MECHTILD OF MAGDEBURG (c. 1207–c. 1282). German Christian mystic and Beguine. Name variations: Mechtild von Magdeburg; Mechthild of Magdeburg; Mechthild von Magdeburg; Mechthilde de Magdebourg. Born between 1207 and 1212 near Magdeburg in Lower Saxony (Germany); died in the convent at Helfta in 1282 (though some suggest her death might be as late as 1297). ✦ Wrote of the love affair between God and her soul; had religious experience (c. 1219); left home for Magdeburg (c. 1229 or 1230), where she led a semi-religious life as a Beguine; wrote the 1st 6 books of The Flowing Light of the Godhead (1250–70); retired to the Cistercian convent at Helfta (1270), and wrote book 7 of The Flowing Light before her death. When The Flowing Light of the Godhead was found in a monastery (1860), it was considered a major discovery: not only was it the 1st Christian mystical text known to be written by a man or a woman in the vernacular (or language of the common people) rather than in Latin, it also contained one of the 1st descriptions of a type of Christian devotion known as the Sacred Heart. German literary historians and theologians declared Mechtild of Magdeburg one of the 1st and best examples of the German mystic movement. ✦ See also Lucy Menzies, The Revelations of Mechthild of Magdeburg (1210–1297) or the Flowing Light of the Godhead (Longmans, 1953); and Women in World History.

NEFERTARI (c. 1295–1256 BCE). Egyptian queen. Name variations: Nefertary; Nefertari-Merymut. Born c. 1295 BCE; died 1256 BCE (some sources cite 1255); m. Ramses II, king of Egypt (r. 1304–1236 BCE), c. 1280; children: 1 daughter; 1 son Amem-hir-khopshef (died young). ❖ Chief queen of Pharaoh Ramses the Great of ancient Egypt and a great beauty, judging from contemporary paintings; was apparently favored over Ramses' other “chief wife” Esetnofret (Istnofret), because she appears prominently on Ramses' monuments; was buried in her magnificent tomb, discovered in 1904, which is hewn into a mountain in the Valley of the Queens near modern Luxor. ❖ See also Women in World History.

NEFERTITI (c. 1375–1336 BCE). Egyptian queen. Name variations: Nefertiit, Nefretiti, Nofretete or Nofretiti. Born c. 1375 BCE; died 1336 BCE; probably dau. of the sun-king Amenhotep III (known as The Magnificent) and one of his many wives; sister of Mutnedjmet (c. 1360–1326 BCE); m. Amenhotep IV, later known as Akhenaten (c. 1385–1350 BCE), pharaoh of Egypt; children: 6 daughters, Meritaten, Meketaten, Ankhesenpaaten (Ankhesenpaten), Neferneferuaten minor, Neferneferure, and Satepenre. ❖ Ancient Egyptian queen who appears to have ruled with her husband (and if so was the only queen of the pharaonic period known to have done this) and may have even ruled independently for a short time following husband's death. Whether the period of her greatest power and influence was early in husband's reign (c. 1348 BCE) or at its end (c. 1338 BCE) is debatable. What is known is that she was extraordinarily beautiful and enjoyed great prominence and power during her adulthood and, after her death, her memory was hated and the object of a systematic persecution. During winter of 1912–13, German archaeologists working at the site of ancient city at Tell el-Amarna discovered Queen Nefertiti's now-famous painted portrait bust toppled over on the floor in the ruins of the studio of an ancient sculptor named Thutmose. Ever since its display and publication in 1923, this image of Nefertiti has been universally adored, and the sculpture—the long graceful neck supporting the lovely and serene face under the soaring conical crown (which was hers alone)—has been constantly reproduced around the world on everything from jewelry to postage stamps. ❖ See also C. PHAGAN, Mary (c. 1899–1913). American murder victim. Born c. 1899 in Georgia; killed, April 27, 1913, in Atlanta, GA. ❖ At age 13, was working at the National Pencil Co. in Atlanta, GA, when she was found dead in the basement (April 27, 1913). The company's Jewish superintendent, Leo Frank, was tried and found guilty of the murder (July 1913); after Frank's death sentence was commuted to life by Governor John M. Slaton, a group known as the Knights of Mary Phagan abducted Frank from prison and lynched him outside Marietta (Aug 17, 1915). Frank's trial and lynching—called by many a gross miscarriage of justice due to anti-Semitism—prompted formation of Jewish Anti-defamation League and was responsible for several US Supreme Court rulings which altered American trial standards. Frank was considered by many to be vindicated in 1982 when Alonzo Mann admitted to seeing company employee Jim Conley dragging Phagan's body (Conley had testified against Frank). ❖ See also Steve Oney, And the Dead Shall Rise: The Murder of Mary Phagan and the Lynching of Leo Frank (2003); tv miniseries, "The Murder of Mary Phagan" (1987).
