14c) 1. English law. The government department charged with collecting and administering the national revenue; the treasury department. • The name is said to have derived from the checkered cloth, resembling a chessboard, that anciently covered the table on which certain of the king's accounts were tallied, the sums being marked and scored with counters. 2. COURT OF EXCHEQUER. — Abbr. Ex.

Exchequer bill. A bill of credit issued in England by the authority of Parliament; an instrument issued at the Exchequer, usu. under the authority of an act of Parliament passed for that specific purpose, containing an engagement on the part of the government to repay, with interest, the principal sums advanced.

Exchequer Chamber. An English court of intermediate appeal from the common-law courts, namely, the Court of King's Bench, the Court of Common Pleas, and the Court of Exchequer. • It was established in 1822. — Also termed Camera Scaccarii.

Exchequer Division. Hist. English law. A division of the High Court of Justice, to which the business of the Court of Exchequer was specially assigned by section 34 of the Judicature Act of 1873, and later merged into the Queen's Bench Division in 1881.

excise, n. (15c) A tax imposed on the manufacture, sale, or use of goods (such as a cigarette tax), or on an occupation or activity (such as a license tax or an attorney occupation fee). — Also termed excise tax. Cf. income tax and property tax under TAX. [Cases: Taxation ⇨ 3251, 3602.]

excision. See FEMALE GENITAL MUTILATION.

excited utterance. (1800) A statement about a startling event made under the stress and excitement of the event. • An excited utterance may be admissible as a hearsay exception. Fed. R. Evid. 803(2). Cf. PRESENT SENSE IMPRESSION. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 363–368; Evidence ⇨ 120.] excludable, adj. (1916) 1. (Of evidence) subject to exclusion <excludable hearsay>. 2. (Of an alien) ineligible for admission or entry into a country.

excludable alien. See ALIEN.

exclude. See RIGHT TO EXCLUDE.

excludendo fiscum et relictam (eks-kloo-den-doh fis-kəm et ri-lik-təm). [Law Latin] Hist. To the exclusion of the rights of the Crown and of the widow.

exclusion, n. 1. Tax. An item of income excluded from gross income. — Also termed income exclusion. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3110; Taxation ⇨ 3447.]

annual exclusion. (1940) The amount allowed as nontaxable gift income during the calendar year. • The purpose of the annual exclusion is both to serve as an estate-planning mechanism (so that gifts made during the donor's lifetime remain nontestamentary and nontaxable) and to eliminate the administrative inconvenience of taxing relatively small gifts. In 2009, for an individual, the first $13,000 in gifts can be excluded; for married persons, the exclusion is $26,000 per couple for joint gifts, regardless of which spouse supplied the donated property. IRC (26 USCA) § 2503. — Also termed annual gift-tax exclusion. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4206.10.]

2. Evidence. A trial judge's determination that an item offered as evidence may not be presented to the trier of fact (esp. the jury). 3. Insurance. An insurance-policy provision that excepts certain events or conditions from coverage. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2098.] — exclude, vb. — exclusionary, adj.

automobile exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damages arising from the use (including loading and unloading) of an automobile, aircraft, or other motor vehicle owned, operated, rented, or borrowed by the insured. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(13).]

business-risk exclusion. An exclusion in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for common risks of doing business, including harm to the insured's product or work, damages arising from a product recall, damages arising from the insured's failure to perform under a contract, or damages arising from a failure of the insured's product to perform as intended. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(20).]

design-defect exclusion. A provision in some umbrella policies and some older commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for bodily injury arising from the failure of the insured's product to perform its intended function because of a defect or deficiency in its design, formula, specifications, instructions, or advertising materials. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(21).]

employee-liability exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for injury to an employee (or a member of the employee's family), arising from and in the course of employment with the insured. • This exclusion is generally intended to exclude from coverage all injuries covered by the workers'-compensation laws. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(11, 12).]

employment-related-practices exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damages arising from an insured's employment practices, including any policy, action, or omission — such as coercion, demotion, evaluation, reassignment, discipline, defamation, harassment, humiliation, or discrimination — that is directed at the person injured. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(11).]

expected/intended exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for property damage or bodily injury that is expected or intended by the insured, except any harm arising from the use of reasonable force to protect a person or property. • This exclusion is sometimes referred to as "exclusion a" because it is the first exclusion listed on most policies. — Also termed exclusion a; intentional-injury exclusion. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(3).]

failure-to-perform exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for (1) the loss of use of undamaged property resulting from the insured's delay or failure in performing an obligation, or (2) a design defect or failure in the insured's product. — Also termed loss-of-use exclusion. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(21).]

knowledge-of-falsity exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damages arising from an oral or written communication made by the insured with knowledge that it is false. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2303(2), 2313(2).]

named-insured exclusion. An exclusion limiting liability-insurance coverage to a named insured whose injuries were caused by another named insured under the same insurance policy. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(1), 2745–2747.]

owned-property exclusion. Insurance. A provision in a comprehensive general liability insurance policy allowing only third parties who are injured on or by the insured's property to make liability claims against the insurer. • The provision ordinarily excludes coverage for (1) property owned, rented, occupied, sold, given away, or abandoned by the insured, (2) personal property in the care, custody, or control of the insured, and (3) property located where the insured and its employees work. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(25).]

own-product exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for property damage to a product that is manufactured, sold, handled, distributed, or disposed of by the insured. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(21).]

own-work exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damage to the work or services performed by the insured. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(21).]

pollution exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for bodily injury or property damages arising from the discharge, dispersal, release, or escape of chemicals, waste, acid, and other pollutants. • Pollution-exclusion clauses may take one of two forms: (1) sudden and accidental, and (2) absolute. The sudden-and-accidental clause, usu. limited to policies issued before 1985, contains an exception under which the damages are covered (i.e., exempted from the exclusion) if the discharge or other release was sudden and accidental. The absolute pollution exclusion, in most policies issued since 1985, does not contain this exception. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(17).]

sistership exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damages arising from the withdrawal, inspection, repair, replacement, or loss of use of the insured's product or work, to the extent that the product or work is withdrawn or recalled from the market because of a known or suspected defect or deficiency. — Also termed recall exclusion. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2278(24).] exclusion a. See expected/intended exclusion under EXCLUSION (3).

exclusionary hearing. See HEARING.

exclusionary practice. Antitrust. A method by which a firm can gain or maintain monopoly power without the express or tacit cooperation of competing or potentially competing firms.

exclusionary rule. (1855) 1. Evidence. Any rule that excludes or suppresses evidence <despite many exceptions, hearsay has long been inadmissible under an exclusionary rule>. — Also termed exclusionary evidence rule. [Cases: Evidence ⇨ 154, 314.] 2. Criminal procedure. A rule that excludes or suppresses evidence obtained in violation of an accused person's constitutional rights <in accordance with the exclusionary rule, the court did not admit the drugs into evidence because they had been obtained during a warrantless search of the defendant's home>. See FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE; GOOD-FAITH EXCEPTION. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 394.]

"The deterrence of unreasonable searches and seizures is a major purpose of the exclusionary rule. . . . But the rule serves other purposes as well. There is, for example, . . . 'the imperative of judicial integrity,' namely, that the courts do not become 'accomplices in willful disobedience of a Constitution they are sworn to uphold.' . . . A third purpose of the exclusionary rule . . . is that of 'assuring the people — all potential victims of unlawful government conduct — that the government would not profit from its lawless behavior, thus minimizing the risk of seriously undermining popular trust in the government.'" Wayne R. LaFare & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 3.1, at 107 (2d ed. 1992) (quoting Elkins v. United States, 364 U.S. 206, 80 S.Ct. 1437 (1960); United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338, 94 S.Ct. 613 (1974) (dissent)).

"In the simplest of exclusionary rule cases, the challenged evidence is quite clearly 'direct' or 'primary' in its relationship to the prior arrest, search, interrogation, lineup or other identification procedure. Such is the case when that evidence is an identification occurring at the confrontation between suspect and victim or witness, a confession or admission made in response to questioning, or physical evidence obtained by search or arrest. Not infrequently, however, challenged evidence is 'secondary' or 'derivative' in character. This occurs when, for example, a confession is obtained after an illegal arrest, physical evidence is located after an illegally obtained confession, or an in-court identification is made following an illegally conducted pretrial identification. In these situations, it is necessary to determine whether the derivative evidence is 'tainted' by the prior constitutional or other violation." Wayne R. LaFare & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 9.3, at 471 (2d ed. 1992).

exclusive sale. See SALE.

exclusive use. See USE (1).

exclusive-use clause. A lease provision enumerating conditions for a lessee's use of the leased property. [Cases: Bailment ↷1; Landlord and Tenant ↷134.]

ex colore (eks kə-lor-ee). [Latin] By color; under color of; under pretense, show, or protection of.

ex comitate (eks kom-ə-tay-tee). [Latin] Out of comity or courtesy.

excommencement (eks-kə-menj-mənt), n. See EXCOMMUNICATION.

ex commodato (eks kom-ə-day-toh). [Latin "out of loan"] Hist. (Of a right of action) arising out of a loan.

excommunicant (eks-kə-myoo-ni-kənt), n. (16c) Eccles. law. 1. An excommunicated person. 2. Rare. An excommunicator.

excommunication, n. (15c) Eccles. law. A sentence of censure pronounced by a spiritual court for an offense falling under ecclesiastical cognizance; expulsion from religious society or community. • In England, an excommunicated person was formerly subject to various civil disabilities, such as an inability to be a juror, to be a witness in any court, or to sue to recover lands or money due. These penalties were abolished by the Ecclesiastical Courts Act (1813). St. 53 Geo. 3, ch. 127. — Also termed excommencement. — excommunicate, vb.

"Closely allied to outlawry is excommunication; it is in fact an ecclesiastical outlawry, and, like temporal outlawry, though once it was the law's last and most terrible weapon against the obstinate offender, it is now regarded as a normal process for compelling the appearance in court of those who are accused. Indeed as regards the laity, since the spiritual courts can not direct a seizure of the body, lands, or goods, those courts must, if mere citations fail to produce an appearance, at once have recourse to their last weapon. Then, as ordained by William the Conqueror, the lay power comes to their aid. If the excommunicate does not seek absolution within forty days (this period seems to be fixed already in the twelfth century), the ordinary will signify this to the kind; a writ for the arrest of the offender will be issued, and he will be kept in prison until he makes his submission." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 500 (2d ed. 1899).

excommunicato capiendo (eks-kə-myoo-ni-kay-toh kap-ee-en-doh). [Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ that, being founded on a bishop's certificate of excommunication, required the sheriff to arrest and imprison the defendant. • The writ issued out of chancery and was returnable to the King's Bench. Cf. DE CONTUMACE CAPIENDO.

excommunicator. (17c) A person who excommunicates.

excommunicato recipiendo (eks-kə-myoo-ni-kay-toh ri-kap-ee-en-doh). [Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ commanding that an excommunicant — who had been committed to prison for obstinacy but who was unlawfully freed before agreeing to obey the church's authority — should be found, retaken, and imprisoned again.

ex comparatione scriptorum (eks kom-pə-ray-shee-oh-nee skrip-tor-əm). [Latin] By a comparison of writings or handwritings. • This term was formerly used in the law of evidence.

ex concessis (eks kən-ses-is). [Latin] From the premises granted; according to what has already been allowed.

ex consulto (eks kən-səl-toh). [Latin] With consultation or deliberation.

ex continenti (eks kon-tə-nen-ti). [Latin] Civil law. Immediately; without any interval or delay.

ex contractu (eks kən-trak-t[y]oo). [Latin "from a contract"] Arising from a contract <action ex contractu>. Cf. EX DELICTO (1).

ex-coupon bond. See BOND (2).

exculpate (ek-skəl-payt or ek-skəl-payt), vb. (17c) To free from blame or accusation. Cf. EXONERATE (1). — exculpation (ek-skəl-pay-shən), n. — exculpatory (ek-skəl-pə-tor-ee), adj.

exculpatory clause. (1891) A contractual provision relieving a party from liability resulting from a negligent or wrongful act. • A will or a trust may contain an exculpatory clause purporting to immunize a fiduciary from a breach of duty; the clause may reduce the degree of care and prudence required of the fiduciary. But courts generally find that if an exculpatory clause in a will or trust seeks to confer absolute immunity, it is void as being against public policy. See EXEMPTION CLAUSE. [Cases: Contracts ↷114, 189.5.] exculpatory evidence. See EVIDENCE.

exculpatory-no doctrine. (1977) Criminal law. The principle that a person cannot be charged with making a false statement for falsely denying guilt in response to an investigator's question. • This doctrine is based on the Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. But the U.S. Supreme Court has overruled this doctrine in federal law. Brogan v. United States, 522 U.S. 398, 118 S.Ct. 805 (1998). [Cases: Fraud ↷68.10(1).]

ex curia (eks kyoor-ee-ə). [Latin] Out of court; away from the court.

excusable, adj. (14c) (Of an illegal act or omission) not punishable under the specific circumstances <excusable neglect>.

excusable assault. See ASSAULT.

excusable homicide. See HOMICIDE.

excusable neglect. See NEGLECT.

excusatio (ek-skyoo-zay-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. An excuse or reason that exempts someone from some duty or obligation.

excusator (ek-skyoo-zay-tər), n. (17c) 1. Hist. An excuser. 2. In old German law, a defendant; one who wholly denies the plaintiff's claim.

excuse (ek-skyoos), n. (14c) 1. A reason that justifies an act or omission or that relieves a person of a duty. 2. Criminal law. A defense that arises because the defendant is not blameworthy for having acted in a way that would otherwise be criminal. • The following defenses are the traditional excuses: duress, entrapment, infancy, insanity, and involuntary intoxication. — Also termed legal excuse. Cf. JUSTIFICATION (2). [Cases: Criminal Law ↷ 37, 38.] — excuse (ek-skyooz), vb. — excusatory (ek-skyooz-ə-tor-ee), adj.

excuse by failure of presupposed conditions. See commercial impracticability under IMPRACTICABILITY.

excuss (ek-skəs), vb. (18c) To seize and detain by law.

excussio (ek-skə-s[h]ee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. A diligent prosecution of a remedy against a debtor; esp., the exhausting of a remedy against a principal debtor before resorting to a surety. — Also termed excussion.

ex-date. See EX-DIVIDEND DATE.

ex debito justitiae (eks deb-i-toh jəs-tish-ee-ee). [Latin] From or as a debt of justice; in accordance with the requirement of justice; of right; as a matter of right.

ex debito naturali (eks deb-i-toh nach-ə-ray-li). [Law Latin] Scots law. Arising from natural obligation. • The phrase appeared in reference to an obligation that was moral rather than legal.

ex defectu juris (eks di-fek-t[y]oo joor-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. From a defect in the right. • A seller had to warrant a purchaser against an eviction based on a defect in the seller's own right.

ex defectu natalium (eks di-fek-t[y]oo nə-tay-lee-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. From defect of parentage. • Formerly, this phrase appeared in reference to a basis upon which the court rejected the will of a bastard who died without issue.

ex defectu sanguinis (eks di-fek-t[y]oo sang-gwə-nis). [Latin] Hist. From failure of blood; for want of issue.

ex delectu familiae (eks di-lek-t[y]oo fə-mil-ee-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. From choice of a certain family. • The phrase appeared in reference to the sovereign's right to bestow honors on those whom he chose.

ex deliberatione Dominorum Concilii (eks di-lib-ə-ray-shee-oh-nee dom-ə-nor-əm kən-sil-ee-i). [Law Latin] Hist. After consideration by the Lords of Council.

"Formerly all writs which passed the signet were procured by presentation of a bill (or petition) for such writ. The bill was perused and considered by the Lord Ordinary on the Bills, and if he was satisfied, the bill was passed and the writ issued: the latter bearing the words ex deliberatione Dominorum Concilii to signify that the bill had been considered. These words are still appended to almost all writs which pass the signet, but they are now only words of style, since the writs are now passed periculo petentis without being submitted to the Lords." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 196-97 (4th ed. 1894).

ex delicto (eks də-lik-toh), adj. & adv. [Latin "from a wrong"] 1. Arising from a crime or tort <action ex delicto>. • Although ex delicto refers most commonly to a tort in modern usage, it referred historically to both torts and crimes. Cf. IN DELICTO; EX CONTRACTU. 2. Int'l law. Rare. As a consequence of a crime or tort <because they were counterfeit, the goods were seized and condemned ex delicto>.

ex delicto trust. See TRUST.

ex demissione (eks də-mish-ee-oh-nee). [Latin "upon the demise"] Hist. A phrase forming part of the title of the old action of ejectment. — Abbr. ex dem.

ex directo (eks di-rek-toh). [Latin] Directly; immediately.

ex distribution. Without distribution. • Shares are traded ex distribution when they no longer carry the right to receive a distribution to be made to holders. — Abbr. X; XDIS.

ex diverso (eks di-vər-soh). [Latin] Hist. On the other hand; conversely.

ex dividend. Without dividend. • Shares are traded ex dividend when the seller, not the purchaser, is entitled to the next dividend payment because it will be made before the stock transfer is completed. The first day on which shares are traded ex dividend, the stock price will drop by an amount usu. approximating the amount of the dividend. — Abbr. XD; X. Cf. CUM DIVIDEND.

ex-dividend date. The date on or after which the buyer of a security does not acquire the right to receive a recently declared dividend. — Also termed ex-date. Cf. DIVIDEND DATE.

ex dolo malo (eks doh-loh mal-oh). [Latin] Out of fraud; out of deceitful or tortious conduct.

exeat (ek-see-ət), n. (18c) 1. Generally, permission to go outside (a place). 2. Permission that a bishop grants to a priest to go out of his diocese. Cf. NE EXEAT (1).

execute, vb. (14c) 1. To perform or complete (a contract or duty) <once the contract was fully executed, the parties owed no further contractual duties to each other>. [Cases: Contracts ↷ 6.] 2. To change (as a legal interest) from one form to another <the shifting use was executed into a valid legal estate>. 3. To make (a legal document) valid by signing; to bring (a legal document) into its final, legally enforceable form <each party executed the contract without a signature witness>. 4. To put to death, esp. by legal sentence <Johnson was executed shortly after midnight>. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↷ 1795.] 5. To enforce and collect on (a money judgment) <Williams asked the executed, adj. (16c) 1. (Of a document) that has been signed <an executed will>. 2. That has been done, given, or performed <executed consideration>.

"[T]he term 'executed' is a slippery word. Its use is to be avoided except when accompanied by explanation. . . . A contract is frequently said to be executed when the document has been signed, or has been signed, sealed, and delivered. Further, by executed contract is frequently meant one that has been fully performed by both parties." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 26 n.* (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

executio (ek-sə-kyoo-shee-oh), n. [Latin] 1. The performance or completion of a thing; the act of following through on a commitment. 2. The doing of something thoroughly. 3. Management or administration. 4. Hist. Execution; the final process in an action.

executio bonorum (bə-nor-əm). [Latin] Hist. The management or administration of goods.

execution, n. (14c) 1. The act of carrying out or putting into effect (as a court order or a securities transaction) <execution of the court's decree> <execution of the stop-loss order>. 2. Validation of a written instrument, such as a contract or will, by fulfilling the necessary legal requirements <delivery of the goods completed the contract's execution>. [Cases: Contracts ↻34; Sales ↻29; Vendor and Purchaser ↻23; Wills ↻108–129.] 3. Judicial enforcement of a money judgment, usu. by seizing and selling the judgment debtor's property <even if the plaintiff receives a judgment against the foreign debtor, execution is unlikely>. — Also termed (in Scots law) diligence. [Cases: Execution ↻1; Federal Civil Procedure ↻2691.] 4. A court order directing a sheriff or other officer to enforce a judgment, usu. by seizing and selling the judgment debtor's property <the court issued the execution authorizing seizure of the car>. — Also termed writ of execution; judgment execution; general execution. [Cases: Execution ↻74; Federal Civil Procedure ↻2697.]

"A writ of execution is an authorization to an executive officer, issued from a court in which a final judgment has been rendered, for the purpose of carrying such judgment into force and effect. It is founded upon the judgment, must generally be conformed to it in every respect, and the plaintiff is always entitled to it to obtain a satisfaction of his claim, unless his right has been suspended by proceedings in the nature of an appeal or by his own agreement."

Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 26, at 50 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

alias execution. A second execution issued to enforce a judgment not fully satisfied by the original writ. Cf. alias writ under WRIT. [Cases: Execution ↻99.]

body execution. A court order requiring an officer to take a named person into custody, usu. to bring the person before the court to pay a debt; CAPIAS. [Cases: Execution ↻421; Federal Civil Procedure ↻2714.]

close-jail execution. A body execution stating that the person to be arrested should be confined in jail without the privilege of movement about the jailyard. [Cases: Execution ↻421, 448.]

dormant execution. An execution authorizing an officer to seize and hold property rather than sell it, until further notice.

junior execution. An execution that is subordinate to another execution issued from an earlier judgment against the same debtor. [Cases: Execution ↻112.]

malicious execution. An abuse of process by which a person, maliciously and without reasonable cause, issues an execution against the property of a judgment debtor. [Cases: Execution ↻454.]

special execution. An execution authorizing a judgment to be satisfied from specified property. [Cases: Execution ↻15, 420.5.]

speedy execution. An execution issuing quickly (esp. by judges at nisi prius) after a trial.

5. Criminal law. The carrying out of a death sentence <the Supreme Court stayed the execution>. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↻1795–1799.] — execute, vb.

execution clause. The part of a deed containing the date, seal (if required), and signatures of the grantor, grantor's spouse, and witnesses. [Cases: Deeds ↻44–53.]

execution creditor. See CREDITOR.

executione facienda in withernamium (ek-sə-kyoo-shee-oh-nee fay-shee-en-də in with-ər-nay-mee-əm). [Latin] Hist. A writ that lay for taking cattle of a person who had taken someone else's cattle out of the county so that the sheriff could not replevy them.

executione iudicii (ek-sə-kyoo-shee-oh-nee joo-dish-ee-ri). [Latin] Hist. A writ directed to a judge of an inferior court to issue execution upon a judgment in that court, or to return some reasonable cause why the judge has delayed execution.

executioner. (16c) A person who puts another person to death to carry out a death sentence; a person who carries out capital punishment on the state's behalf.

execution lien. See LIEN.

exécution parée (eg-zay-koo-syawn pa-ray). [French] French law. A right founded on an act approved and verified before a notary, by which a creditor may immediately — without citation or summons — seize and cause to be sold the debtor's property and keep the proceeds of the sale (to the extent of the indebtedness).

execution-proof. See JUDGMENT-PROOF.

executive immunity. See IMMUNITY (1).

executive officer. See EXECUTIVE (2).

executive order. (1862) An order issued by or on behalf of the President, usu. intended to direct or instruct the actions of executive agencies or government officials, or to set policies for the executive branch to follow. — Abbr. ex. ord. [Cases: United States ↻28.]

executive pardon. See PARDON.

executive power. (17c) Constitutional law. The power to see that the laws are duly executed and enforced. • Under federal law, this power is vested in the President; in the states, it is vested in the governors. The President's enumerated powers are found in the U.S. Constitution, art. II, § 2; governors' executive powers are provided for in state constitutions. The other two great powers of government are the legislative power and the judicial power. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↻2620–2626.] executive privilege. See PRIVILEGE (3).

executive right. Oil & gas. The exclusive right to lease specified land or mineral rights. • The executive right is one of the incidents of the mineral interest. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↻47.]

executive secretary. See EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR.

executive session. See SESSION (1).

executor, n. (13c) 1. (ek-sə-kyoo-tər) One who performs or carries out some act. 2. (eg-zek-yə-tər) A person named by a testator to carry out the provisions in the testator's will. Cf. ADMINISTRATOR (2). [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↻14.] — Abbr. exor.

acting executor. (18c) One who assumes the role of executor — usu. temporarily — but is not the legally appointed executor or the executor-in-fact. — Also termed temporary executor. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↻22.]

coexecutor. See joint executor.

executor ab episcopo constitutus (ab ə-pis-kə-poh kon-sti-t[y]oo-təs). [Law Latin] Eccles. law. An executor appointed by a bishop; an administrator to an intestate. — Also termed executor dativus.

executor a lege constitutus (ay [or ah] lee-jee kon-sti-t[y]oo-təs). [Law Latin] Eccles. law. One authorized by law to be an executor; the ordinary of the diocese.

executor a testatore constitutus (ay [or ah] tes-tə-tor-ee kon-sti-t[y]oo-təs). [Law Latin] Eccles. law. An executor appointed by a testator. — Also termed executor testamentarius.

executor dative. See DATIVE (1).

executor dativus. See executor ab episcopo constitutus.

executor de son tort (də sawn [or son] tor[t]). [Law French “executor of his own wrong”] (17c) A person who, without legal authority, takes on the responsibility to act as an executor or administrator of a decedent's property, usu. to the detriment of the estate's beneficiaries or creditors. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↻538–544.]

“Executor de son tort — or, executor of his own wrong. Is he that takes upon him the office of an executor by intrusion, not being so constituted by the testator.” The Pocket Lawyer and Family Conveyancer 98 (3d ed. 1833).

executor lucratus (loo-kray-tas). An executor who has assets of the testator, the latter having become liable by wrongfully interfering with another's property.

executor testamentarius. See executor a testatore constitutus.

executor to the tenor. Eccles. law. A person who is not named executor in the will but who performs duties similar to those of an executor.

general executor. (18c) An executor who has the power to administer a decedent's entire estate until its final settlement.

independent executor. (1877) An executor who, unlike an ordinary executor, can administer the estate with very little supervision by the probate court. • Only a few states — mostly in the West and Southwest — allow testators to designate independent executors. But lawyers routinely write wills that relieve a trusted executor from obtaining appraisals, from providing inventories and surety bonds, and from obtaining court approval "to the maximum extent permitted by law." The Uniform Probate Code endorses independent administration, and it is the usual process unless a party demands court-supervised administration. — Also termed nonintervention executor. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↷7, 75.]

joint executor. (17c) One of two or more persons named in a will as executor of an estate. — Also termed coexecutor. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↷123.] limited executor. (18c) An executor whose appointment is restricted in some way, such as time, place, or subject matter.

literary executor. Copyright. A limited-purpose executor appointed to manage copyrighted materials in an estate. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↷1.]

nonintervention executor. See independent executor.

special executor. (18c) An executor whose power is limited to a portion of the decedent's estate. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↷22.]

substituted executor. (18c) An executor appointed to act in the place of an executor who cannot or will not perform the required duties. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ↷37.]

temporary executor. See acting executor.

3. (eg-zek-yə-tər) Patents. One who represents a legally incapacitated inventor. [Cases: Patents ↷102.] — executorial, adj. — executorship, n.

executor fund. See FUND (1).

executory (eg-zek-yə-tor-ee), adj. (16c) 1. Taking full effect at a future time <executory judgment>. 2. To be performed at a future time; yet to be completed <executory contract>.

executory accord. See ACCORD (2).

executory bequest. See BEQUEST.

executory consideration. See CONSIDERATION (1).

executory contract. See CONTRACT.

executory covenant. See COVENANT (1).

executory devise. See DEVISE.

executory interest. (1833) A future interest, held by a third person, that either cuts off another's interest or begins after the natural termination of a preceding estate. Cf. REMAINDER. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷1.]

"What is an executory interest? Here is a pretty good definition: An executory interest is any future interest created in a person other than the transferor that is not a remainder. Here are five classic examples of executory interest: (1) O transfers 'to A for life; then, one day after A's death, to the heirs of A.' The transfer creates a springing executory interest in those who will be A's heirs. (2) O transfers 'to A for 200 years if he shall so long live, then to the heirs of A.' This transfer also creates a springing executory interest in A's prospective heirs. (3) O transfers 'to A and his heirs five years from the date of this deed.' A owns a springing executory interest. (4) O, when B is fifteen, transfers 'to A for life; then no sooner than one day after A's death, to B and his heirs if B ever reaches 21.' B owns a springing executory interest. (5) O transfers 'to A and his heirs; but if A marries X, to B and his heirs.' B owns a shifting executory interest." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 80 (2d ed. 1984).

shifting executory interest. An executory interest that operates in defeasance of an interest created simultaneously in a third person. [Cases: Wills ↷625.]

springing executory interest. An executory interest that operates in defeasance of an interest left in the transferor. [Cases: Wills ↷625.]

executory judgment. See JUDGMENT.

executory limitation. See LIMITATION.

executory process. Civil law. 1. A process that can be resorted to either (1) when the right of a creditor arises from an act importing a confession of judgment, and that contains a privilege or mortgage in the creditor's favor, or (2) when the creditor demands the execution of a judgment that has been rendered by a different tribunal. 2. An accelerated procedure, summary in nature, by which the holder of a mortgage or privilege evidenced by a confession of judgment seeks to effect an ex parte seizure and sale of the subject property. [Cases: Chattel Mortgages ↷269; Mortgages ↷499.] executory remainder. See contingent remainder under REMAINDER.

executory sale. See SALE.

executory trust. See TRUST.

executory unilateral accord. (1940) An offer to enter a contract; OFFER (2).

executory use. See springing use under USE (4).

executory warranty. See WARRANTY (3).

executress. See EXECUTRIX.

executrix (eg-zek-yə-triks), n. Archaic. A female executor. — Abbr. exrx. — Also termed executress. Pl.

executrixes (eg-zek-yə-trik-səz), executrices (eg-zek-yə-tri-seez). See EXECUTOR.

executry. Scots law. 1. Executorship. See EXECUTOR (1), (2). 2. The movable property of a decedent.

exedos (e-he-thohs), n. See EJIDOS.

exemplar (eg-zem-plər or -plahr), n. (15c) 1. An ideal or typical example; a standard specimen <handwriting exemplars>. 2. Nontestimonial identification evidence, such as fingerprints, voiceprints, and DNA samples. See VOICE EXEMPLAR. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 404.85; Evidence ⇨ 197.]

exemplary, adj. (16c) 1. Serving as an ideal example; commendable <exemplary behavior>. 2. Serving as a warning or deterrent; admonitory <exemplary damages>.

exemplary damages. See punitive damages under DAMAGES.

exemplary substitution. See SUBSTITUTION (5).

exemplification, n. (16c) An official transcript of a public record, authenticated as a true copy for use as evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 430; Evidence ⇨ 338.] — exemplify, vb.

exemplificatione (eg-zem-plə-fə-kay-shee-oh-nee). [Latin] A writ granted for the exemplification or transcript of an original record.

exemplified copy. See certified copy under COPY.

exempli gratia (eg-zem-pli gray-shee-ə or ek-sem-plee grah-tee-ə). [Latin] (17c) For example; for instance. — Abbr. e.g. or (rarely) ex. gr.

exemplum (eg-zem-pləm), n. [Latin] (19c) Civil law. A copy; a written authorized copy.

exempt, adj. (14c) Free or released from a duty or liability to which others are held <persons exempt from military service> <property exempt from sequestration>. — exempt, vb. — exemptive, adj.

exempt income. See INCOME.

exemption. (14c) 1. Freedom from a duty, liability, or other requirement; an exception. See IMMUNITY; EXCEPTION (2). 2. A privilege given to a judgment debtor by law, allowing the debtor to retain certain property without liability. [Cases: Exemptions ⇨ 1; Homestead ⇨ 1.] 3. Tax. An amount allowed as a deduction from adjusted gross income, used to determine taxable income. Cf. DEDUCTION (2). [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3294; Taxation ⇨ 3501, 3518.]

dependency exemption. (1920) A tax exemption granted to an individual taxpayer for each dependent whose gross income is less than the exemption amount and for each child who is younger than 19 or, if a student, younger than 24. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3294; Taxation ⇨ 3501, 3519.]

personal exemption. (1920) An amount allowed as a deduction from an individual taxpayer's adjusted gross income. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 3295; Taxation ⇨ 3501, 3519.]

exemption clause. (1840) A contractual provision providing that a party will not be liable for damages for which that party would otherwise have ordinarily been liable. Cf. EXCEPTION CLAUSE; EXCULPATORY CLAUSE; INDEMNITY CLAUSE. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 114, 189.5.]

"An exemption clause may take many forms, but all such clauses have one thing in common in that they exempt a party from a liability which he would have borne had it not been for the clause. In some cases an exemption clause merely relieves a party from certain purely contractual obligations, for example, the duties of a seller in a contract of sale regarding the quality and fitness of the goods. In other cases exemption clauses go further and protect the party not merely from contractual liability but even from liability which would otherwise have arisen in tort. For example, a shipping company's ticket may exempt the company from liability to the passenger for any injuries, however caused. Now if the passenger is injured as a result of the negligence of the company's employees, that would, in the normal way, give rise to an action in tort for negligence, quite apart from the contract." P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 167 (3d ed. 1981).

exemption equivalent. The maximum value of assets that one can transfer to another before incurring a federal gift and estate tax.

exemption law. (1839) A law describing what property of a debtor cannot be attached by a judgment creditor or trustee in bankruptcy to satisfy a debt. See EXEMPT PROPERTY (1). [Cases: Exemptions ⇨ 1; Homestead ⇨ 1.]

ex empto (eks emp-toh). [Latin] Roman & civil law. Out of purchase; founded on purchase.

exempt organization. An organization that is either partially or completely exempt from federal income taxation. See CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION. [Cases: Internal Revenue ⇨ 4045-4071.]

exempt property. (1839) 1. A debtor's holdings and possessions that, by law, a creditor cannot attach to satisfy a debt. • All the property that creditors may lawfully reach is known as nonexempt property. Many states provide a homestead exemption that excludes a person's house and household items, up to a certain amount, from the liens of most creditors. The purpose of the exemption is to prevent debtors from becoming destitute. See HOMESTEAD. Cf. NONEXEMPT PROPERTY. [Cases: Exemptions ⇨ 1; Homestead ⇨ 1.] 2. Personal property that a surviving spouse is automatically entitled to receive from the decedent's estate. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ⇨ 53.] exempt security. See SECURITY.

exempt transaction. A sale that falls outside the scope of a certain statute, such as the Securities Act of 1933 or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇨ 18.10-18.30.]

exhausted combination. See old combination under COMBINATION.

exhausted-combination rejection. See old-combination rejection under REJECTION.

exhausted vote. See VOTE (1).

exhaustion of remedies. (1876) The doctrine that, if an administrative remedy is provided by statute, a claimant must seek relief first from the administrative body before judicial relief is available. • The doctrine's purpose is to maintain comity between the courts and administrative agencies and to ensure that courts will not be burdened by cases in which judicial relief is unnecessary. — Also termed exhaustion of administrative remedies. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↪ 229.]

"The traditional rule can . . . be fairly simply stated. A litigant must normally exhaust state 'legislative' or 'administrative' remedies before challenging the state action in federal court. He or she need not normally exhaust state 'judicial' remedies. The rationale for this distinction is that until the administrative process is complete, it cannot be certain that the party will need judicial relief, but when the case becomes appropriate for judicial determination, he or she may choose whether to resort to a state or federal court for that relief. The word 'normally' is required in both branches of the rule." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 49, at 313 (5th ed. 1994).

vicarious exhaustion of remedies. The rule that if one member of a class satisfies a requirement to exhaust administrative remedies, that is enough for all others similarly situated to be considered as having exhausted the remedies. — Often shortened to vicarious exhaustion. [Cases: Administrative Law ↻229.]

exhaustion-of-rights doctrine. Int'l law. The principle that once the owner of an intellectual-property right has placed a product covered by that right into the marketplace, the right to control how the product is resold within that internal market is lost. • Within a common market, such as the European Union, the doctrine also applies to the import and export of the goods between member nations. Cf. PATENT-EXHAUSTION DOCTRINE.

exhaustion of state remedies. (1944) The doctrine that an available state remedy must be exhausted in certain types of cases before a party can gain access to a federal court. • For example, a state prisoner must exhaust all state remedies before a federal court will hear a petition for habeas corpus. [Cases: Habeas Corpus ↻319–352.]

exhibere (ek-sə-beer-ee), vb. [Latin] 1. To present (a tangible thing) so that it may be handled. 2. To appear personally to defend against an action at law.

ex metu carceris (eks mee-t[y]oo kahr-sər-is). [Latin] Hist. From fear of imprisonment.

ex mora (eks mor-ə). [Latin] Civil law. From or in consequence of delay. • Interest is allowed ex mora — that is, if there has been delay in repaying borrowed money.

ex mora debitoris (eks mor-ə deb-i-tor-is). [Latin] Hist. On account of the debtor's delay. • The phrase appeared in reference to a basis for charging interest on a debt.

ex more (eks mor-ee). [Latin] According to custom.

ex mutuo (eks myoo-choo-oh). [Latin] From or out of loan. • In old English law, a debt was said to arise ex mutuo when one lent another anything that consisted in number, weight, or measure.

ex natura (eks nə-t[y]oor-ə). [Latin] Hist. Naturally; according to nature.

ex natura feudi (eks nə-t[y]oor-ə fyoo-dī). [Law Latin] Hist. According to the nature of the feudal right.

ex naturali jure (eks nach-ə-ray-li juur-ee), adv. [Latin] By or according to natural law <ex naturali jure some time may be needed after a declaration of war before the war begins>. See NATURAL LAW.

ex natura rei (eks nə-t[y]oor-ə ree-i). [Latin] Hist. According to the nature of the thing (or transaction).

ex necessitate (eks nə-ses-i-tay-tee). [Latin] Of or from necessity.

ex necessitate legis (eks nə-ses-i-tay-tee lee-jis). From or by necessity of law.

ex necessitate rei (eks nə-ses-i-tay-tee ree-i). From the necessity or urgency of the thing or case.

ex nihilo (eks nī-hi-loh). [Latin] From nothing.

ex nobili officio (eks nob-i-lī ə-fish-ee-oh). [Latin “by virtue of its noble office”] Scots law. (Of a judicial act) done as a matter of equity. See NOBILI OFFICIO.

ex officio (eks ə-fish-ee-oh), adv. & adj. [Latin] (16c) By virtue or because of an office; by virtue of the authority implied by office. • The term is often misused as a synonym for “nonvoting.” Some meetings mistakenly label their regularly invited guests as “ex officio members” when in fact they are not members at all; others mistakenly refer to the nonvoting members as “ex officio members” even though some nonvoting members are present only in an individual capacity and not by virtue of office, or even though some voting members also serve ex officio. But an ex officio member is a voting member unless the applicable governing document provides otherwise.

“Frequently boards include ex-officio members — that is, persons who are members of the board by virtue of an office or committee chairmanship held in the society, or in the parent state or national society or federation or some allied group; or — sometimes in boards outside of organized societies — by virtue of a public office. In the executive board of a society, if the ex-officio member of the board is under the authority of the society (that is, if he is a member, officer, or employee of the society), there is no distinction between him and the other board members. If the ex-officio member is not under the authority of the society, he has all the privileges of board membership, including the right to make motions and to vote, but none of the obligations — just as in a case, for example, where the governor of a state is ex officio a trustee of a private academy.” Henry M. Robert, Robert’s Rules of Order Newly Revised § 49, at 466 (10th ed. 2000).

ex officio information. English law. A criminal information filed by the attorney general ex officio on behalf of the Crown, in the Court of King’s Bench, for offenses more immediately affecting the government, as distinguished from informations in which the Crown is the nominal prosecutor.

ex officio justice. (1855) A judge who serves on a commission or board only because the law requires the presence of a judge rather than because the judge was selected for the position.

ex officio member. See member ex officio under MEMBER.

ex officio service (eks ə-fish-ee-oh). (1845) A service that the law imposes on an official by virtue of the office held, such as that of a local justice of the peace to perform marriage ceremonies. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↷ 110.]

exogamous insemination. See artificial insemination by donor under ARTIFICIAL INSEMINATION.

exoine (e-soyn), n. [French “excuse”] French law. An act or instrument in writing containing the reasons why a party in a civil suit, or a person accused, has not appeared after being summoned. See ESSOIN.

exonerate (eg-zon-ə-rayt), vb. (16c) 1. To free from responsibility <exonerate from the payment of the debt>. Cf. EXCULPATE. 2. To free from encumbrances <exonerate the property from the mortgage lien>. — exonerative (eg-zon-ər-ay-tiv or -ə-tiv), adj.

exoneration (eg-zon-ə-ray-shən). (16c) 1. The removal of a burden, charge, responsibility, or duty. 2. The right to be reimbursed by reason of having paid money that another person should have paid. 3. The equitable right of a surety — confirmed by statute in many states — to proceed to compel the principal debtor to satisfy the obligation, as when, even though the surety would have a right of reimbursement, it would be inequitable for the surety to be compelled to perform if the principal debtor can satisfy the obligation. • When a testator leaves a gift of property encumbered by a mortgage or lien, the doctrine of exoneration operates to satisfy the encumbrance from the general assets of the estate. Many states have abandoned the common-law rule in favor of exoneration. See EQUITY OF EXONERATION; QUIA TIMET. [Cases: Principal and Surety ↷ 179; Wills ↷ 736, 821.] exoneration, suit for. See SUIT FOR EXONERATION.

exoneratione sectae (eg-zon-ə-ray-shee-oh-nee sek-tee). [Latin] Hist. A writ that lay for the Crown’s ward, to be free from all suit during wardship.

exoneratione sectae ad curiam baron (eg-zon-ə-ray-shee-oh-nee sek-tee ad kyoor-ee-əm bar-ən). [Latin “by exoneration of the suit to the lord’s court”] Hist. A writ issued by the guardian of the Crown’s ward, forbidding the sheriff or steward of a particular court from distraining or taking other action against the ward.

exonerative fact. See FACT.

exonretur (eg-zon-ə-ree-tər). Hist. [Latin “let him be relieved or discharged”] A note, recorded on a bailpiece, of a court order to release a bail obligation after the court has sentenced the defendant to prison. Cf. BAILPIECE (1).

expectation, n. (16c) 1. The act of looking forward; anticipation. 2. A basis on which something is expected to happen; esp., the prospect of receiving wealth, honors, or the like.

