For David Elder

PREFACE

The idea for this book originated many years ago. As a publisher's editor, frequently working on books of Australian history, biography, art, sport, entertainment, social history, and general Australiana, I was required to check facts and dates that were often not readily accessible. For my own future use I recorded these details on index cards and filed them away in chronological order in cardboard boxes. Gradually I got into the habit of noting down details of any event or achievement that I came across, not only in the manuscripts I was working on but in books, magazines, and newspapers, in guidebooks and leaflets from historic places, in pamphlets and advertisements published in celebration of some anniversary, and on plaques attached to buildings and memorials.

Eventually I decided to gather the material systematically, with the object of producing a chronology of Australia for publication. I started to read through The Australian Encyclopaedia and collections of historical documents as well as specialized histories, noting down every date and fact of significance and filing the cards away in the ever-increasing number of cardboard boxes. The work became a time-consuming occupation.

To my great good fortune, the publisher of the original edition, John Ferguson, put me in touch with a fellow chronologist, David Elder, who had recently retired after a lifetime in publishing. David Elder had amassed an enormous amount of chronological information from prodigious reading, patient investigation, and years of travelling round Australia as a publisher's representative. The extent of his research was matched by the extent of his generosity; he graciously put all of his material at my disposal to use as I thought fit.

The amount of material was several times as much as I had gathered, even though its cut-off point was 1950, and far more than I could fit into a manageable single volume. But if I could not use it all, I could select freely from it. It allowed me to fill in many blank spaces in years where little of note seemed before to have happened, and it provided me with precise dates for innumerable events for which I and many reference works could supply only the year or at best the month. It also often provided me with the answer to a recurring question: Which of the two or more conflicting dates or facts obtained from accepted authoritative sources was the right one?

Despite this help, the project still took much longer than I had expected. Even when I called a halt to the gathering of information, there still remained the editing of the cards—deciding what to include and what to leave out, compressing each piece of information into a line or two, sorting out the remaining inconsistencies—and then the typing of the manuscript and the huge job of preparing the index. Meanwhile, other books of a similar nature were published—it seems ideas float in the air like viruses and infect various authors and publishers at the same time. But I was convinced that my book, with its emphasis on precise dates and its detailed index, was sufficiently different to make its publication worth while.

When the text was eventually set in type, David Elder kindly read through the proofs, tactfully drawing my attention to misconceptions or ambiguities caused by compression, making helpful comments, answering queries, and suggesting useful additions. I am deeply indebted to him for his generous help at every stage of the book's long gestation, and the book is infinitely the better for it. He should not, of course be held responsible for whatever faults the book may have; the selection of events and their presentation are mine, and responsibility for any shortcomings is mine alone.

NOTE TO THE FOURTH EDITION

In the twelve years since the first edition was published, I have continued to gather information, not only for the purpose of updating the book—now to the end of 1999—but to correct or amend entries and make additions in the light of recent research. This has been done for each new edition. The index has been correspondingly amended and overhauled, and the deaths of notable people over the past twelve years have been recorded in the index and in the Births and Deaths section as appropriate. I would like to acknowledge my debt to the new volumes of the Australian Dictionary of Biography, which have provided me with the full names of a number of people and enabled me to include or correct missing and erroneous birth and death dates.

INTRODUCTION

What Happened When is a guide to events in Australia's history and the achievements of notable Australians from the beginning of European settlement to the present day. It is arranged chronologically, each year beginning with a list of political and general events against precise dates, followed by the year's achievements and other information listed under the following seven categories:

- A Architecture, Building
- B Science, Technology, Discovery, etc.
- C Arts and Entertainment
- D Books and Writing
- E Sport and Recreation
- F Statistics, Social Change, the Environment
- G Births and Deaths

The book also contains a comprehensive index which uses references to the relevant year and month (1 to 12) or classification (A to G) rather than to a page. For example, the reader will find the reference to Gough Whitlam's dismissal as "1975 11" (i.e., under November in the general chronological list of 1975) and the reference to his birth as "1916 G" (under Births and Deaths in the classified section of 1916). The book thus enables the reader to find out readily when any important event happened and also to see at a glance what was going on at the one time in various fields of activity.

The General Chronological List

In the first section of each year, the general chronological list, an event with no date or symbol alongside it can be assumed to have taken place on the day of the event immediately above it. Where the precise day of the month on which an event occurred is unknown, the entry is placed at the end of the month with a dash in place of the date. An event for which a month cannot be assigned is placed at the end of the section and indicated by an asterisk in place of a date (in the index, the reference to such an event—say, the drought of 1919—would be "1919*").

Establishing the correct date of an event has often been difficult, as works of reference are surprisingly inconsistent. To resolve problems of inconsistency, original sources have been sought to verify dates and facts. Despite all the care taken to avoid perpetuating errors, there are bound to be slips in a book containing so many facts and dates, and covering such a wide range, and it is hoped that readers will inform the publisher of any inaccuracy or serious omission so that amendments can be made in subsequent printings.

Some of the date inconsistencies in reference works are understandable. Acts of parliament, for example, present a confusing choice of date—when a bill was introduced, when the act was passed, when it was given royal assent, and when the legislation (or the authority established by the legislation) came into operation. Where practicable, the date an act was assented to has been used; at times, however, one of the other dates was more relevant or accessible and has been used.

