INTRODUCTION

There is magic in maps. From the comfort of your armchair they will take you back in memory down byways long forgotten, or lead you on to unknown places on trails you have yet to tread. This atlas spreads the broad horizons of British Columbia conveniently before you in a single volume, inviting you to explore, and providing the basic knowledge of location and access that will help you translate imagined journeys into reality.

For the ever-increasing throngs of outdoor enthusiasts the atlas offers a ready means to orient themselves in the field, to find new places to pursue their interests, or to retrace past trips. Hunters particularly, and fishers and others using the outdoor environment will find it an almost indispensable aid to compliance with provincial regulations. The maps show the definitive boundaries of the wildlife management units, the bases of British Columbia's wildlife management program and regulations, revised and up-to-date to the time of publication.

But there is much more here than boundaries: topography, place names, roads, trails, elevations, streams, lakes, parks, sanctuaries and places of special interest are all catalogued and mapped. Whatever your interest in the outdoors, whether you hunt, fish, photograph, run rivers, hike, camp, study wildlife, or enjoy the outdoors in some other way, the atlas can be your guide to safe, more pleasant and adventurous outdoor experiences.

BRITISH COLUMBIA PARKS

It's little wonder B.C.'s 5 National and 334 Provincial Parks are admired by people from around the world. They comprise nearly 60,000 square kilometres — more than 5 percent of B.C.'s total land area, and vary from little known beaches to vast tracts of mountains, forests and waterways.

Caves and alpine meadows, mountain peaks, virgin rain forests, extinct volcanoes, paddling and portage routes, historic towns, Pacific islands and the nation's highest waterfall are park features which make up more than half of the "representative landscapes" of B.C.

The number preceeding the park name is shown in the atlas as 334

B.C. FOREST SERVICE RECREATION SITES

Forest recreation in B.C. involves dozens of activities, ranging from the passive enjoyment of scenery to the physically demanding challenges of mountaineering and kayaking. Approximately two million people annually take advantage of the more than 1000 recreation sites and thousands of kilometres of trails provided.

The sites are rustic and usually small without sophisticated amenities but do include basic facilities. They are located near lakes and rivers, blending in with the natural surroundings. The overall goal of the B.C. Forest Service recreation program is to provide opportunities for outdoor recreation by protecting the provincial forest recreation resource and managing its use. For more information regarding specific sites please contact the nearest forest district office listed below.

WILDLIFE VIEWING

British Columbia offers many opportunities to see wildlife in a natural setting. "Just looking" can be a fascinating experience, but remember these are wild animals. Respect their need for space and avoid crowding them. Use binoculars for that really close look. Use caution, especially when viewing or photographing bears or other potentially dangerous large animals, and do not try to feed them. Wild animals that become habituated to regular handouts may lose much of their ability to fend for themselves, and subsequently suffer in the lean months when their human benefactors are no longer around. They may also lose their fear of humans, and in their trust or their belligerence, endanger both themselves and people they encounter.

Some of the viewing areas shown on the Atlas maps and listed below have no viewing facilities, interpretive aids, or developed access. Developed areas with trails, blinds, viewing towers, informative signs, etc. are most likely to be found near population centres, along highways, or within wildlife reserves or sanctuaries, or parks.

AREAS	SPECIES/VIEWING DETAILS
1 ADAMS RIVER - Page 16A	Spawning sockeye salmon (largest run in North America) — major runs occur once every 4 years (1990, 1994...) in October, with minor runs in the intervening years - full interpretive facilities.
2 ARROW LAKES - Page 17C	Waterfowl viewing from Galena Bay in the north to Castlegar in the south.
3 ATNARKO RIVER - Page 23B	Bears, raptors.
4 BABINE RIVER - Page 53D	Spawning sockeye salmon in September - October.
5 BLACKFISH SOUND - Page 12C	Killer whale, Dahl porpoise, other marine mammals.
6 BOTANICAL BEACH - Page 3C	The deep, clear sandstone tidal pools of this area make it unique for the viewing of a variety of intertidal species. The best time being at low tide — check a tide table before you go. Also a good viewpoint for Pacific gray whale, especially during spring migration.
7 BOUNDARY BAY - Page 5C	Excellent opportunities to view waterfowl during migration periods, as well as owls, eagles, hawks and shorebirds.
8 BOUNDARY LAKE - Page 50C	Bear, moose, deer, furbearers, birds.
9 BOWRON RIVER - Page 39C	Spawning chinook salmon in September.
10 BOWRON SLOUGH - Page 39C	Access by canoe only — viewing of moose, deer, caribou, waterfowl, birds, beaver, muskrat, and river otter.

WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT AREAS

Areas designated under the Wildlife Act because of their special importance to wildlife. They are administered by the Ministry of Environment with wildlife conservation and wildlife-related uses always in the forefront, although multiple resource use may be permitted in some of them. The Wildlife Act provides for specific protection against damage to the wildlife habitat within them.