"[E]xpectation does not in itself amount to intention. An operating surgeon may know very well that his patient will probably die of the operation; yet he does not intend the fatal consequence which he expects. He intends the recovery which he hopes for but does not expect." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 379-80 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

expectation damages. See DAMAGES.

expectation interest. See INTEREST (2).

expectation of life. See LIFE EXPECTANCY.

expectation of privacy. (1965) A belief in the existence of the right to be free of governmental intrusion in regard to a particular place or thing. • To suppress a search on privacy grounds, a defendant must show the existence of the expectation and that the expectation was reasonable. [Cases: Searches and Seizures ⇨26.]

expected/intended exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

expediente (ek-sped-ee-en-tee), n. [Spanish] Spanish law.

expression, freedom of. See FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION.

expressio unius est exclusio alterius (ek-spres[h]-ee-oh yoo-ni-əs est ek-skloo-zhee-oh al-tə-ri-əs). [Law Latin] A canon of construction holding that to express or include one thing implies the exclusion of the other, or of the alternative. • For example, the rule that “each citizen is entitled to vote” implies that noncitizens are not entitled to vote. — Also termed inclusio unius est exclusio alterius; expressum facit cessare tacitum. Cf. EJUSDEM GENERIS; NOSCITUR A SOCIIS; RULE OF RANK. [Cases: Contracts ⇨ 152; Statutes ⇨ 195.]

*Several Latin maxims masquerade as rules of interpretation while doing nothing more than describing results reached by other means. The best example is probably expressio unius est exclusio alterius, which is a rather elaborate, mysterious sounding, and anachronistic way of describing the negative implication. Far from being a rule, it is not even lexicographically accurate, because it is simply not true, generally, that the mere express conferral of a right or privilege in one kind of situation implies the denial of the equivalent right or privilege in other kinds. Sometimes it does and sometimes it does not, and whether it does or does not depends on the particular circumstances of context. Without contextual support, therefore, there is not even a mild presumption here. Accordingly, the maxim is at best a description, after the fact, of what the court has discovered from context." Reed Dickerson, The Interpretation and Application of Statutes 234-35 (1975).

"The canon expressio unius est exclusio alterius is . . . based on the assumption of legislative omniscience, because it would make sense only if all omissions in legislative drafting were deliberate. Although this canon seemed dead for a while, it has been resurrected by the Supreme Court to provide a basis for refusing to create private remedies for certain statutory violations. Its recent disparagement by a unanimous Court [in Herman & MacLean v. Huddleston, 459 U.S. 375, 386 n.23, 103 S.Ct. 683, 690 n. 23 (1983)] puts its future in some doubt but more likely confirms that judicial use of canons of construction is opportunistic." Richard A. Posner, The Federal Courts: Crisis and Reform 282 (1985).

"Where it is desired not only to rescind an action but to express very strong disapproval, legislative bodies have voted to rescind the objectionable action and expunge it from the record. When a record has been expunged, the chief legislative officer should cross out the words or draw a line around them in the original minutes and write across them the words, 'Expunged by order of the senate (or house),' giving the date of the order. This statement should be signed by the chief legislative officer. The word 'expunged' must not be so blotted as not to be readable, as otherwise it would be impossible to determine whether more was expunged than ordered. When the minutes are printed or published, the expunged portion is omitted." National Conference of State Legislatures, Mason's Manual of Legislative Procedure § 444, at 296-97 (2000).

expungement of record. (1966) The removal of a conviction (esp. for a first offense) from a person's criminal record. — Also termed expunction of record; erasure of record. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 1226(3).] expurgation (ek-spər-gay-shən), n. (15c) The act or practice of purging or cleansing, as by publishing a book without its obscene passages. — expurgate (eks-pər-gayt), vb. — expurgator (eks-pər-gay-tər), n.

extortion, n. (14c) 1. The offense committed by a public official who illegally obtains property under the color of office; esp., an official's collection of an unlawful fee. — Also termed common-law extortion. [Cases: Extortion and Threats ⇨ 1.]

"The dividing line between bribery and extortion is shadowy. If one other than the officer corruptly takes the initiative and offers what he knows is not an authorized fee, it is bribery and not extortion. On the other hand, if the officer corruptly makes an unlawful demand which is paid by one who does not realize it is not the fee authorized for the service rendered, it is extortion and not bribery. In theory it would seem possible for an officer to extort a bribe under such circumstances that he would be guilty of either offense whereas the outraged citizen would be excused." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 538 (3d ed. 1982).

2. The act or practice of obtaining something or compelling some action by illegal means, as by force or coercion. — Also termed statutory extortion. [Cases: Extortion and Threats ⇨ 25.1.] — extortionate, adj.

"The distinction traditionally drawn between robbery by intimidation and blackmail or extortion is that a person commits robbery when he threatens to do immediate bodily harm, whereas he commits blackmail or extortion when he threatens to do bodily harm in the future." James Lindgren, "Blackmail and Extortion," in 1 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 115, 115 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

extrinsic test. Copyright. A test for determining whether two ideas or works are substantially similar by listing and analyzing like and unlike elements. • The test may be applied and decided by the trier of law rather than the trier of fact. Cf. INTRINSIC TEST.

ex turpi causa (eks tər-pi kaw-zə). [Latin] From an immoral consideration. • This phrase, a shortened form of the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio ("from an immoral consideration an action does not arise"), expresses the principle that a party does not have a right to enforce performance of an agreement founded on a consideration that is contrary to the public interest. [Cases: Action ↻4; Contracts ↻138(1).]

"The doctrine ex turpi causa has made its way into the law as an extension of a moral principle. If it is misused, the principle suffers. Moreover, its misuse is a symptom of a disease of thought that debilitates the law and morals. This is the failure to recognize that there is a fundamental difference between the law that expresses a moral principle and the law that is only a social regulation. If only in the growth of English law that distinction had been maintained, much of the arbitrariness and the absurdities in the cases I have cited would have been avoided. There is a dictum of Lord Wright's which may some day be used as a foundation for a change of heart. Speaking of the maxim ex turpi causa, he said: 'In these days there are many statutory offences which are the subject of the criminal law and in that sense are crimes, but which would, it seems, afford no moral justification for a court to apply the maxim'. Beresford v. Royal Insurance (1937), 2 KB, at 220." Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 60 (1968).

exuere patriam (eg-z[y]oo-ə-ree pay-tree-əm), vb. [Latin] To renounce one's country or native allegiance; to expatriate oneself.

See ARTICLES OF THE EYRE; JUSTICE IN EYRE.

"In 1176 the itinerant justices were organised into six circuits . . . The justices assigned to these circuits, who numbered as many as twenty or thirty at a time in the 1180s, were known as justiciae errantes (later justiciarii in itinere, justices in eyre); and the French word 'eyre' became the name of one of the most prominent forms of royal justice until the time of Edward III. Every so often a 'general eyre' would visit a county, bringing the king's government with it. . . . The general eyres were not merely law courts; they were a way of supervising local government through itinerant central government." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 19 (3d ed. 1990).

eyrer (air-ər), vb. [Law French] (12c) Hist. To travel or journey; to go about.

F

F. 1. abbr. The first series of the Federal Reporter, which includes federal decisions (trial and appellate) from 1880 to 1924. 2. Hist. A letter branded on a felon who claimed benefit of clergy so that the felon could claim the benefit only once. • Additionally, those convicted for an affray (fray) or falsity were so branded.

"He that shall maliciously strike any person with a Weapon in Church or Churchyard, or draw any Weapon there with intent to strike, shall have one of his Ears cut off; and, if he have no Ears, then shall be marked on the Cheek with a hot Iron, having the Letter F, whereby he may be known for a Fray-maker or Fighter." Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

"F, Is a Letter wherewith Felons, &c. are branded and marked with an hot Iron, on their being admitted to the Benefit of Clergy." Giles Jacob, A New Law-Dictionary (8th ed. 1762).

F.2d. abbr. The second series of the Federal Reporter, which includes federal appellate decisions from 1924 to 1993.

F.3d. abbr. The third series of the Federal Reporter, which includes federal appellate decisions from 1993.

FAA. abbr. 1. FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION. 2. FEDERAL ARBITRATION ACT. 3. FREE OF ALL AVERAGE.

fabricare (fab-rə-kair-ee), vb. [Law Latin "to make"] Hist. 1. To make a coin lawfully or unlawfully. 2. To forge, esp. a bill of lading. • The term sometimes appeared in indictments: fabricavit et contrafecit ("[he] forged and counterfeited").

fabricate, vb. (15c) To invent, forge, or devise falsely. • To fabricate a story is to create a plausible version of events that is advantageous to the person relating those events. The term is softer than lie. See LIE (1).

fabricated evidence. See EVIDENCE.

fabricated fact. See fabricated evidence under EVIDENCE.

fabric land. See LAND.

fabula (fab-yə-lə). [Law Latin] Hist. A contract or covenant, esp. a nuptial contract.

FAC. abbr. Failure to answer a (traffic) citation. • In some jurisdictions, if someone fails to respond after receiving a ticket, the court notifies the relevant administrative agency, which records this information and suspends the defendant's driver's license until the FAC is vacated and any fines or fees are paid.

FACE. abbr. FREEDOM OF ACCESS TO CLINIC ENTRANCES ACT.

face, n. (13c) 1. The surface of anything, esp. the front, upper, or outer part <the face of a clock>. 2. By extension, the apparent or explicit part of a writing or record <the fraud must appear on the face of the record>. 3. The inscribed side of a document, instrument, or judgment <although the contract appeared valid on its face, the buyer did not have the legal capacity to enter into it>.

face amount. 1. PAR VALUE. 2. Insurance. The amount payable under an insurance policy. — Also termed face value; face amount insured by the policy; face of policy. [Cases: Insurance ⇨ 2037.]

face-amount certificate. See STOCK CERTIFICATE (1).

face-amount certificate company. See COMPANY.

face-amount certificate of the installment type. See face-amount certificate (1) under STOCK CERTIFICATE (1).

face amount insured by the policy. See FACE AMOUNT.

face of policy. See FACE AMOUNT.

face rate. See nominal rate under INTEREST RATE.

face value. 1. FACE AMOUNT. 2. PAR VALUE.

facial, adj. (19c) Apparent; of or relating to the face of things; prima facie .

facial attack. (1966) A challenge to the sufficiency of a complaint, such as a motion to dismiss in federal practice. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇨ 1742(1); Federal Courts ⇨ 32.]

facial challenge. See CHALLENGE (1).

facially sufficient, adj. (1972) (Of a document) appearing valid on its face. • A search-warrant affidavit's facial sufficiency will not protect it from attack if the affidavit is based on false testimony by the officer making the affidavit. See FRANKS HEARING.

facially void. See VOID.

facias (fay-shee-əs). [Law Latin] That you cause. • Facias is used in writs as an emphatic word. See FIERI FACIAS; LEVARI FACIAS; SCIRE FACIAS. It also appears in the phrase ut facias ("so that you do"). See DO UT FACIAS; FACIO UT DES; FACIO UT FACIAS.

facies (fay-shee-eez). (17c) [Latin] The outward appearance or surface of a thing.

facile (fas-əl), adj. (16c) Scots law. (Of a mentally deficient person) so susceptible to outside influence as to need legal protection (such as a guardian).

facilitate, vb. (17c) Criminal law. To make the commission of a crime easier. • Property (such as a vehicle or home) that facilitates the commission of certain offenses may be forfeited. — facilitator, n.

facilitated negotiation. See MEDIATION.

facilitation, n. (17c) 1. The act or an instance of aiding or helping; esp., in criminal law, the act of making it easier for another person to commit a crime. 2. CONCILIATION.

facility and circumvention. Scots law. Conduct intended to persuade a person vulnerable to outside influence to act against his or her own interest. • Any contract brought under conditions of facility and circumvention would be void. — Sometimes shortened to facility.

facility-of-payment clause. 1. Insurance. An insurance-policy provision allowing the appointment of a person to receive payment from the insurer on the beneficiary's behalf. [Cases: Insurance ↷ 3468.] 2. Trusts. A trust provision that allows anyone who owes money to an incapacitated trust beneficiary to discharge the debt by paying the money owed to the custodial trustee.

facio ut des (fay-shee-oh ət deez). [Latin "I do so that you give"] Civil law. 1. An innominate contract in which a person agrees to do something for recompense. See innominate contract under CONTRACT. 2. The consideration in such a contract.

facio ut facias (fay-shee-oh ət fay-shee-əs). [Latin "I do that you may do"] Civil law. 1. An innominate contract in which a person agrees to do something for another person who agrees to do something in return, such as an agreement to marry. 2. The consideration in such a contract. See innominate contract under CONTRACT.

"These valuable considerations are divided by the civilians into four species. . . . The second species is, facio, ut facias: as when I agree with a man to do his work for him, if he will do mine for me; or if two persons agree to marry together; or to do any positive acts on both sides. Or, it may be to forbear on one side in consideration of something done on the other; as, that in consideration A, the tenant, will repair his house, B, the landlord, will not sue him for waste." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 444 (1766).

facsimile (fak-sim-ə-lee). (17c) 1. An exact copy. 2. FAX.

facsimile signature. See SIGNATURE.

facsimile transmission. 1. See FAX (1). 2. See FAX (3).

fact. (15c) 1. Something that actually exists; an aspect of reality <it is a fact that all people are mortal>. • Facts include not just tangible things, actual occurrences, and relationships, but also states of mind such as intentions and opinions. 2. An actual or alleged event or circumstance, as distinguished from its legal effect, consequence, or interpretation <the jury made a finding of fact>. 3. An evil deed; a crime <an accessory after the fact>.

"A fact is any act or condition of things, assumed (for the moment) as happening or existing." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 7 (1935).

ablative fact. See divestitive fact.

adjudicative fact (ə-joo-di-kay-tiv or -kə-tiv). (1959) A controlling or operative fact, rather than a background fact; a fact that concerns the parties to a judicial or administrative proceeding and that helps the court or agency determine how the law applies to those parties. • For example, adjudicative facts include those that the jury weighs. Cf. legislative fact. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure ↷ 442.]

alienative fact (ay-lee-ə-nay-tiv or ay-lee-ə-nə-tiv). A fact that divests a person of a right by transferring it to another.

ancient fact. A fact about a person, thing, or event that existed or occurred a very long time ago, and about which no living person has firsthand knowledge. — Also termed fact in pais.

collateral fact. A fact not directly connected to the issue in dispute, esp. because it involves a different transaction from the one at issue. [Cases: Evidence ↷ 99.]

collative fact. See investitive fact.

denotative fact (dee-noh-tay-tiv or di-noh-tə-tiv). A fact relevant to the use of a nonlegal term in a legal rule.

destitutive fact. See divestitive fact.

dispositive fact (dis-poz-ə-tiv). (1946) 1. A fact that confers rights or causes the loss of rights. • A dispositive fact may be either an investitive or a divestitive fact. — Also termed vestitive fact (ves-tə-tiv). 2. A fact that is decisive of a legal matter; evidence that definitively resolves a legal issue or controversy. See DISPOSITION.

divestitive fact (di-ves-tə-tiv or di-). (1973) A fact that causes the loss of rights; an act or event modifying or extinguishing a legal relation. — Also termed extinctive fact; destitutive fact; ablative fact.

elemental fact. See ultimate fact.

evaluative fact. (1986) A fact used to assess an action as being reasonable or negligent.

evidentiary fact (ev-i-den-shə-ree) (1855) 1. A fact that is necessary for or leads to the determination of an ultimate fact. — Also termed predicate fact. 2. A fact that furnishes evidence of the existence of some other fact. — Also termed evidential fact. 3. See fact in evidence.

exonerative fact (eg-zon-ər-ə-tiv or -ay-tiv). (1980) A divestitive fact that extinguishes a duty.

extinctive fact. See divestitive fact.

fabricated fact. See fabricated evidence under EVIDENCE.

fact in evidence. (18c) A fact that a tribunal considers in reaching a conclusion; a fact that has been admitted into evidence in a trial or hearing. — Also written fact-in-evidence. — Also termed evidentiary fact.

"A fact-in-evidence, or, briefly, evidence, signifies any facts considered by the tribunal as data to persuade them to reach a reasoned belief upon a probandum. This process of thought by which the tribunal reasons from fact to probandum is termed inference." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 7 (1935).

fact in issue. (usu. pl.) (17c) 1. Hist. A fact that one party alleges and that the other controverts. 2. A fact to be determined by a fact-finder; PROBANDUM. — Also written fact-in-issue. — Also termed principal fact.

"A fact-in-issue is a fact as to the correctness of which the tribunal, under the law of the case, must be persuaded; the term 'probandum' (thing to be proved) will here be used as the convenient single word." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 7 (1935).

fact in pais. See ancient fact.

fact material to risk. Insurance. A fact that may increase the risk and that, if disclosed, might induce the insurer either to decline to insure or to require a higher premium. [Cases: Insurance ↻2958, 2963.]

foundational fact. See predicate fact.

immaterial fact. A fact that is not relevant to a matter in issue.

impositive fact. An investitive fact that imposes duties.

inferential fact. (1858) A fact established by conclusions drawn from other evidence rather than from direct testimony or evidence; a fact derived logically from other facts. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻559; Evidence ↻595.]

investitive fact (in-ves-tə-tiv). (1939) A fact that confers rights. — Also termed collative fact (kə-lay-tiv).

judicial fact. (1862) See judicially noticed fact.

judicially noticed fact. A fact that is not established by admissible evidence but may be accepted by the court because the fact is generally known within the trial court's territorial jurisdiction, or because its validity can be determined from sources whose accuracy cannot be reasonably questioned. See Fed. R. Evid. 201(b). — Also termed judicial fact. See JUDICIAL NOTICE. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻304; Evidence ↻1.]

jurisdictional fact. (usu. pl.) (1837) A fact that must exist for a court to properly exercise its jurisdiction over a case, party, or thing. See JURISDICTIONAL-FACT DOCTRINE.

legal fact. (18c) A fact that triggers a particular legal consequence.

legislative fact. (1828) A fact that explains a particular law's rationality and that helps a court or agency determine the law's content and application. • Legislative facts are not ordinarily specific to the parties in a proceeding. Cf. adjudicative fact.

"[L]egislative fact includes matters needed to construe statutes or regulations, and factual assumptions a court makes when called upon to 'legislate.' Examples of the latter might include the fact that spouses will communicate less if they are not granted a privilege covering their confidences, or that marital harmony will be strained if spouses can be compelled to testify against each other — facts which might be useful in helping a court decide whether to create or continue a common-law marital privilege . . . Obviously, legislative facts of this nature do not and cannot meet the indisputability criterion of the Rule [Fed. R. Evid. 201], nor are they required to." Paul F. Rothstein, The Federal Rules of Evidence 35-36 (3d ed. 2003).

material fact. (1848) A fact that is significant or essential to the issue or matter at hand. [Cases: Evidence ↻143; Federal Civil Procedure ↻2470.1; Judgment ↻181(2).] minor fact. A subordinate fact or circumstance.

operative fact. (1857) 1. A fact that affects an existing legal relation, esp. a legal claim. • When applying the hearsay rule, this term distinguishes between out-of-court statements that are operative facts (e.g., a party's saying "I agree to reimburse you" in a case for breach of oral contract), and hearsay, out-of-court statements that only relate to operative facts (e.g., "Joel told me Mike said he would reimburse me"). [Cases: Evidence ↻267.] 2. A fact that constitutes the transaction or event on which a claim or defense is based.

physical fact. (1857) A fact having a physical existence, such as a fingerprint left at a crime scene.

predicate fact (pred-ə-kit). (1899) 1. A fact from which a presumption or inference arises. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻305.1; Evidence ↻53.] 2. A fact necessary to the operation of an evidentiary rule. • For example, there must actually be a conspiracy for the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule to apply. — Also termed foundational fact; evidentiary fact. [Cases: Evidence ↻53.]

presumed fact. A fact whose existence can be justifiably inferred from facts established by evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ↻305; Evidence ↻53.]

primary fact. (18c) A fact that can be established by direct testimony and from which inferences are made leading to ultimate facts. See ultimate fact.

principal fact. 1. See fact in issue. 2. See ultimate fact.

private fact. (16c) A fact that has not been made public. • Whether a fact is private often arises in invasion-of-privacy claims. Cf. public fact.

probative fact (proh-bə-tiv). (1858) A fact in evidence used to prove an ultimate fact, such as skid marks used to show speed as a predicate to a finding of negligence.

psychological fact. A fact that is related to mental state, such as motive or knowledge.

public fact. (1955) For the purpose of an invasion-of-privacy claim, a fact that is in a public record or in the public domain. Cf. private fact. [Cases: Torts ↻357.]

relative fact. A fact incidental to another fact; a minor fact.

simulated fact. (1943) A fabricated fact intended to mislead; a lie.

translative fact (trans- or tranz-lay-tiv). A fact by means of which a right is transferred from one person to another; a fact that fulfills the double function of terminating one person's right to an object and of originating another's right to it.

transvestitive fact. A fact that is simultaneously investitive and divestitive.