For reasons of space, only rare references have been made to outside world events that had no direct bearing on Australia, and events that occurred before the arrival of the First Fleet have not been included. The arrival of all convict transports is noted up to 1800, after which only those carrying some noteworthy person or involved in some noteworthy incident have been listed.

The Classified Section

In the classified section of each year, precise dates are given only in the Births and Deaths classification and occasionally to note some historic event in the arts or science or sport. Unless otherwise noted, architectural works are entered in the year the work was begun, together with the architect's name where appropriate, with the year of completion and other details given in brackets—for example, in 1858: “Leonard Terry, Melbourne Club (–1859; extended in 1879).” Plays are entered in the year they were first produced, films when first released, books when first published, and art works when first exhibited.

In classification G, birth entries include the year of death if the person is no longer living, and death entries include the age of the person at death. Thus in 1882 we have “Jul 8 Percy Grainger b. (–1961)” and “Aug 1 Henry Kendall d. (43)”.

Estimated population numbers are as calculated by the Australian Bureau of Statistics to 31 December each year. Before 1961 they do not include full-blood Aborigines.

Some entries could just as well have been placed in a different classification from the one in which they appear or in the general chronological section. Where inconsistencies occur or any doubt arises, reference to the index will direct the reader to the right place.

INTRODUCTION

The Index

The index is in itself a handy reference source. Entries for persons almost always contain full name, occupation or claim to fame, and birth and death years; for notable individuals there are chronologically arranged sub-entries which provide a potted biography. Titles of books are listed with their author's name in brackets. Places are assigned their state; entries for the various states contain sub-entries relating to such matters as the foundation, exploration, granting of self-government and franchise, boundaries, and education system, followed by chronological lists of Governors and Premiers; capital cities have sub-entries relating to major events, structures, services, and institutions. Prime Ministers are listed in chronological order, as are Governors-General and Chief Justices of the High Court. Subjects covered in detail in the chronology have extensive entries appropriately subdivided.

For the most part, the subdivisions of a main entry are arranged chronologically and run on, separated from one another by a semicolon. Certain subject entries, however, have been arranged by states alphabetically and then, within states, chronologically. Other large main entries, such as "Aborigines", also lend themselves to initial alphabetical subdivision. Where sub-entries are arranged alphabetically, they begin on separate, indented lines for easy recognition. Other examples of alphabetical subdivision are the entry "Shipwrecks and Shipping Disasters" and the list of Melbourne Cup winners, which enables the reader to establish readily the year in which any given horse won the race (the winner in any year being obtainable from the main text).

In many cases the index will in fact provide the answers to questions without the need to refer to the main text. What was Ben Chifley's full name? When did Nellie Melba die? When was Summer of the Seventeenth Doll filmed? Who wrote Such Is Life? Who was Premier of South Australia after Sir Thomas Playford? Who was Governor of Tasmania in 1817? How many times was Alfred Deakin Prime Minister? Who succeeded Sir Isaac Isaacs as Chief Justice? And as Governor-General? When was it that Delta won the Melbourne Cup? The answers to questions such as these can all be found in the index.

INDEX

EACH INDEX ENTRY is followed by a year number, then a number from 1 to 12, or a letter from A to G, or an asterisk. A number following the year denotes the month in which an event occurred. An asterisk signifies that the event cannot be assigned to a particular month; text entries for such events are located immediately following calendar entries for the year. A letter indicates that the entry is located under the subject heading for one of the categories from A to G which appear for each year. For example, the following entry appears:

Antarctic exploration: Borchgrevink, 1895 1, 1899 B . . .

Text entries referring to Borchgrevink's exploration will appear in January 1895, and in 1899 under the heading B Science, Technology, Discovery etc.

An explanation of the principles upon which the index is organized appears in the Introduction.

If you want to know what was going on in the year you or your parents were born, you can browse. In 1932, for example, you will find that the Sydney Harbour Bridge was opened, Phar Lap died, the ABC was established, Ion Idriess wrote Flynn of the Inland, Walter Lindrum made a world-record billiards break of 4,137, the basic wage was £3 3s 11d, and over 30 per cent of the workforce was unemployed.

The year-by-year arrangement of the text makes reference easy and the 130-page index is a valuable source in itself, providing both answers to specific questions (What was Ben Chifley's full name? When was On the Beach written and filmed?) and potted histories of events, people and institutions.

What Happened When will settle arguments, refresh memories, furnish some surprises and answer a lot of questions. It is an invaluable reference for librarians, archivists, students, historians, pub arguers, puzzle solvers and anyone interested in Australia's history.

Anthony Barker worked for over 30 years as a book editor. He has also written concert and book reviews, and the books Dear Robertson: Letters to an Australian Publisher, An Illustrated Anthology of Australian Epic Journeys and Beatrice Davis: One of the First and One of the Finest, as well as contributing entries to the Australian Dictionary of Biography.

"For anyone who has tried to check facts and dates in Australian history ... this could be a godsend ..." SYDNEY MORNING HERALD

"There is no doubting the book's pre-eminent browsability. The index and cross-reference are superb." THE AUSTRALIAN
