Illinois

Twenty-first state; admitted on December 3, 1818

The 150th, or sesquicentennial, anniversary of Illinois' statehood was celebrated throughout the state during 1968. In December 1967, a year-long exhibit on Illinois history opened at Chicago's Field Museum of Natural History. Miniature replicas of historic rooms—Carl Sandburg's birthplace, Jane Addams's Hull House office, and the Palmer House Hotel's Silver Dollar Barber Shop of 1875—were on display in Carson Pirie Scott department stores. Lincoln's birthday on February 12 was observed with programs commemorating his career in Illinois. On July 4, there was a parade, drama, musical events, fireworks, and speeches at Steeleville. As part of the year-long celebration, the Old State House in Springfield was restored.

State capital: Springfield

Nicknames: Prairie State; Land of Lincoln; Corn State

State motto: State Sovereignty, National Union

Oklahoma

Forty-sixth state; admitted on November 16, 1907

Since 1921, November 16 has been designated Oklahoma Statehood Day. It has also been Oklahoma State Flag Day since 1968. In 1957, in honor of the 50th anniversary of statehood, the state legislature decreed the week of November 11-16 to be Oklahoma Week. In 1965, the lawmakers mandated public schools to conduct programs on the state's history and achievements on November 16. Annual observance of Oklahoma Statehood Day began in 1921 under the sponsorship of the Oklahoma Heritage Association, which continues to hold a dinner at the state capital at which notable Oklahomans are inducted into the Oklahoma Hall of Fame. Oklahoma Statehood Day is also observed annually with a ceremony at the Washington Cathedral in the nation's capital.

I. REFERENCE AND OTHER BACKGROUND WORKS ON HOLIDAYS

A. General Works

♦ Augur, Helen. The Book of Fairs. Introduction by Hendrik Willem Van Loon. Illustrated by James MacDonald. 1939. Reprint. Detroit: Omnigraphics, Inc., 1992.

Traces the development of trade, customs, and social life in connection with fairs in history up to the 1939 World's Fair. Includes discussion of fairs and festivals in ancient Tyre, Athens and Rome, the Kinsai Fairs in 13th-century Cathay, festivals in 13th-century France, 15th-century Belgium and Germany, medieval England, Ireland and Scotland, Russia, and the modern expositions. [Cited in the text as BkFairs-1939]

♦ Blackburn, Bonnie, and Leofranc Holford-Strevens. The Oxford Companion to the Year: An Exploration of Calendar Customs and Time-Reckoning. New York: Oxford University Press, 1999.

This day-by-day guide presents idiosyncratic inclusion of mostly English holidays. It claims Chambers's Book of Days (see below) as its predecessor and includes much the same kind of material. Part I is arranged by month. Each month opens with a brief history of the month's name, concentrating on ancient Rome and ancient Britain, followed with a brief list of some important holidays around the world. Part I also includes essays on the seasons; Oxford, Cambridge, and law terms; the months; the week; days; the Western Church year and its feasts; the Orthodox Church year and its feasts; and other holidays. Part II provides essays on days and times, calendar systems, and dating. [Cited in the text as OxYear-1999]

♦ Chambers, Robert, ed. The Book of Days: A Miscellany of Popular Antiquities in connection with the Calendar, including Anecdote, Biography, & History, Curiosities of Literature, and Oddities of Human Life and Character. New introduction by Tristram Potter Coffin. 1862-64. Reprint. Detroit: Omnigraphics, Inc., 1990.

British tome organized chronologically and covering popular Christian festivals and saints' days; seasonal phenomena; folklore of the British Isles, especially that connected with the passing of time and seasons of the year; "Notable Events, Biographies, and Anecdotes connected with the Days of the Year"; "Articles of Popular Archaeology, of an entertaining character, tending to illustrate the progress of Civilization, Manners, Literature, and Ideas in these kingdoms"; and other miscellaneous items. [Cited in the text as BkDays-1864]

♦ Cirlot, J. E. A Dictionary of Symbols. 2nd ed. Translated by Jack Sage. Foreword by Herbert Read. New York: Philosophical Library, 1971.

Hundreds of entries on symbols and their significance. Symbols include animals, objects, natural phenomena, places, and mythological and other characters. [Cited in the text as DictSymb-1971]

Indexes

1. Chronological Index—Fixed Days and Events	1121
The Fixed Days and Events Index organizes holidays according to the month or specific date(s) in which they are observed. For each month, those holidays within the month are given first, followed by holidays celebrated on specific date(s), then those observed at the same time each year, although not on a fixed date (e.g., the first Monday, the last week, etc.).
2. Chronological Index—Movable Days	1163
The Movable Days Index organizes events according to the dates of non-Gregorian calendars, including the Jewish calendar, Islamic calendar, and the Hindu and Buddhist lunar calendars, or movable Christian holidays that depend on the date of Easter.
3. Special Subject Index	1175
The Special Subject Index divides entries according to six categories:
Ancient/Pagan	1175
Indexes holidays rooted in ancient Greece, Rome, or in Europe before the spread of Christianity.
Calendar	1176
Indexes festivals that deal specifically with the calendar or that are held in celebration of the time of the year (solstices and equinoxes), the beginning and end of seasons, etc.
Folkloric	1178
Indexes festivals deeply rooted in folklore and tradition, as well as those celebrating specific folk tales.
Historic	1181
Indexes festivals commemorating specific events from history, such as battles, national independence, the birth dates of famous people, etc.
Promotional	1190
Includes festivals that promote everything from city, state, and national pride to agricultural products; from activities (film, quilting, rodeo) to social values (conservation, harmony among people).
Sporting	1195
Indexes events that are based on or revolve around sporting events. It does not include the many fairs and festivals in which games and contents form only a part, although these events can be found in the General Subject Index.
4. General Subject Index	1199
The General Subject Index includes names of main entries in the HFCWD, alternate and foreign names of events, and English translations (when available) of foreign names, by key word. It lists people, places, religions, institutions, and other items of significance (e.g. customs, activities) appearing within the text of the entries.

INDEX 1

Chronological Index Fixed Days and Events

The index below lists entries according to the month or specific date(s) in which they are observed. For each month, those holidays that fall within the month but with no single date are given first; followed by holidays celebrated on specific date(s); followed by those observed at the same time every year, although not on a specific date (e.g., the first Monday, the last week, etc.).

Chronological Index Movable Days

The index below lists entries that are observed according to the dates of non-Gregorian calendars, including the Jewish calendar and Hindu calendar, as well as movable Christian holidays that depend on the date of Easter. Hindu dates are approximate, since some Hindu sects begin reckoning new months at the new moon, while others begin reckoning from the full moon.

The listings for each month are followed by listings of other calendar dates, including those of the lunar Chinese and Buddhist calendars, and dates according to the Islamic and Zoroastrian calendars.

See also the Chronological Index—Fixed Days, the Special Subject Index, and the General Index.

Special Subject Index

This index organizes entries according to six specific subjects. Many of the entries in HFCWD fall into the following subject categories:

- Ancient/Pagan
- Calendar
- Folkloric
- Historic
- Promotional
- Sporting

Some events may be listed in more than one category. For instance, St. Patrick's Day is listed under the Historic Index, because it commemorates a historical person, and the Folkloric Index, for all the folk legends and traditions associated with St. Patrick and his feast day.

See also the Chronological Indexes (Fixed Days and Movable Days) and the General Index.

General Index

The General Index lists people, places, institutions, religious and ethnic groups, and names of festivals and holidays by keyword. It also lists other items of significance within the entries. For example, foods, animals, music, customs, and activities closely associated with an event are indexed, as are celebratory elements common to various cultures.