"When a person transfers the rights he has to another, the transfer divests him of the potestas, and invests that other with it. This is quite distinct from the creation or extinction of the potestas. A new descriptive term is wanted, and after the analogy of the other words, 'transvestitive' has been coined for the purpose." W.A. Hunter, A Systematic and Historical Exposition of Roman Law 141 (4th ed. 1902).

ultimate fact. (18c) A fact essential to the claim or the defense. — Also termed elemental fact; principal fact.

undisputed fact. (18c) An uncontested or admitted fact.

vestitive fact. See dispositive fact (1).

facta (fak-tə). [Latin] pl. FACTUM.

fact-finder. (1926) One or more persons — such as jurors in a trial or administrative-law judges in a hearing — who hear testimony and review evidence to rule on a factual issue. — Also termed finder of fact; fact-trier or trier of fact (in a judicial proceeding); fact-finding board (for a group or committee). See FINDING OF FACT.

fact-finding. (1909) 1. The process of taking evidence to determine the truth about a disputed point of fact. 2. Int'l law. The gathering of information for purposes of international relations, including the peaceful settlement of disputes and the supervision of international agreements. • Examples of fact-finding include legislative tours to acquire information needed for making decisions at an international level. — Also termed inquiry.

"[F]act-finding must be as impartial and as fair to the parties as procedural and evidentiary rules can render it without making the inquiry's task impossible, not merely for ethical reasons, but in order to maximize the credibility and impact of the facts found. To this end, fact-finders must develop procedures that sharply distinguish them from those bodies that assemble prosecutorial evidence." Thomas M. Franck & H. Scott Fairley, Procedural Due Process in Human Rights Fact-Finding by International Agencies, 74 Am. J. Int'l L. 308, 310 (1980).

3. A method of alternative dispute resolution in which an impartial third party determines and studies the facts and positions of disputing parties that have reached an impasse, with a view toward clarifying the issues and helping the parties work through their dispute.

fact-finding board. See FACT-FINDER.

fact interrogatory. See identification interrogatory under INTERROGATORY.

faction. (16c) A number of citizens, whether a majority or a minority, who are united and motivated by a common impulse or interest that is adverse to the rights of others or to the permanent or aggregate interests of the community. • This definition is adapted from The Federalist, No. 10.

factio testamenti (fak-shee-oh tes-tə-men-ti). See TESTAMENTI FACTIO.

fact issue. See issue of fact under ISSUE (1).

facto (fak-toh), adj. In or by the fact. See DE FACTO; IPSO FACTO.

facto et animo (fak-toh et an-ə-moh). [Latin] In fact and intent <taking possession facto et animo>.

factor, n. (15c) 1. An agent or cause that contributes to a particular result <punishment was a factor in the court's decision>. 2. An agent who is employed to sell property for the principal and who possesses or controls the property; a person who receives and sells goods for a commission . • A factor differs from a broker because the factor possesses or controls the property. — Also termed commission merchant; del credere bailiff. Cf. BROKER. [Cases: Factors ⇨ 1.]

"A factor by the rules of common law and of mercantile usage is an agent to whom goods are consigned for the purpose of sale, and he has possession of the goods, power to sell them in his own name, and a general discretion as to their sale. He may sell them on the usual terms of credit, may receive the price, and give a good discharge to the buyer." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 523 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

3. One who buys accounts receivable at a discount <the company sold its receivables to a factor at only 5% of their stated value>. [Cases: Factors ⇨ 1, 5.] 4. A garnishee <the factor held $400 of the debtor's property when the writ of garnishment was served>. [Cases: Garnishment ⇨ 13–24.] 5. A person in charge of managing property, esp. real property.

judicial factor. Scots law. An administrator or factor specially appointed by the Court of Session to manage an estate.

forage. (17c) 1. The compensation paid to a factor for his or her services. [Cases: Factors ⇨ 44.] 2. The business of a factor. [Cases: Factors ⇨ 1, 5.]

factoring, n. The buying of accounts receivable at a discount. • The price is discounted because the factor (who buys them) assumes the risk of delay in collection and loss on the accounts receivable. [Cases: Factors ⇨ 1, 5, 10.]

factorize (fak-tə-rīz), vb. (19c) 1. GARNISH (2). 2. GARNISH (3). — factorization, n.

factoring process. (1837) A procedure or legal process by which a third party, rather than the creditor, attaches a debtor's property; GARNISHMENT. — Also termed trustee process; process by foreign attachment. [Cases: Garnishment ⇨ 1.]

"In Vermont and Connecticut, the [garnishee] is also sometimes called the factor, and the process [of garnishing], factoring process." Charles D. Drake, A Treatise on the Law of Suits by Attachment in the United States § 451, at 386 (7th ed. 1891).

factor's act. A statute protecting one who buys goods from a factor or agent by creating the presumption that the agent was acting on the owner's behalf and with the owner's approval. [Cases: Factors ⇨ 58.]

factor's lien. See LIEN.

factory act. A statute that regulates workers' hours, health, and safety. See FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT.

fact pleading. See code pleading under PLEADING (2).

fact question. See QUESTION OF FACT.

fact-trier. See FACT-FINDER.

factual cause. See but-for cause under CAUSE (1).

factual impossibility. See IMPOSSIBILITY.

factual presumption. See presumption of fact under PRESUMPTION.

factum (fak-təm), n. [Latin] (18c) 1. A fact, such as a person's physical presence in a new domicile. 2. An act or deed, such as the due execution of a will. • Over time, factum in this sense came to mean "charter" — that is, the act or deed of conveying land, reduced to written form. See fraud in the factum under FRAUD.

"[I]t is only a short step to holding as a matter of law that a 'deed' — and by a deed (fer, factum) men are beginning to mean a sealed piece of parchment — has an operative force of its own which intentions expressed, never so plainly, in other ways have not. The sealing and delivering of the parchment is the contractual act. Further, what is done by 'deed' can only be undone by 'deed.'" 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 220 (2d ed. 1899).

factum imprestable (fak-təm im-pres-tay-bə-lee). [Law Latin] Hist. An act that cannot be performed; an impossibility.

factum juridicum (fak-təm juu-rid-i-kəm). [Latin] A juridical fact.

factum probandum (fak-təm prə-ban-dəm). [Latin] A fact to be proved.

factum probans (fak-təm proh-banz). [Latin] A probative or evidentiary fact; a subsidiary fact tending to prove a principal fact in issue.

factum proprium et recens (fak-təm proh-pree-əm et rec-senz). [Law Latin] Hist. One's own act recently performed.

3. A statement of facts. 4. BRIEF (1). Pl. facta.

factum of a will. The formal ceremony of making a will; a will's execution by the testator and attestation by the witnesses.

fact work product. See WORK PRODUCT.

facultative certificate (fak-əl-tay-tiv). Insurance. A contract of reinsurance separately negotiated to cover risks under a single insurance policy. • Facultative reinsurance allows the reinsurer the "faculty" of assessing and possibly rejecting a particular risk (esp. if underwriting information is inadequate). [Cases: Insurance ↻3605.]

facultative reinsurance. See REINSURANCE.

faculties. (16c) Hist. Eccles. law. 1. An authorization granted to a person to do what otherwise would not be allowed. 2. The extent of a husband's estate; esp., the ability to pay alimony. See ALLEGATION OF FACULTIES.

Faculties, Court of. See COURT OF FACULTIES.

Faculties, Master of the. See MASTER OF THE FACULTIES.

Faculty of Advocates. Scots law. The society comprising the members of the Scottish bar. • Unlike the English bar, the advocates do not have chambers, but all share the facilities of Advocates' Library in Parliament House.

faderfium (fah-thər-fee-əm). Hist. A marriage gift to the bride from her father or brother.

faeder-feoh (fah-thər-fee). Hist. Property brought by a wife to her husband at marriage. • If the husband died, the property reverted to the widow if the heir of the deceased husband refused consent to her second marriage. The property reverted to the widow's family if she returned to them.

faggot. Hist. 1. A piece of firewood used to burn a heretic alive. 2. An embroidered figure of a faggot, required to be worn by heretics who had recanted.

fail, n. A transaction between securities brokers in which delivery and payment do not occur at the prescribed time, usu. on the settlement date. — Also termed fail contract.

fail to deliver. The nondelivery of securities from a selling broker to a buying broker by the settlement date.

fail to receive. The failure of a buying broker to receive delivery of securities from the selling broker by the settlement date.

fail, vb. (13c) 1. To be deficient or unsuccessful; to fall short <they failed to settle the dispute>. 2. To become insolvent or bankrupt <two banks failed last week>. 3. To lapse <the bequest failed as a result of ademption>.

fail contract. See FAIL.

failed devise. See lapsed devise under DEVISE.

failed gift. 1. See lapsed devise under DEVISE. 2. See lapsed legacy under LEGACY.

failed legacy. See lapsed legacy under LEGACY.

failing circumstances. See INSOLVENCY.

failing-company doctrine. Antitrust. The rule that allows an otherwise proscribed merger or acquisition between competitors when one is bankrupt or near failure. 15 USCA §§ 12–27. — Also termed failing-firm defense. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↻910.]

"The 1992 guidelines provide a limited defense for failing firms and failing divisions of firms. The defense is available if impending failure would cause the assets of one party to leave the market if the merger does not occur. Thus to establish a failing firm defense, the parties must show that the failing firm cannot (1) meet its financial obligations, (2) reorganize in bankruptcy, and (3) find another buyer whose purchase of the firm would pose lesser anticompetitive risks. The parties must further show that (4) without the merger, the failing firm's assets will exit the market." Ernest Gellhorn & William E. Kovacic, Antitrust Law and Economics in a Nutshell 398–99 (4th ed. 1994).

fail position. A situation existing when, after all transactions in a security have been netted out, a broker owes another broker more securities than it has coming in from other firms.

failure. (17c) 1. Deficiency; lack; want. 2. An omission of an expected action, occurrence, or performance. See LAPSE (2).

failure of a condition. The nonoccurrence of an event that has been made a condition of the contract. • The usual result is that one or both of the parties do not have to perform because of the failure of the condition.

failure of consideration. See FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

failure of good behavior. A civil servant's act that is ground for removal. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ↷69.7.]

failure of issue. See FAILURE OF ISSUE.

failure of justice. See MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE.

failure of proof. A party's not having produced evidence establishing a fact essential to a claim or defense.

failure of title. A seller's inability to establish a good claim to the property contracted for sale. Cf. clear title under TITLE (2). [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ↷129(1).]

failure of trust. The invalidity of a trust because the instrument creating it has a defect or because of its illegality or other legal impediment. [Cases: Trusts ↷68.]

failure of will. The invalidity of a will that was not executed with necessary statutory formalities.

failure otherwise than on the merits. The defeat of a plaintiff's claim by a procedural device without a decision on the existence of the claim's elements.

failure to bargain collectively. An employer's refusal to discuss labor issues with a union. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷1479.]

failure to claim. Patents. A finding by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office or by a court that a patent applicant or patentee has forfeited the right to broader protection by not seeking protection for some disclosed subject matter. • Any art outside the explicit claims, including foreseeable alteration of the claimed structure, is considered dedicated to the public domain.

failure to make delivery. Nondelivery or misdelivery.

failure to meet obligations. 1. See BANKRUPTCY (4). 2. See INSOLVENCY.

failure to perform. A party's not meeting its obligations under a contract. See CONTRACT (4). [Cases: Contracts ↷261(1), 312(1), 315.]

failure to state a cause of action. A plaintiff's not having alleged facts in the complaint sufficient to maintain a claim. • This failure warrants dismissal of the complaint. [Cases: Pleading ↷48; Pretrial Procedure ↷622.]

failure to testify. A party's — esp. a criminal defendant's — decision not to testify. • Under the Fifth Amendment, the prosecutor and the judge cannot comment to the jury on a criminal defendant's failure to testify. But comments on the failure are usu. permissible in a civil case. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷2129; Evidence ↷76; Witnesses ↷88.]

failure of consideration. (1803) A seriously deficient contractual performance that causes a contract's basis or inducement to cease to exist or to become worthless. • Scholars disapprove of this term as misleading, since failure of performance is more accurate. Unlike consideration, the phrase failure of consideration relates not to the formation of a contract but to its performance. See CONSIDERATION (1). Cf. WANT OF CONSIDERATION. [Cases: Contracts ↷83, 260, 309(1).]

"An illustration will help indicate how the term is used. If C promises to build a structure for O and O promises to make payment when the work is completed, it is clear that there is consideration on both sides of this contract and that therefore a contract was formed upon the exchange of promises. If C fails to perform, the result is sometimes described as a 'failure of consideration.' 'Failure of consideration' simply means a failure to perform and as used covers both a material breach of constructive conditions and a failure to perform an express condition. The use of the term 'failure of consideration' in this sense appears to be an unnecessary invitation to confusion because the word consideration is being used in two different senses. Fortunately, the use of this phrase has gradually fallen into disuse. It is, however, still sufficiently widespread to be mentioned here. This volume nowhere utilizes 'failure of consideration' as an operative concept." John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 11-21, at 474-75 (3d ed. 1987).

partial failure of consideration. (1808) A party's incomplete performance of a contract with multiple, severable performances, so that if some of the performances are not accomplished, the appropriate part of the agreement can be apportioned to whatever has been completed. [Cases: Contracts ↷86, 260.]

total failure of consideration. (1809) A situation in which the contract is indivisible so that a complete lack of consideration voids the contract. [Cases: Contracts ↷85, 260.]

failure of good behavior. See FAILURE.

failure of issue. (17c) Archaic. The fact of a person's dying when the person has no surviving children or other descendants who are eligible to inherit the person's estate. — Also termed dying without issue; definite failure of issue; default of issue. See ISSUE (3). [Cases: Descent and Distribution ↷14-16.]

"There has been considerable litigation during the past several centuries over the meaning of a gift to 'A and his heirs, but if A shall die without issue, to B and his heirs.' First of all, what does 'die without issue' mean? The answer appears simple — you look to the time of A's death to determine whether or not he has any children or grandchildren. But that is not the way the English courts originally construed this language. The English adopted the so-called 'indefinite failure of issue' construction — if at any time in the future A's line of descent should come to an end, then there was a gift over to B and his heirs. The effect of this was a fee tail in A and a remainder in B. This seems a distortion of the language, and particularly unsuited to American circumstances since the fee tail never found a real home here. Most of our jurisdictions, by judicial decision or statute, adopted the so-called 'definite failure of issue' construction — you look to the date of A's death to determine whether he has issue, and to that time alone. If A has issue at that time, then the gift over to B fails. This seems to be the literal meaning of the words, and it is the only sensible conclusion in a system where the fee tail is virtually a dead letter. The English also struck down the constructional preference for indefinite failure by statute in the nineteenth century." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 236–37 (2d ed. 1984).

indefinite failure of issue. (18c) A failure of issue whenever it happens, without any certain period within which it must happen. [Cases: Wills ⇨ 606.]

failure of justice. See MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE.

failure of proof. See FAILURE.

failure-of-proof defense. (1982) The defense that a party's proof does not establish a fact essential to a claim or defense.

failure of record. Hist. In a trial by record, a party's inability to produce the record and thereby prove a pleading; an absence of proof to support a party's pleading. • The other party was entitled to summary judgment. See trial by record under TRIAL.

failure of title. See FAILURE.

failure of trust. See FAILURE.

failure of will. See FAILURE.

failure otherwise than on the merits. See FAILURE.

failure to bargain collectively. See FAILURE.

failure to claim. See FAILURE.

failure-to-disclose-best-mode rejection. See REJECTION.

failure to make delivery. See FAILURE.

failure to meet obligations. 1. See BANKRUPTCY (4). 2. See INSOLVENCY.

failure to perform. See FAILURE.

failure-to-perform exclusion. See EXCLUSION (3).

failure to protect. Family law. The refusal or inability of a parent or guardian to prevent abuse of a child under his or her care. [Cases: Infants ⇨ 156, 179.]

failure to state a cause of action. See FAILURE.

failure-to-supervise statute. See PARENTAL-LIABILITY STATUTE.

failure to testify. See FAILURE.

failure to thrive. (1967) Family law. 1. A medical and psychological condition in which a child's height, weight, and motor development fall significantly below average growth rates. • Failure to thrive is sometimes asserted as a ground for alleging abuse or neglect by a parent or caregiver. 2. A condition, occurring during the first three years of a child's life, in which the child suffers marked retardation or ceases to grow. — Abbr. FTT.

faint action. See FEIGNED ACTION.

faint pleader. (17c) A false, fraudulent, or collusive manner of pleading.

fair, adj. (bef. 12c) 1. Impartial; just; equitable; disinterested <everyone thought that Judge Jones was fair>. 2. Free of bias or prejudice <in jury selection, the lawyers tried to select a fair and impartial jury>.

fair, n. (13c) Hist. A privileged market for the buying and selling of goods. • A fair was an incorporeal hereditament granted to a town by royal patent or franchise or established by prescription. The franchise to hold a fair conferred important privileges, and a fair, as a legally recognized institution, possessed distinctive legal characteristics, most of which are now obsolete. Cf. market overt under MARKET.

fair-and-equitable requirement. (17c) Bankruptcy. A Bankruptcy Code standard requiring a forced, non-consensual Chapter 11 plan (a "cramdown" plan) to provide adequately for each class of interests that has not accepted the plan. • In determining whether a cramdown plan is fair and equitable and thus can be confirmed, a bankruptcy court must apply the Code's detailed statutory criteria, consider the plan as a whole, and weigh all the circumstances surrounding the treatment of each impaired class of interests. In addition to the fair-and-equitable requirement, the Chapter 11 cramdown plan must (1) be accepted by at least one impaired class of claims, and (2) not discriminate unfairly among impaired classes that have not accepted the plan. 11 USCA § 1129(b). See CRAMDOWN. [Cases: Bankruptcy ⇨ 3563.] fair and impartial jury. See impartial jury under JURY.

fair and impartial trial. See FAIR TRIAL.

fair and proper legal assessment. See EQUALIZATION (2).

fair and reasonable value. See fair market value under VALUE (2).

fair and valuable consideration. See fair consideration (1) under CONSIDERATION (1).

fair averaging. The process of assessing taxes by using the average of the amount and price of goods acquired over a 12-month period rather than the amount and price at a particular time of the year.

fair cash market value. See fair market value under VALUE (2).

fair cash value. See fair market value under VALUE (2).

fair comment. (18c) A statement based on the writer's or speaker's honest opinion about a matter of public concern. • Fair comment is a defense to libel or slander. [Cases: Libel and Slander ⇨ 48(1).]

fair competition. See COMPETITION.

fair consideration. See CONSIDERATION (1).

Fair Credit Billing Act. A federal law that facilitates the correction of billing errors by credit-card companies and makes those companies more responsible for the quality of goods purchased by cardholders. 15 USCA §§ 1666–1666j. [Cases: Consumer Credit ⇨ 37.]

fair-credit-reporting act. (1971) A federal or state law that regulates disclosure and use of consumer-credit information and ensures the right of consumers to have access to and to correct their credit reports. • The federal Fair Credit Reporting Act was enacted in 1970. 15 USCA §§ 1681–1681u. — Abbr. FCRA. [Cases: Credit Reporting Agencies ↷1–4.]

fair-cross-section requirement. (1975) Constitutional law. The principle that a person's right to an impartial jury, guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment, includes a requirement that the pool of potential jurors fairly represent the composition of the jurisdiction's population. • The pool of potential jurors need not precisely match the composition of the jurisdiction. But the representation of each group must be fair — no group should be systematically excluded or underrepresented. A minimal disparity in a particular group's representation, such as an absolute disparity of 10%, will not ordinarily violate this principle unless some aggravating factor exists. See DUREN TEST; ABSOLUTE DISPARITY; COMPARATIVE DISPARITY; STATISTICAL-DECISION THEORY. [Cases: Jury ↷33(1.1).]

fair dealing, n. (17c) 1. The conduct of business with full disclosure, usu. by a corporate officer with the corporation. [Cases: Corporations ↷314, 316.] 2. A fiduciary's transacting of business so that, although the fiduciary might derive a personal benefit, all interested persons are fully apprised of that potential and of all other material information about the transaction. Cf. SELF-DEALING. 3. Canadian law. FAIR USE.

Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. A federal statute that regulates debt-collection practices, and defines the rights of consumers who are contacted by debt collectors. 15 USCA §§ 1692–1692p. — Abbr. FDCPA. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷210.]

fair hearing. See HEARING.

Fair Labor Standards Act. A federal law, enacted in 1938, that regulates minimum wages, overtime pay, and the employment of minors. 29 USCA §§ 201–219. — Abbr. FLSA. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷2217(2).]

fairly-debatable rule. 1. Insurance. In some states, a test that requires an insurer to have a plausible basis for denying a claim to avoid bad-faith liability. [Cases: Insurance ↷3336.] 2. Zoning. A doctrine that bars a court from interfering with a zoning decision that is supported by substantial evidence, although it is one on which reasonable minds can differ. • A court will not interfere with a decision supported by substantial evidence. [Cases: Zoning and Planning ↷602, 605, 703.] fair market price. See fair market value under VALUE (2).

fair market value. See VALUE (2).

fairness doctrine. (1965) Hist. A federal law, based on an FCC rule, requiring the broadcast media to furnish a reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance. • The FCC abandoned the fairness doctrine in 1987. — Also termed equal-time doctrine. Cf. EQUAL TIME ACT. [Cases: Telecommunications ↷1153(2).]

fair notice. See NOTICE.

fair on its face. (18c) (Of a document) having the appearance of being regular or legal and not capable of being shown to be defective without extraneous evidence.

fair persuasion. See PERSUASION.

fair play. Equity, candor, and fidelity in dealings with another.

fair play and substantial justice. (1945) The fairness requirement that a court must meet in its assertion of personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant to comport with due process. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154 (1945). See MINIMUM CONTACTS. [Cases: Constitutional Law ↷3964.]

fair preponderance of the evidence. See PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE.

fair presentation. 1. Commercial law. A materially accurate disclosure of a company's financial condition, achieved by selecting and using appropriate accounting policies, reasonably reflecting transactions that underlie the financial data, and making any additional necessary disclosures. 2. Criminal law. The requirement that an applicant for a writ of habeas corpus in a state's custody must show (1) he or she has exhausted all available remedies in the state courts, (2) the state has offered no corrective process, or (3) circumstances exist that render a state's corrective process insufficient to protect the applicant's rights. [Cases: Habeas Corpus ↷380.]

fair rate of return. See RATE OF RETURN.

fair-report privilege. (1980) A defense to liability for publishing defamatory matter from a report of an official or judicial proceeding, when the report is a full, fair, and accurate account of the proceeding. [Cases: Libel and Slander ↷39, 42.]

fair representation. Labor law. Union representation that adequately covers all union members in collective bargaining and in the lodging of grievances. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷1208, 1209.] fair return on investment. See RETURN.

fair sale. See SALE.

fair-share membership. See FINANCIAL-CORE MEMBERSHIP.

fair trade, n. Commerce conducted under a fair-trade agreement.

fair-trade agreement. (1937) A commercial agreement that a seller will sell all of a producer's goods at or above a specified minimum price. • Fair-trade agreements were valid until 1975, when the Consumer Goods Pricing Act made them illegal. 15 USCA §§ 1, 45.

fair-trade law. A state statute that protects and enforces fair-trade agreements. • At one time, many states had fair-trade laws. But when applied to interstate commerce, the laws may violate the Sherman Antitrust Act, so most states have repealed them.

fair trial. (17c) A trial by an impartial and disinterested tribunal in accordance with regular procedures; esp., a criminal trial in which the defendant's constitutional and legal rights are respected. — Also termed fair and impartial trial.

fair use. (1869) Copyright. A reasonable and limited use of a copyrighted work without the author's permission, such as quoting from a book in a book review or using parts of it in a parody. • Fair use is a defense to an infringement claim, depending on the following statutory factors: (1) the purpose and character of the use, (2) the nature of the copyrighted work, (3) the amount of the work used, and (4) the economic impact of the use. 17 USCA § 107. — Also termed (in Canadian law) fair dealing. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⇨ 53.2.]

"[Fair use is] the most troublesome [problem] in the whole law of copyright." Dellar v. Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., 104 F.2d 661, 662 (2d Cir. 1939) (per curiam).

"Fair use is a judicial safety valve, empowering courts to excuse certain quotations or copies of copyrighted material even though the literal terms of the Copyright Act prohibit them." Paul Goldstein, Copyright's Highway 84 (1994).

fair value. See fair market value under VALUE (2).

fair-value accounting method. See ACCOUNTING METHOD.

fair-value law. A statute allowing a credit against a deficiency for the amount that the fair market value of land exceeds the price at foreclosure. — Also termed fair-value legislation. [Cases: Mortgages ⇨ 559(7), 561.7.]

fair warning. (1931) Criminal law. The requirement that a criminal statute define an offense with enough precision so that a reasonable person can know what conduct is prohibited and so that a reasonably skilled lawyer can predict what conduct falls within the statute's scope. — Also termed fair notice. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇨ 13.1.]

fair wear and tear. See WEAR AND TEAR.

fait (fay or fe). [Law French fr. Latin factum] Anything done; an act or deed. • The term fait accompli (fay or fe tə-kom-plee), meaning "a deed accomplished," which is not merely legal, is related to this word.

fait enrole (fay or fe ton-rohl). [Law French] Hist. An enrolled deed of a sale of a freehold estate.

faith and trust. See FLIM FLAM.

Faithfully Executed Clause. (1967) The clause of the U.S. Constitution providing that the President must take care that the laws are carried out faithfully. U.S. Const. art. II, § 3. [Cases: United States ⇨ 26.]

faith-healing exemption. Family law. In a child-abuse or child-neglect statute, a provision that a parent who provides a child with faith healing (in place of standard medical treatment) will not, for that reason alone, be charged with abuse or neglect. • Nearly all states have enacted some form of faith-healing exemption. But the statutes differ greatly. For example, they differ on whether the exemption is available as a defense to manslaughter or murder charges brought against a parent whose child dies as a result of the parent's having refused to consent to medical treatment. — Also termed religious-exemption statute; spiritual-treatment exemption. Cf. medical neglect under NEGLECT.

fake, n. (19c) Something that is not what it purports to be. See FORGERY (2); IMPOSTOR.

fake, vb. (19c) To make or construct falsely. See COUNTERFEIT.

Falcidian law (fal-sid-ee-ən). (17c) Roman law. A law prescribing that one could give no more than three-fourths of one's property in legacies and that the heirs should receive at least one-fourth (the Falcidian portion). • If the testator violated this law, the heir had the right to deduct proportionally from each legatee as necessary. The law, proposed by the Roman tribune Falcidius, was enacted in 40 B.C. — Also termed lex Falcidia. See LEGITIME.

"A large number of small legacies might [either] leave nothing for the heir . . . [or] make his part so small as to seem valueless in his eyes. But a Falcidian law, passed in the year 40 B.C., put an end to the whole difficulty. This law secured to the heir a quarter of the net value of the estate; the legatees could obtain only three-quarters: if the legatees named in the will amounted to more than this, they were diminished by proportional reductions. . . . Few measures have accomplished their purpose more satisfactorily than the Falcidian law, which remained in force through the history of the empire, and holds an important place in the system of Justinian." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 321-22 (1881).

Falcidian portion. Roman law. The one-fourth part of an estate that one or more instituted heirs are entitled to retain. La. Civ. Code art. 1494. — Also termed quarta Falcidiana. See forced heir under HEIR; LEGITIME. Cf. QUARTA TREBELLIANICA.

Falconer error. A trial court's failure to instruct the jury that a guilty finding on a manslaughter charge requires acquittal on a murder charge. Falconer v. Lane, 905 F.2d 1129 (7th Cir. 1990).

faldage (fahl-dij), n. Hist. 1. A landowner's right to require tenants to graze their sheep in designated temporary folds so that the manure will fertilize the field. — Also termed foldage; fold soc. 2. A sum of money paid to the landowner by a sheep-owning tenant in lieu of keeping the animals in the landowner's temporary fold. — Also termed faldfee.

faldfee (fahld-fee), n. Hist. See FALDAGE (2).

faldworth (fahld-wərth), n. Hist. A person who resides in a rural community where everyone above a certain age is responsible for the good conduct of all other members of the community and has reached that age of responsibility. • This was part of the frankpledge system. See DECENARY; FRANKPLEDGE.

fallacy. Any unsound, and usu. deceptive, argument or inference. • Both "formal" and "material" fallacies occur in a variety of recognized categories, knowledge of which is fundamental in the analysis of the validity of legal reasoning employed in any legal argument, esp. in judicial opinions. The presence of a fallacy in a legal argument is a defect — often fatal and usu. deceptive — in the legal reasoning.

formal fallacy. A fallacy involving flaws in the form of the argument, such as a violation of the formal rules of syllogistic reasoning.

material fallacy. A fallacy involving flaws in the factual content of a logical argument.

fallo (fahl-yoh), n. Spanish law. The mandate in a court's judgment; the dispositive sentence in a judicial pronouncement.

fall of the hammer. An auctioneer's closing of bidding <the bureau will be sold at the fall of the hammer>. • Traditionally, an auctioneer bangs a hammer, gavel, or other object when bidding is closed. In some circumstances, such as online auctions, a verbal announcement that bidding is closed substitutes. [Cases: Auctions and Auctioneers ↷7.]

falsa causa. See CAUSA (2).

falsa demonstratio (fal-sə or fawl-sə dem-ən-stray-shee-oh). Roman law. A false designation; an erroneous description of a person or thing in a legal instrument. • Generally, a simple error in description, grammar, or spelling will not void an instrument or even a single provision in it (such as a bequest by will). — Also termed false demonstration.

falsa moneta (fal-sə or fawl-sə mə-nee-tə). Roman law. Counterfeit money.

falsare (fal-sair-ee or fawl-), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To counterfeit; to falsify.

falsarius (fal-sair-ee-əs or fawl-). [Law Latin] Hist. A counterfeiter. — Also spelled falcarious. — Also termed falsonarius.

false, adj. (12c) 1. Untrue . 2. Deceitful; lying . 3. Not genuine; inauthentic <false coinage>. • What is false can be so by intent, by accident, or by mistake.

false, vb. 1. Scots law. To make or prove false. 2. Archaic. FALSIFY (1).

false action. See FEIGNED ACTION.

false advertising, n. (1911) 1. The tortious and sometimes criminal act of distributing an advertisement that is untrue, deceptive, or misleading; esp., under the Lanham Trademark Act, an advertising statement that tends to mislead consumers about the characteristics, quality, or geographic origin of one's own or someone else's goods, services, or commercial activity. • Under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, false advertising is actionable by anyone who reasonably believes that he or she has been or is likely to be damaged by the statement. An exaggerated opinion ("puffing") is an immaterial statement and therefore not actionable. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷21, 163; Fraud ↷11(1).] 2. At common law, a statement in a defendant's advertising about its own goods or services intended to deceive or confuse customers into buying those goods or services instead of the plaintiff's, and causing actual damage to the plaintiff, esp. the loss of sales. — Also termed (in both senses) deceptive advertising.

false answer. See ANSWER (1).

false arrest. See ARREST.

false-association claim. Intellectual property. A claim based on the wrongful use of a distinctive name, mark, trade dress, or other device to misrepresent sponsorship, origin of goods or services, or affiliation. • The power to assert a false-association claim is not limited to trademark registrants. Any person who claims an injury caused by deceptive use of a trademark or its equivalent may have standing to bring suit. See 15 USCA § 1125(a)(1)(A). [Cases: Trademarks ↷1106, 1117, 1563.] false character. Hist. The crime of impersonating a servant's master or mistress. See IMPOSTOR.

false check. See bad check under CHECK.

false claim. An assertion or statement that is untrue; esp., overbilling.

False Claims Act. A federal statute establishing civil and criminal penalties against persons who bill the government falsely, deliver less to the government than represented, or use a fake record to decrease an obligation to the government. 18 USCA §§ 286–287; 31 USCA §§ 3729–3733. • The Act may be enforced either by the attorney general or by a private person in a qui tam action. See QUI TAM ACTION. [Cases: United States ↷120.]

false conflict of laws. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

false demonstration. See FALSA DEMONSTRATIO.

false designation of origin. Trademarks. A mark, design, or similar element that creates a misleading or erroneous impression of a good or product's source. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↷29; Trademarks ↷1419.]

false evidence. See false testimony under TESTIMONY.

falsehood. 1. See LIE. 2. See PERJURY.

false impersonation. See IMPERSONATION.

false-implication libel. See LIBEL.

false imprisonment. (14c) A restraint of a person in a bounded area without justification or consent. • False imprisonment is a common-law misdemeanor and a tort. It applies to private as well as governmental detention. Cf. false arrest under ARREST. [Cases: False Imprisonment ↷2, 43.]

"[In the phrase false imprisonment,] false is . . . used not in the ordinary sense of mendacious or fallacious, but in the less common though well-established sense of erroneous or wrong; as in the phrases false quantity, false step, false taste, etc." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 123 n.38 (17th ed. 1977).

"False imprisonment was a misdemeanor at common law and is recognized by some states today. It differs from kidnapping in that asportation is not required. If the imprisonment is secret, some jurisdictions treat it as kidnapping." Arnold H. Loewy, Criminal Law in a Nutshell 65 (2d ed. 1987).

"Some courts have described false arrest and false imprisonment as causes of action which are distinguishable only in terminology. The two have been called virtually indistinguishable, and identical. However, the difference between them lies in the manner in which they arise. In order to commit false imprisonment, it is not necessary either to intend to make an arrest or actually to make an arrest. By contrast, a person who is falsely arrested is at the same time falsely imprisoned." 32 Am. Jur. 2d False Imprisonment § 3 (1995).

false judgment. Hist. A writ filed to obtain review of a judgment of a court not of record.

"After judgment given, a writ also of false judgment lies to the courts at Westminster to rehear and review the cause, and not a writ of error; for this is not a court of record . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 34 (1768).

false light. (1962) 1. Torts. In an invasion-of-privacy action, a plaintiff's allegation that the defendant attributed to the plaintiff views that he or she does not hold and placed the plaintiff before the public in a highly offensive and untrue manner. • If the matter involves the public interest, the plaintiff must prove the defendant's malice. See invasion of privacy by false light under INVASION OF PRIVACY. [Cases: Torts ↷ 352.] 2. (usu. pl.) Maritime law. A signal displayed intentionally to lure a vessel into danger. 18 USCA § 1658(b). — Also termed false light or signal.

false-memory syndrome. The supposed recovery of memories of traumatic or stressful episodes that did not actually occur, often in session with a mental-health therapist. • This term is most frequently applied to claims by adult children that repressed memories of prolonged and repeated child sexual abuse, usu. by parents, have surfaced, even though there is no independent evidence to substantiate the claims. Cf. REPRESSED-MEMORY SYNDROME.

False Memory Syndrome Foundation. An organization of parents who claim that their adult children have falsely accused them of childhood sexual abuse. • The organization was formed for the purpose of aiding persons who claim to have been wrongly accused as a result of the recovery of repressed memories. — Abbr. FMSE. Cf. VICTIMS OF CHILD ABUSE LAWS.

false misrepresentation. See MISREPRESENTATION. • This phrase is redundant because misrepresentation includes the idea of falsity.

false news. Hist. The misdemeanor of spreading false information that causes discord between the monarch and the people or between important people in the realm. 3 Edw., ch. 34.

false oath. See PERJURY.

false personation. See false impersonation under IMPERSONATION.

false plea. See sham pleading under PLEADING (1).

false pretenses. (18c) The crime of knowingly obtaining title to another's personal property by misrepresenting a fact with the intent to defraud. • Although unknown to English common law, false pretenses became a misdemeanor under a statute old enough to make it common law in the United States. Modern American statutes make it either a felony or a misdemeanor, depending on the property's value. — Also termed obtaining property by false pretenses; fraudulent pretenses. Cf. larceny by trick under LARCENY; EMBEZZLEMENT. [Cases: False Pretenses ↷ 1.]

false promise. See PROMISE.

false report. (1827) Criminal law. The criminal offense of informing law enforcement about a crime that did not occur. [Cases: Obstructing Justice ↷ 7.]

false representation. See MISREPRESENTATION.

false return. (16c) 1. A process server's or other court official's recorded misrepresentation that process was served, that some other action was taken, or that something is true. See RETURN (2). [Cases: Process ↷ 132-144, 153, 160.] 2. A tax return on which taxable income is incorrectly reported or the tax is incorrectly computed. See TAX RETURN. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷ 4480.] false statement. See STATEMENT.

false swearing. See PERJURY.

false testimony. See TESTIMONY.

false token. See TOKEN.

false verdict. See VERDICT.

false weight. (usu. pl.) A weight or measure that does not comply with governmentally prescribed standards or with the prevailing custom in the place and business in which the weight or measure is used. [Cases: Weights and Measures ↷ 10.]

falsi crimen. See crimen falsi under CRIMEN.

falsify, vb. (15c) 1. To make something false; to counterfeit or forge <the chiropractor falsified his records to help the plaintiff>. — Also termed (archaically) false. See COUNTERFEIT; FORGERY. 2. Rare. To prove something to be false or erroneous <their goal in the appeal was to falsify the jury's verdict>. — falsification, n.

falsifying a record. (18c) The crime of making false entries or otherwise tampering with a public record with the intent to deceive or injure, or to conceal wrongdoing. 18 USCA §§ 1506, 2071, 2073; Model Penal Code § 224.4. [Cases: Fraud ↷ 68; Records ↷ 22.]

falsing of dooms, n. See APPEAL (1).

falsity, n. (13c) 1. Something (such as a statement) that is false. See LIE. 2. The quality of being false. See FALSE.

falsonarius. See FALSARIUS.

falso retorno brevium (fal-soh [or fawl-soh] ri-tor-noh bree-vee-əm). [Law Latin] Hist. A writ against a sheriff for falsely returning a writ.

falsum (fal-səm or fawl-səm), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A false statement. See crimen falsi under CRIMEN. 2. A crime involving forgery or falsification. • Until the later Roman empire, the term applied to both documents and counterfeited coins.

falsus in uno doctrine (fal-səs [or fawl-səs] in yoo-noh). [fr. Latin falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus "false in one thing, false in all"] The principle that if the jury believes that a witness's testimony on a material issue is intentionally deceitful, the jury may disregard all of that witness's testimony. [Cases: Trial ↻187, 210; Witnesses ↻317.]

"[T]here is an old maxim 'falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus' (false in one thing, false in all), which is often much over-emphasized by counsel, though it is recognized by many courts in their charges to the jury. But this is only primitive psychology, and should be completely discarded." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 181 (1935).

faltering-company exception. A provision in the Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act exempting an employer from giving the required 60-day notice for a plant shutdown if (1) at the time notice was due, the employer was seeking capital or resources that would have allowed the employer to avoid a shutdown, and (2) the employer reasonably believed that providing the notice would have precluded the employer from obtaining the necessary capital or other resources. 29 USCA § 2102(b)(1). See WORKER ADJUSTMENT AND RETRAINING NOTIFICATION ACT. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻3232.]

fama publica (fay-mə pəb-li-kə). [Latin "public repute"] Hist. A person's reputation in the community. • A person's fama publica could be used against him or her in a criminal proceeding. Cf. ILL FAME.

"Now in the thirteenth century we find in the sheriff's turn a procedure by way of double presentment, and we may see it often, though not always, when a coroner is holding an inquest over the body of a dead man. The fama publica is twice distilled. The representatives of the vills make presentments to a jury of twelve freeholders which represents the hundred, and then such of these presentments as the twelve jurors are willing to 'avow,' or make their own, are presented by them to the sheriff. . . . From the very first the legal forefathers of our grand jurors are not in the majority of cases supposed to be reporting crimes that they have witnessed, or even to be the originators of the fama publica. We should be guilty of an anachronism if we spoke of them as 'endorsing a bill' that is 'preferred' to them; but still they are handing on and 'avowing' as their own a rumour that has been reported to them by others." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 643 (2d ed. 1899).

familia (fə-mil-ee-ə), n. (18c) [Latin] Roman law. 1. All persons, free and slave, in the power of a paterfamilias. See PATERFAMILIAS. 2. One's legal relations through and with one's family, including all property, ancestral privileges, and duties.

