TANAQUIL (fl. late 7th–early 6th BCE). Etruscan noblewoman. Name variations: Caia Caecilia. Died after 579 BCE; probably from the Etruscan city of Tarquinii, and of noble birth; m. Lucumo, later known as Lucius Tarquinius Priscus (or Tarquin, king of Rome); children: sons Lucius and Arruns; daughters (names unknown); son-in-law Servius Tullius (578–535 BCE, king of Rome). ❖ Shadowy figure from Rome's regal period, probably a figure of history and not merely of myth, who was the reason husband and son-in-law became the 1st two Etruscan kings of Rome; highly ambitious, convinced husband to immigrate to Rome and adopt a new name; saw husband appointed guardian of the king's sons (traditionally 617 BCE), then take the throne on death of king; just as she had been germinal to his own accession, allegedly played the dominant role in the selection of husband's successor, raising Servius Tullius (578–535 BCE) as if he were a member of their own family, then marrying him to their daughter; the instant husband was assassinated after a 38-year reign, decisively acted to procure Rome's political stability by ordering Servius Tullius to do as she commanded: to take vengeance upon his enemies, to protect her interests in a world which had been suddenly redefined, and to follow the "guidance" of the gods, then told the crowd waiting below that husband was still alive but needed time for recovery and that he had appointed Servius Tullius as his royal proxy. Though her liberality as a queen was revered for centuries after her death, the name "Tanaquil" had become a readily accepted synonym for an "imperious woman" by the 1st century of the common era. ❖ See also Women in World History.

TRUGANINI (1812–1876). Tasmanian Aborigine. Name variations: Truccanini or Traucanini; also known as Trugernanner; "Lalla Rookh" or "Lallah Rookh." Born 1812 (some sources cite 1803) at Recherche Bay, Tasmania; died May 8, 1876, in Hobart, Tasmania; dau. of Mangerner (a Lyluequonny man and an elder of southeast Aboriginal tribe); mother's name unknown (slain by whalers); sister of Moorinna who had been kidnapped and shot by sealers; m. Woorraddy (member of the Nuenonne tribe), July 1829 (died c. 1842). ❖ After martial law was declared and whites were permitted to kill on sight all Aborigines they saw near "settled" land, assisted secular missionary George Augustus Robinson in relocating Tasmania's remaining Aborigines to nearby Flinders Island (1830–35); following a visit to the settlement where many were dying, began to urge her fellow Aborigines to remain in Tasmania (1836); after Robinson was named protector of the Aborigines in Australia's Port Phillip district (1839), was forced with husband and others to accompany him to his new posting near Melbourne; escaped from the Port Phillip mission in the company of 2 Aboriginal men and 2 Aboriginal women and went on a rampage (c. 1842); as punishment, was shipped back to Flinders Island (c. 1842), then relocated with others to an abandoned settlement at Oyster Bay, some 20 miles south of Hobart in Tasmania (1847); became last of that group to survive and one of the last full-blooded Tasmanian Aborigines. By 1904, her bones had been strung together in a full skeleton and placed on display at a Hobart museum, where they were the most visited exhibit for years. ❖ See also Women in World History.

TRUITT, Anne (1921–2004). American artist and writer. Born Anne Dean, Mar 16, 1921, in Baltimore, Maryland; died Dec 23, 2004, in Washington, DC; dau. of Duncan Witt Dean and Louisa Folsom (Williams) Dean; Bryn Mawr College, BA in psychology, 1943; studied art with Alexander Giampetro and Kenneth Noland at Institute of Contemporary Art, 1948–50, and with Octavo Medillin in Dallas; m. James McConnell Truitt (journalist), Sept 19, 1947; children: Alexandra; Mary; Samuel. ❖ Sculptor and painter of the minimalist school, was a potent force in American art through several decades, helping to shape the modern era of abstract art; her sculpture, and paintings masquerading as sculpture, were in the advance guard of the literalist-minimalist art movement that took a firm hold (1960s); though her work is clearly linked with the minimalist school, is more precisely a proponent of the Washington, DC, art movement known as "Color Field"; with her trademark boxes, had 1st one-woman show at Andre Emmerich Gallery in NY (1963); had solo shows at Whitney Museum in NY (1973) and Corcoran in Washington (1974); works include Autumn Dryad and Spring Snow. ❖ See also (journals) Daybook (1982) and Turn (1986); and Women in World History.

TRUMAN, Bess (1885–1982). American first lady. Name variations: Bess Wallace. Born Elizabeth Virginia Wallace, Feb 13, 1885, in Independence, Missouri; died Oct 18, 1982, in Independence; dau. of David Willock Wallace (merchant) and Margaret Elizabeth (Gates) Wallace; m. Harry S. Truman (president of US), June 28, 1919 (died Dec 26, 1972); children: (Mary) Margaret Truman (b. 1924, writer). ❖ One of the least-known first ladies in modern times (April 12, 1945–Jan 20, 1953), was often guarded from public attention by husband, though he credited her as "a full partner in all my transactions—political and otherwise"; at 18, her father committed suicide, after years of financial woes and bouts with alcoholism; was bitterly opposed to husband's run for vice-president (1944); when he succeeded to the presidency after Roosevelt's death (April 12, 1945), entered the White House determined to hang on to privacy; in one of her 1st official acts, canceled the weekly press conference in favor of informal teas, held with the understanding that anything she said was off the record; privately carried out all the customary duties; often tempered husband's "shoot from the hip" responses and his notorious public swearing; agreed to another campaign (1948), because she knew husband wanted to finish what he had started—and probably because she believed, along with many others, that he could not possibly win reelection; in one of the major upsets in American political history, found herself back in the White House for 4 more years; back in Independence (1953), edited and organized husband's memoirs and set up the Truman Library. ❖ See also Women in World History.

TRUMAN, Margaret (1924—). American writer, singer, and first daughter. Name variations: Margaret Truman Daniel. Born Mary Margaret Truman in Independence, Missouri, Feb 17, 1924; dau. of Harry S. VASHTI (fl. 5th c. BCE). Biblical woman and queen of Persia. Name variations: Astin; Vastis; Vasthi; Wasti. Pronunciation: (Hebrew) wasti; (English) Vasthi. Was the wife of King Xerxes I (Ahasuerus in the Biblical text), and may have been associated with Persian nobility (though the wives of Persian kings were required to come from specific Persian noble families, this was not always the case); what is known about Vasthi is contained in the scroll of Esther, one of the writings in the Hebrew Scriptures. ❖ Queen of Persia in the Biblical story of Esther who, by defying her husband, was deposed and replaced by the compliant Esther; her brief, but significant, story comprises the 1st 27 verses of this "early Jewish novella." The fact that Amestris, rather than Vasthi, is recorded as Xerxes' queen during the period under study has raised questions about Vasthi's historicity. However, given the numerous concubines and mistresses the king enjoyed, it is not implausible for him to have had more than one queen. ❖ See also Women in World History.