"The testator conveyed to him outright his whole 'familia,' that is, all the rights he enjoyed over and through the family; his property, his slaves, and all his ancestral privileges, together, on the other hand, with all his duties and obligations." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 170 (17th ed. 1901).

3. A family, including household servants.

"Familia. . . . A family or household, including servants, that is, hired persons (mercenarii or conductitii), as well as bondsmen, and all who were under the authority of one master, (dominus.) Bracton uses the word in the original sense, as denoting servants or domestics." 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 603-04 (2d ed. 1867).

familiae emptor (fə-mil-ee-ee emp-tor). [Latin "estate purchaser"] Roman law. A trustee who received an inheritance by a fictitious purchase and distributed it as the testator instructed. — Also termed emptor familiae. See mancipatory will under WILL.

"At some date, probably long before the XII Tables, men on the point of death, unable to make a true will because there was no imminent sitting of the Comitia, adopted the practice of conveying all their property . . . to a person who is described as the familiae emptor, and who is said by Gaius to be in loco heredis. Instructions were no doubt given to him as to the disposal of the property or part of it, but it is not clear that these were enforceable . . ." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 175 (2d ed. 1953).

familiae erciscundae (fə-mil-ee-ee ər-sis-kən-dee). See actio familiae erciscundae under ACTIO.

familiares regis (fə-mil-ee-air-eez ree-jis). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. Persons of the king's household. 2. The ancient title of the six clerks of chancery in England.

family, n. (14c) 1. A group of persons connected by blood, by affinity, or by law, esp. within two or three generations. 2. A group consisting of parents and their children. 3. A group of persons who live together and have a shared commitment to a domestic relationship. See RELATIVE. — familial, adj.

blended family. (1985) The combined families of persons with children from earlier marriages or relationships.

extended family. (1942) 1. The immediate family together with the collateral relatives who make up a clan; GENS. 2. The immediate family together with collateral relatives and close family friends.

immediate family. (18c) 1. A person's parents, spouse, children, and siblings. 2. A person's parents, spouse, children, and siblings, as well as those of the person's spouse. • Stepchildren and adopted children are usu. immediate family members. For some purposes, such as taxes, a person's immediate family may also include the spouses of children and siblings.

intact family. A family in which both parents live together with their children.

family allowance. See ALLOWANCE (1).

Family and Medical Leave Act. A 1993 federal statute providing that employees may take unpaid, job-protected leave for certain family reasons, as when a family member is sick or when a child is born. 29 USCA §§ 2601 et seq. • The statute applies to businesses with 50 or more employees. An employee may take up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave per year under the FMLA. — Abbr. FMLA. Cf. FAMILY LEAVE. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↻331.]

family arrangement. (1817) An informal agreement among family members, usu. to distribute property in a manner other than what the law provides for. — family-court judge. See JUDGE.

family disturbance. See DOMESTIC DISPUTE.

Family Division. English law. A section of the High Court that has jurisdiction over family matters such as divorce and custody and over uncontested probate matters.

Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act. An act that prescribes minimum standards for the maintenance and dissemination of student records by educational institutions. 20 USCA § 1232g. • It applies only to schools that receive federal funding. — Abbr. FERPA. — Also termed Buckley Amendment. [Cases: Colleges and Universities ↷9.40; Records ↷31.]

family-expense statute. (1901) 1. A state law that permits a charge against the property of a spouse for family debts such as rent, food, clothing, and tuition. [Cases: Husband and Wife ↷19(1).] 2. A section of the federal tax code providing that a person may not deduct expenses incurred for family, living, or personal purposes. IRC (26 USCA) § 262. See NECESSARIES. [Cases: Internal Revenue ↷3364.]

family farmer. See FARMER.

family-farmer bankruptcy. See CHAPTER 12 (2).

family home. A house that was purchased during marriage and that the family has resided in, esp. before a divorce. • In some jurisdictions, the court may award the family home to the custodial parent until (1) the youngest child reaches the age of 18 or is otherwise emancipated, (2) the custodial parent moves, or (3) the custodial parent remarries. In making such an award, the court reasons that it is in the best interests of the child to remain in the family home. — Also termed marital home; marital residence. [Cases: Divorce ↷252.5.]

family-income insurance. See INSURANCE.

family law. (1919) 1. The body of law dealing with marriage, divorce, adoption, child custody and support, child abuse and neglect, paternity, juvenile delinquency, and other domestic-relations issues. — Also termed domestic relations; domestic-relations law. 2. (More broadly) the bodies of law dealing with wills and estates, property, constitutional rights, contracts, employment, and finance as they relate to families.

family leave. (1981) An unpaid leave of absence from work taken to have or care for a baby or to care for a sick family member. See FAMILY AND MEDICAL LEAVE ACT. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷350, 351.]

family meeting. Hist. Civil law. 1. An advisory council called to aid the court in a family-law matter, such as arrangement of a guardianship for a minor or an incompetent adult. • If a person had no relatives, the court could summon friends of the person instead. 2. A council of relatives of a minor assembled to advise the minor in his or her affairs and to help administer the minor's property. — Also termed family council. [Cases: Guardian and Ward ↷9.]

family of marks. Trademarks. A group of trademarks that share a recognizable characteristic so that they are recognized by consumers as identifying a single source. • An example of a family of marks is the variety of marks beginning with Mc- and identifying items served at McDonald's restaurants. [Cases: Trademarks ↷1060.]

family of nations. Int'l law. The community of countries to which international law applies. • This term is now obsolescent. It is increasingly rejected as Eurocentric.

"The family of nations' is an aggregate of States which, as the result of their historical antecedents, have inherited a common civilisation, and are at a similar level of moral and political opinion." Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 396 (13th ed. 1924).

family partnership. See PARTNERSHIP.

family-partnership rules. (1946) Laws or regulations designed to prevent the shifting of income among partners, esp. family members, who may not be dealing at arm's length.

family-pot trust. See TRUST.

family-purpose rule. (1927) Torts. The principle that a vehicle's owner is liable for injuries or damage caused by a family member's negligent driving. • Many states have abolished this rule. — Also termed family-purpose doctrine; family-automobile doctrine; family-car doctrine. Cf. GUEST STATUTE. [Cases: Automobiles ↷195(5).]

"A number of jurisdictions have adopted the so-called 'family purpose' doctrine, under which the owner of a motor vehicle purchased or maintained for the pleasure of his family is liable for injuries inflicted by the negligent operation of the vehicle while it is being used by members of the family for their own pleasure, on the theory that the vehicle is being used for the purpose or business for which it was kept, and that the person operating it is therefore acting as the owner's agent or servant in using it." 8 Am. Jur. 2d Automobiles and Highway Traffic § 715, at 296 (1997).

family reunification. See REUNIFICATION.

family settlement. See FAMILY ARRANGEMENT.

family shelter. See women's shelter under SHELTER.

family support. A combined award of child support and alimony that does not apportion the amount of each. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↷3365; Child Support ↷140(1); Divorce ↷230; Internal Revenue ↷3288.]

Family Support Act of 1988. A federal statute requiring states to develop and implement child-support guidelines. 42 USCA § 667. See CHILD-SUPPORT GUIDELINES. [Cases: Child Support ↷142-148.]

family trust. See TRUST.

family violence. See domestic violence under VIOLENCE.

famosus (fə-moh-səs), adj. [Latin] Hist. 1. (Of a statement) having a defamatory character. 2. (Of an action) involving infamy if the defendant lost the case.

famosus libellus (fə-moh-səs li-bel-əs). [Latin] Roman law. 1. A libelous writing. 2. The species of injury that is caused by libel.

FAPE. abbr. Free appropriate public education. • This is a right of children with disabilities to have access to free education, guaranteed by the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act. See 34 C.F.R. § 100.33; 34 C.F.R. § 300.13. [Cases: Schools ↷148(2).]

FAR. (often pl.) abbr. FEDERAL AVIATION REGULATION <the pilot violated several FARs before the crash>.

farley (fahr-lee). Hist. Money paid by a tenant in lieu of a chattel (or heriot). • The term invariably referred to a tenant in the west of England. See HERIOT.

farm, n. (14c) 1. Land and connected buildings used for agricultural purposes. 2. Hist. Rent. • By extension, the term came to mean the land for which the rent was paid. — Also termed and spelled ferm; fearm; firmē.

farm, vb. (15c) 1. To cultivate land; to conduct the business of farming. 2. To lease. See FARM OUT.

Farm Credit Administration. An independent federal agency that regulates and examines the borrower-owned banks and cooperative associations that make up the Federal Farm Credit System. • The agency was created in 1929 under the title "Federal Farm Board," became an agency in the Department of Agriculture in 1933, and again became independent in 1971. — Abbr. FCA. See FEDERAL FARM CREDIT SYSTEM. [Cases: United States ↷53(7).]

farmee. See FARMOUTEE.

farmer. (14c) A person whose business is farming.

family farmer. A person or entity whose income and debts primarily arise from a family-owned and -operated farm; esp., a person who received more than 80% of gross income from a farm in the taxable year immediately preceding a Chapter 12 filing. • Only a family farmer can file for Chapter 12 bankruptcy. 11 USCA § 101(18). See CHAPTER 12. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↷2229.]

farmer bankruptcy. See CHAPTER 12 (2).

Farmers' Home Administration. An agency, formerly in the U.S. Department of Agriculture, responsible for making mortgages and insuring loans to farmers and for funding rural public-works projects. • The agency was abolished in 1994, and its functions were assumed by other agencies in the Department — Abbr. FmHA; FHA. [Cases: United States ↷53(7).]

farminee. See FARMOUTEE.

farming operation. (1859) Bankruptcy. A business engaged in farming, tillage of soil, dairy farming, ranching, raising of crops, poultry, or livestock, and production of poultry or livestock products in an unmanufactured state. 11 USCA § 101(21). See CHAPTER 12. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↷2021.1.]

farminor. See FARMOUTOR.

farm let, vb. Hist. To lease; to let land for rent. • To farm let is a phrasal verb that commonly appeared in real-property leases; it corresponds with its Latin root, ad firmam tradidi.

"A lease is properly a conveyance of any lands or tenements, (usually in consideration of rent or other annual recompense) made for life, for years, or at will, but always for a less time than the lessor hath in the premises: for if it be for the whole interest, it is more properly an assignment than a lease. The usual words of operation in it are, 'demise, grant, and to farm let; dimisi, concessi, et ad firmam tradidi.' 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 317-18 (1766).

farmor. See FARMOUTOR.

farm out, vb. (17c) 1. To turn over something (such as an oil-and-gas lease) for performance by another. • The term evolved from the Roman practice of transferring the right to collect taxes to a third party for a fee. That practice continued in England, Scotland, and France, but it has been long abolished. 2. Hist. To lease for a term. 3. To exhaust farmland, esp. by continuously raising a single crop.

farmout agreement. Oil & gas. An agreement by which one who owns an oil-and-gas lease (the farmoutor or farmor) agrees to assign to another (the farmoutee or farmee) an interest in the lease in return for drilling and testing operations on the lease. • For the farmor, the agreement either (1) maintains the lease by securing production or complying with the implied covenant to develop or offset, or (2) obtains an interest in production without costs. For the farmee, the agreement obtains acreage that is not otherwise available or at lower cost than would otherwise be possible. A farmout agreement may also serve as a device to keep people and equipment gainfully employed. — Often shortened to farmout. — Also written farm out agreement; farm-out agreement. See ASSIGNMENT. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ↷74(8).] farmoutee (fahr-ow-tee). An oil-and-gas sublessee to whom the lease is assigned for purposes of drilling a well. — Also termed farmee; farminee. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨74(8).]

farmoutor (fahrm-ow-tor or -tər). An oil-and-gas lessee who assigns the lease to another, who agrees to drill a well. — Also spelled farmouter. — Also termed farmor; farminor. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⇨74(8).]

farm products. Crops, livestock, and supplies used or produced in farming or products of crops or livestock in their unmanufactured states, if they are in the possession of a debtor engaged in farming. UCC § 9-102(a) (34). Cf. growing crops under CROPS. [Cases: Secured Transactions ⇨17.]

Farm Service Agency. An agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for administering farm-commodity, crop-insurance, and resource-conservation programs for farmers and ranchers and for making or guaranteeing farm emergency and operating loans through a network of state and county offices. — Abbr. FSA. [Cases: United States ⇨53(8).]

farthing of land (fahr-thing). Hist. An area of land measured as one-quarter of a larger area (much as a farthing was one-quarter of a penny). • A farthing of land ranged from a quarter of a hide to a quarter of an acre.

Faryndon's Inn. Hist. The ancient name of Serjeants' Inn. See SERJEANTS' INN.

FAS. abbr. 1. FREE ALONGSIDE SHIP. 2. FETAL ALCOHOL SYNDROME. 3. FOREIGN AGRICULTURAL SERVICE.

fas (fas), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. Moral law of divine origin; divine law. • Jus, by contrast, is created by man. See JUS. 2. What is right, proper, lawful, and permitted. Cf. NEFAS.

"The first element to be noted in the Roman composite existing in primitive times, when religion and law were not distinguished, is fas — the will of the gods, embodied in rules that regulated not only ceremonials but the conduct of all men as such." Hannis Taylor, The Science of Jurisprudence 65 (1908).

"It is true that the two spheres of ius and fas overlapped. . . . All this, however, concerned merely the question of where to draw the line between ius and fas; it did not blur the distinction between the two. From the standpoint of the history of Roman law, this distinction, consciously made from very early times, was of great importance, since it enabled the Romans to delimit the scope and the contents of strictly legal rules. This attitude may occasionally have caused a certain cold aloofness from purely human problems, but it undoubtedly contributed to the clarity of the legal system." Hans Julius Wolff, Roman Law: An Historical Introduction 51-52 (1951).

FASB (faz-bee). abbr. FINANCIAL ACCOUNTING STANDARDS BOARD.

FASB statement. An official pronouncement from the Financial Accounting Standards Board establishing a given financial-accounting practice as acceptable. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⇨25.18.]

fascism. A totalitarian political ideology under which all economic and social aspects of life come under rigid government control or direction, and the state's interests supersede individual interests.

fast estate. See real property under PROPERTY.

fasti (fas-ti). [Latin] Roman law. 1. The days on which court can be held. • In this sense, fasti is a shortened form of dies fasti. 2. A calendar of days on which court can be held. See dies fasti under DIES.

fast land. See LAND.

fast-tracking, n. (1996) A court's method of accelerating the disposition of cases in an effort to clear its docket. • For example, a judge might order that all discovery must be finished within 90 days and that trial is set for 30 days later. See ROCKET DOCKET. — fast-track, vb.

fatal, adj. (14c) 1. Of or relating to death; producing death <the decision had fatal consequences> <fatal blow>. 2. Providing grounds for legal invalidity .

fatal defect. See DEFECT.

fatal error. See reversible error under ERROR (2).

filiated father. The proven biological father of a child born to unmarried parents. See FILIATION.

foster father. See foster parent under PARENT.

genetic father. See biological father.

godfather. See GODPARENT.

intentional father. See intentional parent under PARENT.

legal father. (16c) The man recognized by law as the male parent of a child. • A man is the legal father of a child if he was married to the child's natural mother when the child was born, if he has recognized or acknowledged the child, or if he has been declared the child's natural father in a paternity action. If a man consents to the artificial insemination of his wife, he is the legal father of the child that is born as a result of the artificial insemination even though he may not be the genetic father of the child. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock ⇨12, 68; Parent and Child ⇨1, 20.]

natural father. See biological father.

presumed father. (1937) The man presumed to be the father of a child for any of several reasons: (1) because he was married to the child's natural mother when the child was conceived or born (even though the marriage may have been invalid), (2) because the man married the mother after the child's birth and agreed either to have his name on the birth certificate or to support the child, or (3) because the man welcomed the child into his home and held out the child as his own. • This term represents a complicated category, and state laws vary in their requirements. See PRESUMPTION OF PATERNITY. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock ⇨ 3, 43; Infants ⇨ 155, 172.] psychological father. See psychological parent under PARENT.

putative father (pyoo-tə-tiv). (16c) The alleged biological father of a child born out of wedlock. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock ⇨ 1.] stepfather. (bef. 12c) The husband of one's mother by a later marriage. — Formerly also termed vitricus. [Cases: Parent and Child ⇨ 14.]

fatherly power. See patria potestas under POTESTAS.

Fatico hearing (fat-ə-koh). (1979) Criminal procedure. A sentencing hearing at which the prosecution and the defense may present evidence about what the defendant's sentence should be. United States v. Fatico, 603 F.2d 1053 (2d Cir. 1979). [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ⇨ 325, 985.]

fatuum iudicium (fach-oo-əm joo-dish-ee-əm). [Latin] A foolish judgment or verdict.

fauces terrae (faw-seez ter-ee). [Latin "narrow passage of the land"] A body of water that experiences tides and is partially enclosed by land. • This includes inlets, rivers, harbors, creeks, bays, basins, and similar aquatic bodies.

fault. (13c) 1. An error or defect of judgment or of conduct; any deviation from prudence or duty resulting from inattention, incapacity, perversity, bad faith, or mismanagement. See NEGLIGENCE. Cf. LIABILITY. 2. Civil law. The intentional or negligent failure to maintain some standard of conduct when that failure results in harm to another person.

contractual fault. Civil law. Fault resulting from the intentional or negligent failure to perform an enforceable obligation in a contract.

delictual fault. Civil law. Fault resulting from intentional or negligent misconduct that violates a legal duty.

inscrutable fault. Maritime law. Fault ascribed solely to human error but for which no responsible party or parties can be identified. [Cases: Collision ⇨ 23.]

"Inscrutable fault" exists when a collision clearly resulted from human fault but the court is unable to locate it or allocate the fault among the parties." Atkins v. Lorentzen, 328 F.2d 66, 69 (5th Cir. 1964).

fault-based liability. See fault liability under FAULT.

fault divorce. See DIVORCE.

fault-first method. (1996) A means by which to apply a settlement credit to a jury verdict, by first reducing the amount of the verdict by the percentage of the plaintiff's comparative fault, then subtracting from the remainder the amount of any settlements the plaintiff has received on the claim. See SETTLEMENT CREDIT. Cf. SETTLEMENT-FIRST METHOD. [Cases: Damages ⇨ 63.]

faultless pardon. See PARDON.

fault liability. See LIABILITY.

fault of omission. (17c) Negligence resulting from a negative act. See negative act under ACT; NONFEASANCE.

Fauntleroy doctrine. The principle that a state must give full faith and credit to another state's judgment, if the other state had proper jurisdiction, even though the judgment is based on a claim that is illegal in the state in which enforcement is sought. Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641 (1908). [Cases: Judgment ⇨ 815, 817.]

fautor (faw-tər). Hist. 1. An abettor or supporter; an active partisan. 2. A person who encourages resistance to execution of process.

faux (foh), adj. [Law French] Hist. False or counterfeit.

faux (foh), n. [French "false"] Civil law. The fraudulent alteration of the truth. See CRIMEN FALSI.

faux action. A false action. See PLEADING.

faux money. Counterfeit money.

faux peys (foh pay). [French] False weights. See FALSE WEIGHT. [Cases: Weights and Measures ⇨ 10.]

faux serement (foh ser-mahn). [French] A false oath.

favor, n. See BIAS.

avored beneficiary. See BENEFICIARY.

avored nation. See MOST FAVORED NATION.

avored-nation clause. See MOST-FAVORED-NATION CLAUSE.

favorite of the law. (18c) A person or status entitled to generous and preferential treatment in legal doctrine.

"It has long been said that the surety is a favorite of the law and his contract strictissimi-juris." Laurence P. Simpson, Handbook on the Law of Suretyship 94 (1950).

favoritism. (18c) Preference or selection, usu. invidious, based on factors other than merit. See NEPOTISM; PATRONAGE. Cf. DISCRIMINATION.

favor legitimacionis (fay-vər lə-jit-ə-may-shee-oh-nis). [Latin "(in) favor of legitimacy"] The principle that a court should attempt to uphold a child's legitimacy.

favor matrimonii (fay-vər ma-trə-moh-nee-i). [Latin "(in) favor of marriage"] The principle that a court should attempt to uphold the validity of a marriage.

favor negotii (fay-vər ni-goh-shee-i). [Latin "(in) favor of business"] The principle that favors upholding a contract against a construction that would render the contract illegal or unenforceable.

favor paternitatis (fay-vər pə-tər-nə-tay-tis). [Latin "(in) favor of paternity"] The principle that a court should interpret facts so as to uphold the paternity of a child.

favor solutionis (fay-vər sə-loo-shee-oh-nis). [Latin "(in) favor of payment"] Conflict of laws. The principle that a contract should be interpreted according to the applicable law governing performance.

favor testamenti (fay-vər tes-tə-men-ti). [Latin "(in) favor of the testament"] The principle that a court should attempt to uphold a will's validity.

fax, n. (1948) 1. A method of transmitting over telephone lines an exact copy of a printing. 2. A machine used for such transmission. — Also termed telecopier. 3. The communication sent or received by such a machine. — Also termed facsimile; (in senses 1 & 3) facsimile transmission. — fax, vb.

feal (fee-əl), adj. Archaic. Faithful; truthful. — Also termed fele.

fealty (feel-tee or fee-əl-tee). (14c) Hist. In feudal law, the allegiance that a tenant or vassal owes to a lord. — Also termed feodality.

"There was the possibility that if the entire top layer of the structure revolted, the king might be deprived of all support. To meet this possibility, the king also bound directly to himself all the important men in the lower strata of the [feudal] structure by an oath of loyalty. This was particularly effective for in medieval times the oath of fealty had all the sanction of the church, and in addition due to the necessity for feudal organization in times of disorder, had also a popular sanction in public opinion so that the man who broke his oath to his lord was one of the most execrable men to be found in the whole social organization." Charles Herman Kinnane, A First Book on Anglo-American Law 248 (2d ed. 1952).

fearm. See FARM.

fear-of-cancer claim. Torts. A tort claim founded on a plaintiff's mental anguish or emotional distress arising from the fear of developing cancer, where either (1) the plaintiff was exposed to asbestos or other carcinogenic agents, or (2) a physician's negligence gave rise to a potentially cancerous condition or permitted a cancer to develop unchecked. • The plaintiff must demonstrate (1) actual exposure to a disease-causing agent, and (2) the reasonableness of the emotional distress. See Winik v. Jewish Hosp. of Brooklyn, 293 N.E.2d 95 (N.Y. 1972); Ferrara v. Galluchio, 152 N.E.2d 249 (N.Y. 1958). — Also termed cancerphobia claim.

A law establishing civil liability for gaining unauthorized access to a computer and causing damage to that computer. • Damage is statutorily defined to include harm to the computer's data, programs, systems, and information either by compromising integrity or by impairing availability. — Abbr. FCFAA. [Cases: Telecommunications ⇨1342.] federal court. See COURT.

federal crime. (1860) A criminal offense under a federal statute. • Most federal crimes are codified in Title 18 of the U.S. Code.

Federal Crop Insurance Corporation. A federally chartered corporation that protects farmers against financial losses from crop failure due to adverse weather conditions, insect infestation, plant disease, floods, fires, and earthquakes by encouraging the sale of insurance through licensed agents and brokers and by reinsuring private companies that issue insurance under brand names. • Created by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, the Corporation operates under the general supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture. — Abbr. FCIC.

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. A federal corporation that protects bank and thrift deposits by insuring accounts up to $100,000, examining banks that are not members of the Federal Reserve System, and liquidating failed institutions. • It was established in 1933 and began insuring banks in 1934. — Abbr. FDIC. [Cases: Banks and Banking ↷501–508.]

Federal Election Commission. A ten-member independent federal commission that certifies payments to qualifying presidential campaigns in primary and general elections and to national-nominating conventions, audits campaign expenditures, and enforces laws requiring public disclosure of financial activities of presidential campaigns and political parties. • It was established by the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. 2 USCA § 437c. — Abbr. FEC. [Cases: Elections ↷309.]

Federal Emergency Management Agency. A unit in the Department of Homeland Security responsible for coordinating all emergency-preparedness activities of the federal government through its ten regional offices. • FEMA also operates the National Flood Insurance Program and is responsible for fire protection and arson control. federal-juvenile-delinquency jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

Federal Kidnapping Act. A federal law punishing kidnapping for ransom or reward when the victim is transported interstate or internationally. • The law presumes that a victim has been transported in violation of the law if the victim is not released within 24 hours. The Federal Kidnapping Act, by express provision, does not apply to the kidnapping of a minor by either parent. The law was enacted in 1932 after the son of aviator Charles Lindbergh was kidnapped and murdered. For this reason, it is also termed the Lindbergh Act.

18 USCA § 1201. — Also termed Lindbergh Act. Cf. PARENTAL KIDNAPPING PREVENTION ACT. [Cases: Kidnapping ⇨ 14.]

"The Federal Kidnapping Act was passed in 1932 to close a dangerous loophole between state and federal law. At that time, marauding bands of kidnappers were preying upon the wealthy with ruthless abandon, seizing their victims for ransom while operating outside the reach of existing state laws. Knowing that authorities in the victim's home state were powerless once a hostage was transported across state lines, the criminals would kidnap their target in one state, then move quickly to the next. In response, Congress made kidnapping a federal crime when the victim was moved from one state to another, and comprehensive language was used to cover every possible variety of kidnapping followed by interstate transportation." 1 Am. Jur. 2d Abduction and Kidnapping § 14, at 185 (1994).

Federal Labor Relations Authority. An agency that protects the right of federal employees to organize, engage in collective bargaining, and select their own union representatives. • It was established under Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1978 and began operating in 1979. 5 USCA §§ 7101–35. — Abbr. FLRA. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 1650.]

Federal Maritime Commission. An independent federal agency that regulates the waterborne foreign and domestic commerce of the United States by (1) ensuring that U.S. international trade is open to all countries on fair and equitable terms, (2) guarding against unauthorized monopolies in U.S. waterborne commerce, and (3) ensuring that financial responsibility is maintained to clean up oil spills and indemnify injured passengers. • The Agency was established in 1961. Its five commissioners are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. — Abbr. FMC. [Cases: Shipping ⇨ 3, 14.]

Federal Maritime Lien Act. A statute that confers an automatic lien on anyone who provides a vessel with any of a wide range of goods and services. 46 USCA §§ 31341–43. — Abbr. FMLA. [Cases: Maritime Liens ⇨ 17.]

Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. An independent federal agency that tries to prevent the interruption of interstate commerce that could result from a labor-management dispute by helping the parties reach a settlement without resorting to a job action or strike. • The Service can intervene on its own authority or at the request of a party to the dispute. It also helps employers and unions select qualified arbitrators. The Service was established by the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947. 29 USCA § 172. — Abbr. FMCS. Cf. NATIONAL MEDIATION BOARD.

Federal Mine Safety and Health Review Commission. An independent five-member commission that (1) monitors compliance with occupational safety and health standards in the nation's surface and underground coal, metal, and nonmetal mines, and (2) adjudicates disputes that arise under the Federal Mine Safety and Health Amendments Act of 1977. • It was established in 1977. 30 USCA §§ 801 et seq. — Abbr. FMSHRC. [Cases: Labor and Employment ↷2571.]

Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Transportation responsible for regulating the operation of large trucks and buses. — Abbr. FMCSA. [Cases: Automobiles ↷116, 127.]

Federal National Mortgage Association. A privately owned and managed corporation chartered by the U.S. government that provides a secondary mortgage market for the purchase and sale of mortgages guaranteed by the Veterans Administration and those insured under the Federal Housing Administration. — Abbr. FNMA. — Also termed Fannie Mae. [Cases: United States ↷53(9).]

Federal Parent Locator Service. A federal program created to help enforce child-support obligations. • In an effort to increase the collection of child support, Congress authorized the use of all information contained in the various federal databases to help locate absent, delinquent child-support obligors. Although initially information could be released only if the family was receiving public assistance, any judgment obligee can now apply to receive the last known address of a delinquent child-support obligor. 42 USCA § 653. Abbr. FPLS.

Federal Power Commission. See FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION.

federal preemption. See PREEMPTION (5).

federal prison camp. A federal minimum-security detention facility. • Federal prison camps, which often do not have walls or fences, usu. house nonviolent inmates who are serving sentences shorter than a year plus one day and who are not considered escape risks.

federal reserve note. (1913) The paper currency in circulation in the United States. • Non-interest-bearing promissory notes are payable to their bearer on demand. The Federal Reserve Banks issue the notes in denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100. Until 1945, the United States Mint also printed $500, $1,000, $5,000, and $10,000 bills. Although the Federal Reserve System discontinued using bills larger than $100 in 1969, the outstanding bills remain legal tender. 31 USCA § 5103. Cf. GOLD CERTIFICATE; SILVER CERTIFICATE.

Federal Reserve System. The central bank that sets credit and monetary policy by fixing the reserves to be maintained by depository institutions, determining the discount rate charged by Federal Reserve Banks, and regulating the amount of credit that may be extended on any security. • The Federal Reserve System was established by the Federal Reserve Act of 1913. 12 USCA § 221. It comprises 12 central banks supervised by a Board of Governors whose members are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. — Abbr. FRS; Fed. [Cases: Banks and Banking ↷351-359.]

"The Federal Reserve System of 1913 evolved out of a search for consensus among bankers, politicians, and some academic experts. It was a move toward 'central bank' regulation in the European sense . . . [The System] seemed to resolve the outstanding problems in money and banking. Federal Reserve banknotes could grow with expanding commercial paper and economic prosperity, and assure a more adequate, reliable monetary growth." William A. Lovett, Banking and Financial Institutions Law in a Nutshell 14-15 (1997).

Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board. A board that administers the Thrift Savings Plan that allows federal employees to save additional funds for retirement. • It was established in 1986. 5 USCA § 8472. — Abbr. FRTIB. [Cases: United States ↻39(15).]

See also Fed. R. Civ. P. 83; Fed. R. Crim. P. 57. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻31.]

Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. The rules governing appeals to the U.S. courts of appeals from lower courts, some federal-agency proceedings, and applications for writs. — Abbr. Fed. R. App. P.; FRAP. [Cases: Federal Courts ↻522.]

Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure. The rules governing proceedings instituted under the Bankruptcy Code. — Abbr. Fed. R. Bankr. P. [Cases: Bankruptcy ↻2129.]

Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The rules governing civil actions in the U.S. district courts. — Abbr. Fed. R. Civ. P.; FRCP. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻31-44.]

"Chief Justice Hughes in 1935 appointed fourteen lawyers and law teachers as the Advisory Committee for the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, with William D. Mitchell, former Attorney General, as chairman, and Charles E. Clark, then dean of the Yale Law School, as reporter, to recommend a draft of rules uniting law and equity. The committee proposed a system of rules that was approved by the Court with certain changes. In accordance with the Enabling Act, the rules were submitted to Congress for its acquiescence and, Congress having taken no exception to them, they became effective September 16, 1938.

"The rules thus produced bear the unmistakable imprint of the reporter, Charles E. Clark, and represent the largest single accomplishment in American civil procedure since the Field Code of 1848. Although they were not perfect and have been amended many times, experience with them has on the whole been satisfactory, and more than half of the states have adopted them in their entirety or in large part." Fleming James, Geoffrey C. Hazard Jr. & John Leubsdorf, Civil Procedure § 1.8, at 24-25 (5th ed. 2001).

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The rules governing criminal proceedings in the U.S. district courts. — Abbr. Fed. R. Crim. P. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ↻23.]

Federal Technology Service. A unit in the General Services Administration that provides communications services worldwide to other federal departments and agencies. — Abbr. FTS.

Federal Tort Claims Act. A statute that limits federal sovereign immunity and allows recovery in federal court for tort damages caused by federal employees, but only if the law of the state where the injury occurred would hold a private person liable for the injury. 28 USCA §§ 2671-2680 — Abbr. FTCA. See sovereign immunity under IMMUNITY (1). [Cases: United States ↻78.]

"Although it has been suggested that the maxim, 'the King can do no wrong' never had an existence in the United States, it has also been declared that in enacting the Federal Tort Claims Act, Congress recognized the manifold injustice that springs from the delimiting effect of the rule represented by that maxim. And it is said that in passing the Act, Congress intended to compensate the victims of negligence in the conduct of governmental activities in circumstances in which a private person would be liable, rather than leave just treatment to the caprice and legislative burden of individual private laws, and to eliminate the burden on Congress of investigating and passing on private bills seeking individual relief." 35 Am. Jur. 2d Federal Tort Claims Act § 1, at 296 (1967).

Federal Trade Commission. An independent five-member federal commission that administers various laws against business monopolies, restraint of trade, and deceptive trade practices. • It was established by the Federal Trade Commission Act of 1914. 15 USCA §§ 41-58. The Commission's body of rulings reaches into many state-law actions because many so-called "Little FTC Acts" of the states specify that FTC interpretations should provide a model for state-court decisions. — Abbr. FTC. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ↻300.]

Federal Trademark Act. See LANHAM ACT.

Federal Trademark Dilution Act. A 1995 amendment to the Lanham Act (Trademark Act of 1946) that provides additional remedies against the dilution of famous trademarks. 15 USCA § 1125(c). — Sometimes shortened to Dilution Act. — Abbr. FTDA. [Cases: Trademarks ↻1450-1473.]

federal transfer. The federal district court's right to move a civil action filed there to any other district or division where the plaintiff could have brought the action originally. 28 USCA § 1404(a). See CHANGE OF VENUE. [Cases: Federal Courts ↷ 101-146, 1152.]

success fee. A bonus paid to a representative who performs exceptionally well in gaining favorable results; esp., a bonus that a client pays to an attorney if the attorney obtains something of value to the client. • For instance, a client might agree to pay a success fee for success in litigation, for favorable negotiations in a transaction, or for the successful conclusion of a corporate merger, acquisition, or loan. See CONDITIONAL FEE AGREEMENT. [Cases: Attorney and Client ↷ 130, 143.]

witness fee. 1. A statutory fee that must be tendered with a subpoena for the subpoena to be binding. [Cases: Witnesses ↷ 23.] 2. A fee paid by a party to a witness as reimbursement for reasonable expenses (such as travel, meals, lodging, and loss of time) incurred as a result of the witness's having to attend and testify at a deposition or trial. • Any other payment to a nonexpert witness is considered unethical. — Also termed (in English law) conduct money. Cf. expert-witness fee.

2. A heritable interest in land; esp., a fee simple absolute. — Also termed fee estate; feod; feodum; feud; feudum; fief. See FEE SIMPLE. Cf. FEU. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷ 5-7.]

"To enfeoff someone was to transfer to him an interest in land called a fief — or, if you prefer, a feoff, feod, or feud. Our modern word fee, a direct lineal descendant of fief, implies the characteristic of potentially infinite duration when used to describe an interest in land today; but in the earliest part of the feudal period, a fief might have been as small as a life interest. We shall see later that feoffment was not used to transfer interests 'smaller' than life interests — e.g., so-called terms for years — but for our purposes now we may simply note that transfers of interests for life or 'larger' were accomplished by livery of seisin." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 11 (2d ed. 1984).

arriere fee (ar-ee-air or ar-ee-or). Hist. A fee dependent on a superior one; a subfief. — Also termed arriere fief.

base fee. (16c) A fee that has some qualification connected to it and that terminates whenever the qualification terminates. • An example of the words creating a base fee are "to A and his heirs, tenants of the manor of Tinsleydale," which would terminate when A or his heirs are no longer tenants of the manor of Tinsleydale. Among the base fees at common law are the fee simple subject to a condition subsequent and the conditional fee. — Also termed determinable fee; qualified fee; limited fee. See fee simple determinable under FEE SIMPLE.

"A base fee is a particular kind of determinable fee. The two essentials of a base fee are (a) it continues only so long as the original grantor or any heirs of his body are alive; and (b) there is a remainder or reversion after it. . . . In effect a base fee was a fee simple which endured for as long as the entail would have continued if it had not been barred, and determined when the entail would have ended." Robert E. fee estate. See FEE (2).

fee farm. Hist. A species of tenure in which land is held in perpetuity at a yearly rent (fee-farm rent), without fealty, homage, or other services than those in the feoffment. — Also termed feodi firma; firma feodi. See EMPHYTEUSIS.

"Now to all appearance the term socage, a term not found in Normandy, has been extending itself upwards; a name appropriate to a class of cultivating peasants has begun to include the baron or prelate who holds land at a rent but is not burdened with military service. . . . He is sometimes said to have feodum censuale, far more commonly he is said to hold 'in fee farm.' This term has difficulties of its own, for it appears in many different guises; a fief is to hold in feofirma, in feufirmam, in fedfirmam, in feudo firmam, in feudo firma, ad firmam feodalem, but most commonly, in feodi firma. The Old English language had both of the words of which this term is compounded, both feoh (property) and feorm (rent); but so had the language of France, and in Norman documents the term may be found in various shapes, firmam fedium, feudifirmam. But, whatever may be the precise history of the phrase, to hold in fee farm means to hold heritably, perpetually, at a rent; the fee, the inheritance, is let to farm." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 293 (2d ed. 1899).

fee-shifting. n. The transfer of responsibility for paying fees, esp. attorney's fees, from one party to another. See AMERICAN RULE (1); ENGLISH RULE. [Cases: Internal Revenue ◊ 4351.]

fee simple. (15c) An interest in land that, being the broadest property interest allowed by law, endures until the current holder dies without heirs; esp., a fee simple absolute. — Often shortened to fee. — Also termed estate in fee simple; tenancy in fee; fee-simple title; exclusive ownership; feudum simplex. See AND HIS HEIRS. [Cases: Estates in Property ◊ 5-7.]

"[Fee simple] is a term not likely to be found in modern conversation between laymen, who would in all probability find it quite unintelligible. Yet to a layman of the 14th century the term would have been perfectly intelligible, for it refers to the elementary social relationship of feudalism with which he was fully familiar: the words 'fee' and 'feudal' are closely related. . . . The estate in fee simple is the largest estate known to the law, ownership of such an estate being the nearest approach to ownership of the land itself which is consonant with the feudal principle of tenure. It is 'the most comprehensive estate in land which the law recognises'; it is the 'most extensive in quantum, and the most absolute in respect to the rights which it confers, of all estates known to the law'. Traditionally, the fee simple has two distinguishing features: first, the owner ('tenant' in fee simple) has the power to dispose of the fee simple, either inter vivos or by will; second, on intestacy the fee simple descends, in the absence of lineal heirs, to collateral heirs — to a brother, for example, if there is no issue." Peter Butt, Land Law 35 (2d ed. 1988).

"Fee simple. Originally this was an estate which endured for as long as the original tenant or any of his heirs survived. 'Heirs' comprised any blood relations, although originally ancestors were excluded; not until the Inheritance Act 1833 could a person be the heir of one of his descendants. Thus at first a fee simple would terminate if the original tenant died without leaving any descendants or collateral blood relations (e.g., brothers or cousins), even if before his death the land had been conveyed to another tenant who was still alive. But by 1306 it was settled that where a tenant in fee simple alienated the land, the fee simple would continue as long as there were heirs of the new tenant and so on, irrespective of any failure of the original tenant's heirs. Thenceforward a fee simple was virtually eternal." Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 24-25 (6th ed. 1993).

fee simple absolute. (18c) An estate of indefinite or potentially infinite duration (e.g., "to Albert and his heirs"). — Often shortened to fee simple or fee. —

Also termed fee simple absolute in possession. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷5.]

"Although it is probably good practice to use the word 'absolute' whenever one is referring to an estate in fee simple that is free of special limitation, condition subsequent, or executory limitation, lawyers frequently refer to such an estate as a 'fee simple' or even as a 'fee.'" Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 24 (2d ed. 1984).

fee simple conditional. (17c) An estate restricted to some specified heirs, exclusive of others (e.g., "to Albert and his female heirs"). • The fee simple conditional is obsolete except in Iowa, Oregon, and South Carolina. — Also termed general fee conditional; conditional fee. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷7.]

"The reader should be careful not to confuse this estate with estates having similar labels, such as the 'estate in fee simple subject to a condition subsequent' . . ." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 29 n.19 (2d ed. 1984).

fee simple defeasible (di-fee-zə-bəl). (18c) An estate that ends either because there are no more heirs of the person to whom it is granted or because a special limitation, condition subsequent, or executory limitation takes effect before the line of heirs runs out. — Also termed defeasible fee simple; qualified fee. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷6.]

fee simple determinable. (18c) An estate that will automatically end and revert to the grantor if some specified event occurs (e.g., "to Albert and his heirs while the property is used for charitable purposes"); an estate in fee simple subject to a special limitation. • The future interest retained by the grantor is called a possibility of reverter. — Also termed determinable fee; qualified fee; fee simple subject to common-law limitation; fee simple subject to special limitation; fee simple subject to special interest; base fee; estate on limitation. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷6.]

"In theory, it should be easy to determine whether an instrument creates a fee simple determinable or a fee simple subject to a condition subsequent. If the instrument includes a special limitation (introduced by words such as 'so long as' or 'until') it creates a fee simple determinable, whether or not it also includes an express reverter clause. If the instrument includes an express condition or proviso ('on condition that' or 'provided that') and an express right to re-enter for breach of the stated condition, it creates a fee simple subject to a condition subsequent. But deeds and wills often fail to employ the appropriate words to create one of the two types of defeasible estate or the others. Instead deeds and wills often contain a confusing mixture of words appropriate for creation of both types of defeasible estate." William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property 43 (3d ed. 2000).

fee simple subject to a condition subsequent. (1874) An estate subject to the grantor's power to end the estate if some specified event happens (e.g., "to Albert and his heirs, upon condition that no alcohol is sold on the premises"). • The future interest retained by the grantor is called a power of termination (or a right of entry). — Also termed fee simple on a condition subsequent; fee simple subject to a power of termination; fee simple upon condition. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷7.] fee simple subject to an executory limitation. (1856) A fee simple defeasible that is subject to divestment in favor of someone other than the grantor if a specified event happens (e.g., "to Albert and his heirs, but if the property is ever used as a parking lot, then to Bob"). — Also termed fee simple subject to an executory interest. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷6.]

fee-splitting. 1. The division of attorney's fees between two or more lawyers, esp. between the lawyer who handled a matter and the lawyer who referred the matter. • Some states consider this practice unethical. 2. The division of attorney's fees between two or more lawyers who represent a client jointly but are not in the same firm. • Under most states' ethics rules, an attorney is prohibited from splitting a fee with a nonlawyer. — Also termed fee-sharing; division of fees. [Cases: Attorney and Client ↷151.]

fee statement. A lawyer's bill for services either already rendered or to be rendered, usu. including itemized expenses.

fee tail. (15c) An estate that is heritable only by specified descendants of the original grantee, and that endures until its current holder dies without issue (e.g., "to Albert and the heirs of his body"). • Most jurisdictions — except Delaware, Maine, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island — have abolished the fee tail. — Also termed entailed estate; estate tail; estate in tail; estate in fee tail; tenancy in tail; entail; feodum talliatum. See ENTAIL; TAIL. [Cases: Estates in Property ↷12.]

"The old legal estate tail was throughout its history invariably associated with family settlements, and in particular with marriage settlements. . . . Medieval landowners sought to achieve [familial continuity and status] by perfecting a single estate which in itself would conform to three requirements: (1) While it should be an estate of inheritance it should devolve on lineal heirs only, and not on collaterals — in other words that it should descend only to the heirs of the body of the first grantee. (2) As a corollary, the estate should be such that if at any time the first grantee's issue should fail the estate itself should come to an end and the land revert to the original settlor or his heirs. (3) No owner of the estate for the time being should have power to dispose of the land in such a way as to prevent it descending on his death to the next heir of the body of the original grantee. All this was attempted by limiting land, not to 'A and his heirs,' which would give A a fee simple, but to 'A and the heirs of his body.'" 1 Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England 150 (L. Crispin Warmington ed., 21st ed. 1950).

"If we cannot resist the temptation to say that De Donis permitted the creation of tailor-made estates, we can at least argue that it is not a pun. Our word 'tailor' and the word 'tail,' as used in 'fee tail,' come from the same source — the French tailleur, to cut. The word 'tail' in 'fee tail' has nothing to do with that which wags the dog. The estate in fee tail was a cut estate — either cut in the sense that the collateral heirs were cut out, or cut in the sense that the estate was carved into a series of discrete life-possession periods to be enjoyed successively by A and his lineal heirs. . . . We know of no state in the United States that recognizes the estate in fee tail in its strict 1285-1472 form. Wherever it is recognized, the tenant in tail in possession may disentail it by simple deed." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 30, 32 (2d ed. 1984).

fee tail general. A fee tail that is heritable by all of the property owner's issue by any spouse. • Formerly, a grant "to A and the heirs of his body" created a fee tail general. [Cases: Estates in Property ⇨ 12.]

fee tail special. A fee tail that restricts the eligibility of claimants by requiring a claimant to prove direct descent from the grantee and meet the special condition in the grant. • For example, the words "to A and the heirs of his body begotten on his wife Mary" meant that only descendants of A and Mary could inherit; A's children by any other wife were excluded. An estate tail special could also be restricted to only male or only female descendants, as in "to A and the heirs male of his body." [Cases: Estates in Property ⇨ 12.]

feigned, adj. Pretended; simulated; fictitious.

feigned accomplice. See INFORMANT.

feigned action. Hist. An action brought for an illegal purpose on a pretended right. — Also termed faint action; false action.

feigned issue. Hist. A proceeding in which the parties, by consent, have an issue tried by a jury without actually bringing a formal action. • The proceeding was done when a court either lacked jurisdiction or was unwilling to decide the issue. — Also termed fictitious issue.

"The chancellor's decree is either interlocutory or final. It very seldom happens that the first decree can be final, or conclude the cause; for, if any matter of fact is strongly controverted, this court is so sensible of the deficiency of trial by written depositions, that it will not bind the parties thereby, but usually directs the matter to be tried by jury. . . . But, as no jury can be summoned to attend this court, the fact is usually directed to be tried at the bar of the court of king's bench or at the assises, upon a feigned issue. For, (in order to bring it there, and have the point in dispute, and that only, put in issue) an action is feigned to be brought, wherein the pretended plaintiff declares that he laid a wager of 5*l.* with the defendant that A was heir at law to B; and then avers that he is so; and therefore demands the 5*l.* The defendant allows the wager, but avers that A is not the heir to B; and thereupon the issue is joined. . . . These feigned issues seem borrowed from the sponsio judicialis of the Romans: and are also frequently used in the courts of law, by consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading. . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 452 (1768).

superior fellow servant. A worker that has the power of control or direction over a coworker. — Also termed superior servant.

fellow-servant rule. (1905) A common-law doctrine holding that an employer is not liable for an employee's injuries caused by a negligent coworker. • This doctrine has generally been abrogated by workers'-compensation statutes. In some jurisdictions, employees were considered fellow servants when they were working with one aim or result in view. In others, the relation of fellow servant was tested by the "doctrine of vice principal" or the "superior-servant rule," meaning that an employer is liable for injuries to an employee if they result from the negligence of another employee who is given power of control or direction over the injured employee. — Also termed common-employment doctrine. Cf. DIFFERENT-DEPARTMENT RULE. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⇨ 2921.]

felonia (fə-loh-nee-ə). [Latin "felony"] Hist. An offense that results in a vassal's forfeiting his fee.

"The attempt to derive felonia from fel 'poison' is merely a folk etymology which came into vogue when 'felony' meant a serious crime, and differed from treason. The word was well established in Feudal Law as the characteristic offense against the Feudal relationship. It will hardly do, therefore, to try to determine its meaning merely by reference to English usage . . ." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 148 n.7 (1936).

felonious (fə-loh-nee-əs), adj. (16c) 1. Of, relating to, or involving a felony. 2. Constituting or having the character of a felony. 3. Proceeding from an evil heart or purpose; malicious; villainous. 4. Wrongful; (of an act) done without excuse or color of right.

felon of oneself. See SUICIDE (2).

felony, n. (14c) 1. A serious crime usu. punishable by imprisonment for more than one year or by death. • Examples include burglary, arson, rape, and murder. — Also termed major crime; serious crime. Cf. MISDEMEANOR. [Cases: Criminal Law ↷ 27.]

"Felony, in the general acceptance of our English law, comprises every species of crime, which occasioned at common law the forfeiture of lands or goods." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 94 (1769).

"Amongst indictable crimes, the common law singled out some as being so conspicuously heinous that a man adjudged guilty of any of them incurred — not as any express part of his sentence but as a consequence that necessarily ensued upon it — a forfeiture of property, whether of his lands or of his goods or of both (in the case of treason). Such crimes came to be called 'felonies.' The other, and lesser, crimes were known as 'transgressions' or 'trespasses,' and did not obtain their present name of misdemeanours until a much later date. A felony is, therefore, a crime which either involved by common law such a forfeiture, or else has been placed by statute on the footing of those crimes which did involve it." J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny's Outlines of Criminal Law 93 (16th ed. 1952).

atrocious felony. (1814) Archaic. A serious, usu. cruel felony involving personal violence. • The common practice today is to refer to the specific type of crime alleged (e.g., first-degree murder or aggravated sexual assault).

serious felony. (1874) A major felony, such as burglary of a residence or an assault that causes great bodily injury. • In many jurisdictions, a defendant's prior serious-felony convictions can be used to enhance another criminal charge. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment ↷ 1254, 1276.]

substantive felony. See substantive offense under OFFENSE (1).

treason felony. See TREASON FELONY.

violent felony. See violent offense under OFFENSE (1).

2. Hist. At common law, an offense for which conviction results in forfeiture of the defendant's lands or goods (or both) to the Crown, regardless of whether any capital or other punishment is mandated. • At early common law, the term felony included any offense for which a defendant who fled before trial could be summarily convicted, attainted, and outlawed, or that carried a right of appeal after conviction. Although treason carried the same penalties as a common-law felony, it was usu. defined as a separate class of crime. 3. Hist. Feudal law. A grave act that resulted in the forfeiture of land granted by a superior.

felony injury to a child. The act of causing or allowing a child to suffer in circumstances likely to produce great bodily harm or death, or inflicting unjustifiable pain or mental suffering in those circumstances. [Cases: Infants ↷ 13.]

felony murder. See MURDER.

felony-murder rule. (1943) The doctrine holding that any death resulting from the commission or attempted commission of a felony is murder. • Most states restrict this rule to inherently dangerous felonies such as rape, arson, robbery, and burglary. Cf. MISDEMEANOR-MANSLAUGHTER RULE. [Cases: Homicide ↷ 575.]

"[I]t seems fair to suggest that the future of felony murder is uncertain. England, where the doctrine originated, has abolished it. The Model Penal Code recommends its abolition except for the purpose of creating a rebuttable presumption of malice for killings perpetrated during the course of a felony. Although most states have not yet adopted this position, many of the judicial limitations on felony murder discussed above seem to insure that in many states it will be an unusual case in which one is convicted of felony murder, who absent this doctrine, would not have been convicted of murder." Arnold H. Loewy, Criminal Law in a Nutshell 46 (2d ed. 1987).

FEMA. abbr. FEDERAL EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT AGENCY.

female genital mutilation. (1979) 1. Female circumcision. 2. The act of cutting, or cutting off, one or more female sexual organs. • Female genital mutilation is practiced primarily among certain tribes in Africa, but it also occurs among some immigrant populations in the United States and in other Western nations. There are three commonly identified types: sunna, in which the hood of the clitoris is cut off; excision, in which the entire clitoris is cut off; and infibulation, in which the clitoris, the labia minora, and much of the labia majora are cut off. In the United States, Congress has outlawed female genital mutilation, specifically prohibiting the use of a cultural defense for persons accused of performing the act. 18 USCA § 16. — Abbr. FGM. fem-crit. See CRIT.

feme (fem), n. (16c) [Law French] Archaic. 1. A woman. 2. A wife. — Also spelled femme.

feme covert (fem kəv-ərt). [Law French “covered woman”] Archaic. A married woman. • The notion, as Blackstone put it, was that the husband was the one “under whose wing, protection, and cover, she performs every thing.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Law of England 430 (1766). See COVERTURE.

feme sole (fem sohl). [Law French] Archaic. 1. An unmarried woman. 2. A married woman handling the affairs of her separate estate. — Also termed (in sense 2) feme sole trader; feme sole merchant.

fence, n. (14c) 1. A person who receives stolen goods, usu. with the intent to sell them in a legitimate market. [Cases: Receiving Stolen Goods ↻4.]

“The receivers of stolen goods almost never ‘know’ that they have been stolen, in the sense that they could testify to it in a courtroom. The business could not be so conducted, for those who sell the goods — the ‘fences’ — must keep up a more respectable front than is generally possible for the thieves.” United States v. Werner, 160 F.2d 438, 441–42 (2d Cir. 1947).

“The typical ‘fence’ takes over the stolen property and pays the thief a price. He purports to ‘buy’ the goods from the thief.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 395 (3d ed. 1982).

2. A place where stolen goods are sold. See RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY. 3. LAWFUL FENCE. 4. Scots law. The formal warning to not interrupt or obstruct judicial or legislative proceedings. 5. Scots law. A penalty of forfeiture prescribed in a statute or a contract.

feodi firmarius (fee-ə-di or fyoo-di fər-mair-ee-əs). Hist. The tenant of a fee farm.

feodum (fee-ə-dəm or fyoo-dəm). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A fee; a heritable estate.

“Feodum . . . A fee; the same as feudum. This is the word uniformly employed by Glanville and Bracton to denote an estate of inheritance, and an estate held of another by service, instead of feudum, which is invariably used by the continental feudists.” 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 615 (2d ed. 1867).

2. Part of a lord’s estate held by a tenant (i.e., a seignior). See SEIGNIORY (2). 3. A payment for services rendered.

feoffee (fef-ee or feef-ee). (15c) The transferee of an estate in fee simple; the recipient of a fief.

feoffee to uses. Hist. A person to whom land is conveyed for the use of a third party (called a cestui que use); one who holds legal title to land for the benefit of another. See CESTUI QUE USE; GRANT TO USES. Cf. TRUSTEE (1).

feoffer. See FEOFFOR.

feoffment (feɪ-mənt or feef-mənt). (14c) Hist. 1. The act of conveying a freehold estate; a grant of land in fee simple. — Also termed feoffment with livery of seisin. 2. The land so granted. 3. The charter that transfers the land. — Also termed deed of feoffment. [Cases: Deeds ⇨ 21.]

feoffment to uses. An enfeoffment of land to one person for the use of a third party. • The feoffee was bound in conscience to hold the land according to the prescribed use and could derive no benefit from the holding.

"Conveyances of freehold land could originally be made only by a feoffment with livery of seisin. This was a solemn ceremony carried out by the parties entering on the land, and the feoffor, in the presence of witnesses, delivering the seisin to the feoffee either by some symbolic act, such as handing him a twig or sod of earth, or by uttering some words such as 'Enter into this land and God give you joy' and leaving him in possession of the land." Robert E. Megarry & H.W.R. Wade, The Law of Real Property 47 (5th ed. 1984).

feoffor (feɪ- or feef-ər or -or). The transferor of an estate in fee simple. — Also spelled feoffer.

[Cases: Ferries ⇨ 2.] 2. The commercial transportation of persons or property across water. [Cases: Ferries ⇨ 2.] 3. The place where a ferry passes across water, including the continuation of the highway on both sides of the water. [Cases: Ferries ⇨ 3.] 4. The right, usu. exclusive, given by government franchise, to carry persons or property across water for a fee. — Also termed ferry franchise. [Cases: Ferries ⇨ 9.]

ferry, vb. To carry persons or property, usu. across water, for a fee.

ferry franchise. See FERRY (4).

fertile-octogenarian rule. (1856) The legal fiction, assumed under the rule against perpetuities, that a woman can become pregnant as long as she is alive. • The case that gave rise to this fiction was Jee v. Audley, 1 Cox 324, 29 Eng. Rep. 1186 (ch. 1787). See W. Barton Leach, Perpetuities: New Hampshire Defertilizes Octogenarians, 77 Harv. L. Rev. 729 (1963). — Also termed presumption-of-fertility rule.

"Suppose testator bequeaths in trust to pay the income to A for her life, then to pay the income to the children of A for their lives, and upon the death of the survivor of such children, to pay the principal to the grandchildren of A. At the time of the testator's death A is 79 years old, and she has two children. Believe it or not, it has been held that the remainder to the grandchildren of A is violative of the rule against perpetuities and invalid. The law adopted the conclusive presumption that every person is capable of having children until the day he or she dies, as far as the rule against perpetuities is concerned. Consequently, A could have an additional child who would not be a life in being at the testator's death, and that child could have a child who would be born beyond the permissible period. The result of this hypothesis is to invalidate the remainder to the grandchildren. This situation is sometimes referred to as the case of the 'fertile octogenarian.' Remember that the class gift is invalid if it is possible that the interest of any one member of the class can violate the rule." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 188 (2d ed. 1984).

festing-man. Hist. A bondsman; a surety. See FRANK-LEDGE.

festing-penny. Hist. Earnest, or payment, given to a servant when hired.

festinum remedium (fes-ti-nəm ri-mee-dee-əm). [Latin] Hist. A speedy remedy. • It was used in cases, such as actions for dower or assize, where the redress of injury was given without unnecessary delay.

Festo doctrine. (2003) Patents. The rule that the voluntary narrowing of a patent claim may give rise to prosecution-history estoppel. Festo Corp. v. Shoketsu Kinzoku Kogyo Kabushiki Co., 304 F.3d 1289 (Fed. Cir. 2003). [Cases: Patents ↻168(2.2).]

festuca (fes-tyoo-kə). Hist. A rod, staff, or stick used as a pledge (or gage) of good faith by a party to a contract or as a token of conveyance of land. • In Roman law, a festuca was a symbol of ownership. — Also termed fistuca; vindicta. See LIVERY OF SEISIN.

"The wed or gage, however, was capable of becoming a symbol; an object which intrinsically was of trifling value might be given and might serve to bind a contract. Among the Franks, whom we must regard as being for many purposes our ancestors in law, it took the shape of the festuca. Whether this transition from the 'real' to the 'formal' can be accomplished without the intervention of sacral ceremonies seems doubtful. There are some who regard the festuca as a stout staff which has taken the place of a spear and is a symbol of physical power. Others see in it a little bit of stick on which imprecatory runes have been cut. It is hard to decide such questions, for, especially under the influence of a new religion, symbols lose their old meanings and are mixed up. Popular etymology confounds confusion." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederick W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 186 (2d ed. 1899).

festum (fes-təm). [Latin] A feast-day, holiday, or festival.

fetal alcohol syndrome. A variety of birth defects caused by the mother's alcohol consumption during pregnancy. • The birth defects include facial abnormalities, mental retardation, and growth deficiencies. — Abbr. FAS. [Cases: Infants ↻156, 179.]

fetiales (fee-shee-ay-leez), n. pl. Roman law. The order of priests whose duties concerned international relations and treaties, including the declaration of war and peace. — Also spelled feciales.

"Feciales [were] . . . priests among the Romans, Etruscans, and other ancient nations of Italy, who acted as heralds of peace and war. Their persons were sacred from injury when engaged on any mission to a hostile state, as the persons of ambassadors, and messengers, under a flag of truce, are inviolate in the present time. Their duties in some few particulars resembled those of the heralds of the Middle Ages. The Roman feciales . . . formed a kind of college of heralds, instituted by Numa Pompilius, the second king of Rome, about 710 B.C." Beeton's

fetial law (fee-shəl). (16c) Roman law. A branch of law concerned with matters (such as treaties, embassies, and war declarations) affecting relations between peoples or nations. — Also spelled fecial law. — Also termed jus fetiale.

feticide (fee-tə-sīd). (1842) 1. The act or an instance of killing a fetus, usu. by assaulting and battering the mother; esp., the act of unlawfully causing the death of a fetus. 2. An intentionally induced miscarriage. — Also spelled foeticide. — Also termed child destruction. Cf. INFANTICIDE (1). — feticidal, adj.

fetter, n. (usu. pl.) (bef. 12c) A chain or shackle for the feet. — fetter, vb.

fettering of property. The act of making the disposition or ownership of property more complex so that those with separate interests must cooperate if they are to handle their interests reasonably. • Fettering of property occurs whenever ownership is split into two or more interests, as when present and future interests are divided or when a tenancy in common is created. [Cases: Perpetuities ↻1.]

fetus. (14c) A developing but unborn mammal, esp. in the latter stages of development. — Also spelled foetus. Cf. EMBRYO; ZYGOTE. [Cases: Abortion and Birth Control ↻106.]

feu (fyoo), n. [fr. Law Latin feudum "a fee"] (15c) 1. A right to land given to a person in exchange for service to be performed. 2. Scots law. Land held by a vassal in return for an annual payment in money, crops, or services (called feu duty). • This type of tenure was abolished in Scotland in 2000. 3. Scots law. A perpetual grant of land to be held in exchange for grain or money. 4. A perpetual lease for a fixed rent. 5. A piece of land held under a perpetual lease for a fixed rent. — Also spelled few. See FEE (2). — feu, vb. — feu, adj.

"Feu; in Latin feudum, was used to denote the feudal-holding, where the service was purely military; but the term has been used in Scotland in contradistinction to ward-holding, the military tenure of this country . . . for, even in the purest ages of the military system, innumerable instances are to be found of grants of land in the feudal form, where the vassal annually delivered victual, or performed agricultural services to his superior." William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 456 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

feu, vb. Scots law. To grant (land) by feu.

feu annual. Scots law. The yearly return generated by a feu.

feuar (fyoo-ər), n. (16c) Scots law. One who holds a feu. Cf. FEU; VASSAL.

feu charter. Scots law. The charter creating a feu tenure.

feud, n. (15c) Hist. 1. A heritable estate in land conveyed from a feudal superior to a grantee or tenant, held on the condition of rendering services to the superior.

"It is believed that the forms feud and fief appear in England but late in the day under the influence of foreign books;
